After an absence of nearly three months, I arrived home on Dec. 6, and found all well. Since my last report I held meetings again at Adaline, Ill., nearly one week. From there went to Silver Creek, and held meetings one week, had a good meeting and the brethren are encouraged to still contend for the faith. I found in all the places I visited some of the faithful few, although but one was added to the body, there were many encouraged to go on. I find the truth is still gaining ground in some places, thanks to our Father in heaven.

While at Silver Creek I formed the acquaintance of a few of the brethren at that point, and two brethren from Oregon, Ill., I forget the name of one of them, but I think one was Middlekauff, the other Bro. Page. They have been a long time in the faith—also their wives.

I got acquainted with Bro. and Sister Knoullo, and Bro. and Sister Stiffa, and Sister Beard. I boarded the train at Leaf River on Monday morning, came to Chicago, and from there to Michigan City, thence home.

Arrived here Tuesday morning at two o'clock. Will go away again soon to labor in other parts.

So Much to Thank Him For.

So much, so much! What if the sky is clouded!
It screens the torrid blaze of summer's heat.
And if the way be rough and fog-enshrouded,
It makes the resting at the end more sweet:
'Tis still his sky although it be beclouded,
And 'tis his path, though rugged 'neath our feet.

So much, so much,—the gold enwired with thorns,
The pure, strong hearts, the words so true and tried,
Thank him for that, although I hear some scorners,
Yet even those he carries by my side;
I've learned to thank him even for my losses,
To thank him ever for the good denied.

So much to thank him for! But, ah, the learning
Of faith's sweet lesson was a weary one;
And struggles deep, and passion fires fiercely burning,
My soul hath known e'er this sweet hope was won,
But past all earthly hopes to Jesus turning,
I learn at last to say "Thy will be done!"

I thank thee, Father, for the love thou pourest
Upon my heart, no longer desolate;
Earth's loves were fleeting when my need was surest,
Thine is unfailing, so content I wait;
So much to thank thee for—the field, the forest,
The sunshine and the daisies blooming late.

And the pale tea leaves—even these seem holy;
I thank thee for them, from thy hand they came;
The sunset tints, the frost fancies lowly,
The cheerful gleaming of the fireside flame.
The stars that love me and the charm, that wholly Enthrall me at the sound of beauty's name.

The hope that never can die, for age diffusing
The coming glory's radiance here below;
The healing hand that never its clasp unloosing
Holds fast my own, and will not let me go;
No more unmet longings sadly musing,
For all thy gifts, O Lord, I thank thee so!

Not Afraid.

During the raging of a terrible thunder-storm, a mother stepped softly to the nursery door to learn whether her two little daughters, who had retired for the night, were alarmed or not, and then, as she stood listening, heard the following conversation:

"Oh, May, May," said the younger, "are you not afraid?"

"Oh, no, no, Jennie," said the older, "Mamma says God made the lightning and thunder, and that they can't hurt us without his permission."

"But they kill people sometimes!" anxiously said the little one.

"Yes," said May, "but only when God permits it; and you know mamma says he cares for us more than she and papa can do, and we must always trust him."

"I will, Jennie," was the sweet response; and the mother heard her two darlings kiss each other "good-night" as they quieted down into a peaceful sleep.

Letters to a Nonesuch, 1.

My Dear Son:

I now address to you a few words on the confession as practised in the days of the apostles. Jesus said: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God." This brings us back to the personal question, "What must I do to be saved?" This question was asked on two different occasions, and received different answers. The Jews, on the day of Pentecost, asked, "What shall we do?" You will remember that I left over Peter's answer for fuller consideration. The second occurrence of it is the case of the Philippian jailor—"What must I do to be saved?" In this case, the jailor was told to "believe," because he was an unbeliever. But Peter did not tell his questioners to believe, because they were already believers when they put the question. But Peter's answer proves that faith alone is not all that is necessary to salvation. His words are: "Then Peter said unto them Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Acts ii. 38. This is the only authoritative answer to believers seeking to know how they must be saved—the way of salvation taught by the apostles, of which we have every variety of proof. Baptism was the confession—the putting on Christ. And if this was so in those days, dare any man attempt to alter it now, either by teaching salvation without baptism, or by practising a baptism which has no connection with faith and repentance? Unless, indeed, we are to believe in the efficacy of an unmeaning ritual. If we are to be guided by stern facts, the only proper place for baptism is after faith, and before the remission of sins. How can any man have assurance of forgiveness of sin, but in being baptized upon an intelligent confession of his faith? I speak here with confidence, because I have before me the first gospel utterance of the apostles, by which every other utterance must be interpreted. I may be told that baptism is not always mentioned in their preaching. True; but it must always be understood. And when it is mentioned there is not the least evidence to show that it was designed to occupy any other place than that it occupies in the Pentecostal address of Peter.

As further proof of this position, I shall refer you to a few examples of apostolic preaching, and to some allusions in the epistles.

Philip "preached Christ at Samaria;" and it is recorded that "when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12. No one will attempt to prove from this, that those men and women were baptized under any other conditions than those laid down by Peter on Pentecost. Then in this same chapter we have another reference to baptism: "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Here it is evident that, in preaching Jesus, Philip made some reference to baptism, or how otherwise could the eunuch have proposed to be baptized? Then in the case of Saul of Tarsus, Ananias, addressing him said: "And now, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii. 16. I have already alluded to the case of the jailor, in which Paul gave a different answer from that of Peter on Pentecost, as the jailor was an ignorant unbeliever. After the words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," it is immediately added that "they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." The result was that "he and his were straightway baptized;" and he "rejoiced, believing in God, with all his house." Indeed, you will find this to be the uniform teaching and practice in all cases where we have conversions recorded in the Acts of the apostles. They heard, they believed, they were baptized. It is true we have instances where there is no mention of baptism; but it would be very illogical to argue that therefore they were not baptized; and equally wrong to conclude that it occupied any other place, or was observed for any other purpose, than the apostles assigned to it in the instances where they clearly refer to it.

If we turn to the epistles, we find such statements as that in Rom. vi. 1: "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized unto his death?" There are two things affirmed of those disciples at Rome—first, they were baptized into Jesus Christ. This is the true meaning and force of baptism. For a man to be baptized into Jesus Christ, he must believe Jesus to be the Christ. And there is no way of entering into Christ than being "baptized into him." And thus the believer is said to believe into Christ, as it is literally expressed in the Greek of Acts xxvi. 18.

But Paul also affirms that the disciples were baptized into the death of Christ; not that they were baptized only into his death, but that, being so baptized had a bearing upon the question that was before his mind—namely, that the "gospel was the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;" not only the power of God to remove the guilt, but also to overcome the power of sin. A man, then, who is baptized into the death of Jesus Christ not only has his sins forgiven, but is furnished with a motive to subdue them. Therefore, says the apostle, "we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so we should walk in newness of life." By reading down to the 12th verse, you will see that the apostle employs arguments that have force only with those who had faith and knew when they were baptized. To keep faith out of view as an antecedent to baptism here would be to give to baptism a power altogether inconsistent with the principle from which the apostle started—"The just shall live by faith." On the other hand, if baptism be reduced to a mere ceremony, we are placed in this difficulty, that we have no such baptism spoken of in the Scriptures.

Take one or two other references to it in the epistles. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is no other male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 24-29. That is, in Christ, ye are all children of God by faith—a position attained by being baptized into Christ, and so on. Again, in Col. ii. 9-13 the same truth is taught. "Ye are complete in him, who is the head of all principality and power; in whom, also, ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses." And the intimate connection between faith, baptism, and the blood of Jesus is shown in Heb. x. 18-22: "Now, where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Add to this what Peter teaches: "The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter iii. 21. He is speaking of the few that were saved in the ark by water, to which he compares the baptism of believers in these words.

From all these references to baptism, it it clear that it was a baptism of faith; indeed, the apostles' language could not be applied to a baptism without faith on the part of the baptized person without a direct violation of the first principle of justification by faith. And there are not two baptisms—one of faith and the other faithless. There is "one baptism," even as there is "one faith," etc.

Jesus himself stamped baptism with the highest importance when he said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and what I have set before you from the sayings and doings of those to whom these words were spoken, is but an illustration of the manner in which they carried his directions into practice.

Before concluding this letter, I wish you to notice the result of Peter's preaching on Pentecost. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." Many now-a-days seem to receive all Peter's words, but stumble at being baptized, and yet it was one of his words. Whether there were any such among Peter's hearers, I do not know, but the path of safety lies in following the example of those who "saved themselves from that untoward generation." In the days of Jesus' ministry, among the chief rulers also, many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." John xii. 42, 43.

But one word of exhortation. You will observe in some of these quotations from the epistles the terms "in Christ" and "into Christ." These certainly imply another state—namely, out of Christ. Now, it becomes an all-important question, Who are in Christ, and who are out of Christ? All men are first in Adam, and we all know how—by being "born of the flesh." The Jews, besides being in Adam, were in Moses. They claimed to be also in Abraham, but could not make good their claim, though descended from him. Now, we know how they came to be in Moses—"they were all baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea." To be "baptized into Christ" and to be "in Christ" imply something as real as the baptism of the nation of Israel into their leader Moses. We must be in Christ, as in a house or an ark. Take, as a figure, the temple, which was the house of God. In it there were the Holy Place, the Most Holy Place, the Court of the Gentiles, etc. But in Jesus Christ there is but one Holy Place, and all who enter into him are priests unto God; and it is only in Jesus, as the "Holy Place," that men can offer acceptable worship to God. Do not imagine that you can pray to God and be heard in an outer court of his temple. There is no Court of the Gentiles where you can worship afar off. You must "draw near," enter his door by faith, cast off your filthy garments—the sins of the flesh—wash in the laver of baptism, be clothed with the Robe of Righteousness, and sprinkled with the blood of the Lamb, present your offering upon the altar (Jesus himself), through the great "High Priest over the house of God." Do not, my son, deceive yourself; do not stand aloof from Jesus as set forth in his own gospel. There is no safety for you but in fleeing to Jesus as the city of Refuge, and entering into him in his own appointed way, so as to be "found in him" when he comes to give to every man according to his works. Even so come, Lord Jesus, is the prayer of your affectionate father.—Alex. D. Black, in Messenger of the Gospel.

RECENT INDIAN MASSACRE.

A dispatch from Chihuahua, Mexico, dated Dec. 7, and referring to a massacre previously very differently reported, says: "The recent massacre in Casa Grandes by the Indians proves to have been a horrible affair. A band of Apaches numbering 500 crossed the border, and, descending upon the little town, began an indiscriminate massacre. Fully seventy-five persons fell victims, and several girls and women were carried off by the savages. A large quantity of stock and other property were stolen. The houses of the unfortunate Mexicans were burned, and the dead bodies stripped of their clothing and jewelry. The murdered persons were among the wealthiest classes. Troops have been dispatched to the scene, the Indians have a long start, and their capture is not expected."

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

AWAKE! AWAKE!

Bride of the Lamb, awake! awake!
Why sleep for sorrow now?
The hope of glory, Christ, is thine;
A child of glory thou.

Thy spirit, through the lonely night,
From earthly joy apart,
Hath sigh'd for One that's far away,—
The Bridegroom of thy heart.

But see, the night is waning fast,
The breaking morn is near;
And Jesus comes, with voice of love,
Thy drooping heart to cheer.

He comes—for oh! his yearning heart
No more can bear delay—
To scenes of full unmingled joy,
To call his bride away.

This earth, the scene of all his woe,
A homeless cell to thee,
Full soon upon his heavenly throne
Its rightful king shall see.

Then, too, shalt reign—he will not wear
His crown of joy alone!
And earth his regal bride shall see
Beside him on the throne.

Then weep no more—'tis all thine own—
His crown, his joy divine;
And sweeter far than all beside,
He, he himself, is thine.

THE ANTICHRIST.

The term Antichrist occurs only in the first and second letters of the Apostle John. Various applications of this word have obtained among students of the Bible. It is important that the right use of it should be ascertained and practised. As a contribution towards this desirable end, I beg to offer a few remarks to the readers of the Rainbow, in the hope that some attention may be given to the subject, and a correct judgment arrived at. A glance at the more prominent senses in which it is used will help us to form a judgment in accordance with the Scripture teaching regarding it.

The most generally received application of Antichrist is that by which it is used to designate that form of professed Christianity which acknowledges the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome. Bishop Newton, in his "Dissertations on the Prophecies," says: "The tyrannical power thus described by Daniel and St. Paul, and afterwards by St. John, is both by ancients and moderns generally denominated Antichrist; and the name is proper and expressive enough, as it may signify both 'the enemy of Christ,' and 'the vicar of Christ.'" He also says: "Such a doctrine as this must necessarily give great offence to the bigots and devotees of the Church of Rome; and no wonder, therefore, that in the last Lateran Council, the Pope gave strait commandment to all preachers that no man should presume once to speak of the coming of Antichrist. The King of France also, 'with the advice of his council, interdicted that any one should call the Pope Antichrist.'"

Mr. E. B. Elliot, in his "Horæ Apocalyptiæ," speaking of Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, and Hippolitus, says: "They judged, with one consent, that Daniel's fourth wild beast, symbolized the Roman Empire; as also that the little horn of this wild beast, or its equivalent, the last head of the Apocalyptic beast, symbolized one and the same Anti-Christian power, as St. Paul's Man of Sin, and St. John's Antichrist."

With most Protestant writers in modern times, Antichrist is the most usual designation for the Papal system. This seems to have arisen from the circumstances that it is a convenient term, consisting of a single word, and is fully expressive of what they conceive to be the most radical feature of popery.

Another class of writers apply this term more especially to what they term "the Personal or Infidel Antichrist," to be manifested about seven years before the second advent of Christ. The Rev. Charles Maitland, in his "Apostolic School of Prophetic Interpretation" (1849), advocates this view at considerable length. Burgh in 1832, Blakersleath and Birks in 1839, Derby in 1842, and Tregelles in 1846, have also maintained it in their published works. It seems also to have been held by some of the early fathers; quotations being given from Irenæus in the second, and Hippolitus and Origen in the third century, apparently to the same effect. Mr. M. Baxter mentions upwards of fifty publications of modern times, in which this view is advocated: and I shall most conveniently present it here, by a quotation from his work, entitled "Louis Napoleon the Destined Monarch of the World, and Personal Antichrist," etc., published in 1863. Mr. Baxter says:—

"A leading event, in connection with our Savior's return, is the manifestation of Antichrist, or the Man of Sin, as foretold in 2. Thess. ii. 3 [quoted], also in 1 John ii. 18, 22 [quoted]. From these and other passages, it has long been concluded, that although many Antichrists have arisen; such as the Pope and Mahomet, yet there is a particular and individual Antichrist to arise, just before Christ's advent, who is generally called the Personal or Infidel Antichrist, and who is to be worshipped as God in the temple at Jerusalem, and is utterly to deny the existence of Jehovah and of Christ. His exploits are fully described in Dan. xi. and Rev. xvii., and also in the literal-day fulfilment of Dan. vii., viii., xii., and Rev. ix., xi., xiii., although the year-day fulfilment of these chapters relates to Popery and Mohammedanism."

Mr. Baxter further enlarges upon the identity of Antichrist, with the various powers or persons mentioned in the passages named, thus:—

"In proof of the fact that the last great Antichrist is identical with the eighth head of the beast, it is only necessary to compare the various passages in which he is described. The following are some of the different names given to him:—

"1 John ii. 18, 22: The Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son.

"2 Thess. ii. 3: The man of sin; or, son of perdition.

"Dan. vii.: A little horn (in relation to the Gentiles.)

"Dan. viii.: A little horn, or king of fierce countenance.

"Dan. ix. 26: The Prince that shall come.

"Dan. xi. 25: A vile person, or king who shall do according to his own will (the wilful king).

"Rev. xiii., xvii., etc.: The beast, or eighth head of the beast, or beast whose deadly wound was healed."

After quoting these passages in full, in parallel columns, Mr. Baxter says: "It is evident from the above passages that the Antichrist will be an avowed and hardened infidel, totally rejecting the Christian religion, and not, like the Pope, professedly upholding it."

It will be seen that this view, equally with the other which regards the Papal system as the Antichrist, designates the personal ruler of the future by the same term—Antichrist. As it does not fall within the scope of this paper to discuss the merits of the two schemes referred to, I shall confine myself to the question as to the true application and use of the term Antichrist. This method will leave the question precisely where it stands at present, with this advantage, however, that it will be freed from the complication entailed upon it from the term Antichrist being supposed to belong to it.

It is very evident, from the quotation from Mr. Baxter, that it is Antichrist's denial of the Father and the Son that forms the principal point of identity between the Antichrist and the future personal ruler. He says, Antichrist "is utterly to deny the existence of Jehovah and of Christ." This seems to me to be a most unwarranted use of the language of John, which is simply, "He is (the) Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." It never seemed to cross the mind of Mr. Baxter that there are other ways of denying persons besides "denying their existence." Peter denied Christ; but we never dream that he, therefore, denied the "existence" of his Master. Besides, we have in John's allusion to Antichrist, what amounts to a definition of the denial of the Father and Son, as well as a definition of the term Antichrist itself.

In the First Epistle (ii. 18–22), the Apostle says: "Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that (the) Antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists, whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. . . . Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ. He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father."

Again, in chap. iv. 1, he says: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out in the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: and this is that spirit of Antichrist whereof you have heard, that it should come, and even now already is it in the world."

And once more in Second Epistle, vers. 7–9: "Many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and (the) Antichrist. Look to yourselves that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath both the Father and the Son."

These three quotations contain all that is said about Antichrist by the Apostle John; and the first remark that occurs to me is the entire absence of any intimation of his being a ruling power or person; and also of any future destruction of him by the coming of the Lord. Another observation is that the Antichrist had been foretold in the hearing of those to whom the apostle wrote his first letter, and that this prediction had been fulfilled. "Ye have heard that the Antichrist should come, even now there are many antichrists, whereby we know that it is the last time." The word rendered "shall come," in the common version in ver. 18, is the same as that rendered "shall come" in chap. iv. 3, and does not, therefore, point to a time subsequent to the date of the Epistle.

The definitions given of Antichrist by the Apostle are threefold in expression, but may in substance be considered as one.

First: "He is Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." Second: "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of Antichrist." Third: "Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ?"

I have already referred to the interpretation which makes denial of the Father and Son to be denial of their existence, as a proposition that cannot, with reason, be maintained. I would now notice the Apostle's explanation of this denial, so far as it relates to the Father. He says, "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same has not the Father;" which he repeats in the Second Epistle thus: "Whosoever.... abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." From this, it is evident that denial of the Father, by those errorists, was not direct but implied. Their denial of the Son was direct, and the effect of this was a virtual, though not an express, denial of the Father. If Christ was denied in the relationship of Son, it must have been equivalent to a denial of God in the relationship of Father. But in neither case was it necessarily a denial of the existence of either the Father or the Son.

What then did denial of Christ consist in? "That Jesus Christ had come in the flesh." This is twice given by the Apostle as the distinctive feature of Antichrist; and it is important to ascertain the exact sense in which the language is used. To my mind, the most obvious sense seems to be the true one; namely, that Jesus Christ possessed a really human constitution, and was not a mere phantom which, in some mysterious way, assumed the human form. This natural sense of the words is strengthened by the manner in which the apostle introduces his First Epistle: "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life.... That which we have seen and hear declare we unto you." The intervening verse, which forms a parenthesis, shows plainly that it is Jesus Christ he is speaking of: "For the life was manifested and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us."

Now it is a historical fact that, at the time when John wrote his Epistles, the reality of our Lord's humanity was denied by many who professed his name. These are known in history as Gnostics, from gnosis, signifying knowledge or science, to which they made great pretensions. One of their leading principles, derived from the Oriental philosophy, was, that matter was essentially evil. Dr. Edward Burton, late Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford says:—

"We find the Gnostic theology full of ideas and terms which must have been taken from the Gospel; and Jesus Christ, under some form or other of Æon, emanation, or incorporeal phantom, enters into all their systems, and is the means of communicating to them that knowledge which raised them above all other mortals, and entitled them to their peculiar name."

Again, he says,—"Many Gnostics adopted the Oriental notion of two independent co-eternal principles, the one the author of good, and the other of evil." And again:—"We have a key to many parts of their system, when we know that they held matter to be intrinsically evil, of which, consequently, God could not be the author." Again:—The Gnostics "either denied that Christ had a real body at all, and held that he was an unsubstantial phantom, or, granting that there was a man called Jesus, the son of human parents, they believed that one of the æons, called Christ, quitted the pleroma, and descended upon Jesus at his baptism."[1]

These quotations may suffice to show us that in the apostle's time there existed a class of persons professing the name of Christ, who corresponded to his definition of Antichrist. I can see no reason for seeking to apply the apostle's language to any other person or power in subsequent times, such as is evidently intended by Paul's "man of sin," etc.

The other form of definition given by the apostle, 1 John ii. 22—"Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ?" although not expressly predicated of the Antichrist by name, but of some one under the designation "liar," is evidently intended for the same class. It occurs in the middle of the paragraph where the Antichrist is spoken of, and no good reason can be given for applying the term "liar" to any other. Besides, the definition itself is the natural outcome of the more express denial that "Jesus Christ had come in the flesh." The grand central truth of Christianity, that "Jesus Christ," was based on the fact that Jesus of Nazareth was a descendant of David, King of Israel. The Christ of the prophets was a personage who should occupy David's throne, and be at once David's son and David's Lord. Denial of the fact that Jesus had come in the flesh was equivalent to a denial that he was the Christ; for, according to the prophets, there could be no Christ except in the person of the "child born and the son given." The doctrine of those of whom the apostle writes was, therefore, in a peculiar respect, opposed to what constituted the very essence of Christian truth. We are informed that when "Philip went down to Samaria, he preached (the) Christ to them." This was a short but comprehensive summary of Gospel preaching; and it is easy to see that the Gnostic doctrine would be ANTI, or opposed to (the) Christ thus preached. It seems to me that this affords an adequate definition of the term "Antichrist," as used by the apostle in the passages quoted.

There is a passage in Paul's first letter to Timothy which seems to me to refer to the same class of errorists, and which furnishes a corroboration of John's statements. "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called; which some professing have erred concerning the faith"—(1 Tim. vi. 20, 21). The word here rendered "science" is gnosis, and that rendered "oppositions" is antitheseis. This seems to point very clearly to the Gnostic pretensions to superior knowledge, and also to the anti or opposing influence which they exercised upon the central fact of the Christian faith. This is evident from the apostle's closing words—"which some professing, have erred from the faith." This is in exact accordance with the apostle John's statements concerning the Antichrist, which relate exclusively to "erring from the faith," and have no reference to the usurpation of authority, as in the case of "the man of sin" in the writings of Paul.

There can be little doubt that John wrote his Gospel in view of the same class of persons as those termed Antichrist in his letters. He declares the purpose he had in view in writing his Gospel, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." In the beginning of his treatise he intimates that, "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." And he relates a circumstance not mentioned by the other evangelists, which afforded a clear demonstration that, not only in the days of his flesh, but also after his resurrection, he possessed a substantial bodily organization. I refer to the scene with Thomas the apostle, who was not satisfied with the testimony of his fellow apostles to the fact of our Lord's resurrection. Thomas declared, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." Eight days after this, at the next interview between our Lord and his apostles, Thomas being present, Jesus said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless but believing." Again, John is the only evangelist who mentions that, "one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water." And it is worthy of note that he makes special mention of his reason for recording this fact—"And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe." The believing produced by the fact recorded, must have primarily consisted in the belief of the reality of the death of Jesus, for the water showed that the pericardium, or sac in which the heart is enclosed, in which a clear fluid like water is contained, had been pierced, and that consequently the spear had reached the substance of the heart itself. But the reality of the person of Jesus was also demonstrated, and as this was the fact especially called in question at the time the Gospel was written, it must have been for the correction of this fatal error that the fact was so particularly recorded.

I may mention that the Apostle John seems to make allusion to the fact just referred to, in his first Epistle (v. 6), but I shall not dwell on it further than to say, that it strengthens the probability that John wrote his Gospel chiefly to maintain the reality of the person of our Lord against the Gnostics.

This denial by Antichrist that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh was, as has been stated, a most effectual means of subverting the grand central doctrine of the Gospel—namely: that "Jesus is the Christ." And while this central element of the one faith was subverted by other means, this doctrine of the Gnostics must have largely contributed to that general apostasy which soon spread over the professing church. The various creeds of Christendom, even the earliest, known as the Apostle's Creed (but which all agree is not quite so ancient), agree in ignoring that definite form of this central truth, as stated by John, both in his Gospel and Epistles. The formula of the apostle is reduced from a proposition—containing subject and predicate—to a mere name and surname. "I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord." Here the Christship, or that official dignity which belongs to our Lord, in virtue of the covenant made with David, and which forms so prominent a portion of the prophetic word, is entirely lost sight of. And this even, although the reality of his person is distinctly maintained, in the clauses declaring his birth, sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, and coming again. And we know how common is the belief throughout Christendom, that Jesus was a real person, but how few apprehend the true force and meaning of the truth that Jesus of Nazareth, who suffered and died as a sacrifice for the sins of the world, is that Anointed King whom God has destined to be, not only the Ruler of his people Israel, but the Monarch of the whole earth.

From what has been advanced I submit that a mistake has been made in applying the term Antichrist to the man of sin, to "the beast," or to the wilful king, or to Gog, as Mr. Baxter and many others have done. As I have said, the question of a personal antagonist to the Messiah in the future, or the development of an apostasy in the papal hierarchy, is left exactly where it was. Mr. Baxter seems to hold that both of these are to be understood, and I do not now give any opinion on that matter. But it must tend to simplify the question, if one of the elements, hitherto so deeply entering into it, be withdrawn. Perhaps I am too sanguine in expecting such a result; but I shall be glad to consider any suggestions on the subject.—J. Cameron, in the Rainbow.

What is Truth?—John xviii. 38.

The chapter of which the above is a part gives a graphic account of Christ's trial before Pilate, the Roman Governor. The question, disconnected from what called it forth, would be simply, to state the value of truth on all questions to which we may stand related. It is, in short, the antithesis, or in other words, it stands opposed to a lie, falsehood, deception, etc. The particular question of Pilate to Christ arose from what is found in the context, particularly in verses 33–37. "Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation, and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me; what hast thou done?"

Jesus answered, "My kingdom is not of this world * (age), if my kingdom was of this world my servants would fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence (not from the present time). Pilate therefore said unto him, art thou a King then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a King. (It is as thou sayest). To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Then in the succeeding verse is the text, What is truth?

Christ's claim—as the born King of the Jews—to the throne of his father David, as announced by the angel Gabriel to Mary, furnishes the key to the whole subject in relation to the object and motives of the Jews for crucifying Christ. Herod could have had no object or motive for the slaying of those children from two years old and under, except to prevent Christ from occupying David's throne and kingdom.

Deep as the depravity of mankind is since the fall of our federal head, we cannot for a moment indulge the thought that Herod was so much of a fiend as to issue such a cruel edict without some ulterior object. This object is too transparent to be ignored in the light of Scripture testimony; his anxious inquiry of the wise men, when and where Christ, which is significant of the anointed King of Israel, one who, as he feared, would depose or supersede him in the administration of the kingdom of Israel, should be born.

Query now, Would Herod have been so uneasy and restless on the supposition, that, according to the popular exegesis or interpretation that the kingdom was in the skies, in the heart, a spiritual in opposition to a temporal kingdom, as is claimed by nearly all the religious sects of Christendom.

But this assumption is entirely without foundation or proof to sustain it. The kingdom of Israel restored was clearly taught by the prophets, Christ, and apostles. Not a shadow of evidence can be adduced to show that any other kingdom was expected, not even by implication. All, even Christ's disciples, and the early Christians, were premature as to the time of its being set up. To the inquiry, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? Not an intimation is given that they were in error in regard to the nature, but the time. It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power.

A similar correction was made by Paul to the Thessalonian brethren. The same error is extant at the present time, but what is still worse in the current theology is the fact that the kingdom, which is set forth by all the Bible writers as the one—when it shall be set up—which will have all the constituents which enter into every other kingdom—territory, a king, subjects, laws, a body of rulers, a capital city, etc.

From the text and context the following doctrine is fully established, viz.: that Christ is King dejure, or by right, of the kingdom of Israel, and not King defacto, at the present time, but is to be at a future time. The prayer enjoined to be used in the invocation, Thy kingdom come, which presupposes that it has not yet come.

The kingdom of the God of heaven, of Israel, are only different appellations of one and the same kingdom. This is the great central idea, all the Scriptures point to it as the great fundamental truth, as with the index hand. The gospel (the belief of and obedience to which will save men) is called the gospel of the kingdom, of salvation, i. e. salvation by and through the kingdom arrangement, and that only. If this is so it follows legitimately, as effect follows cause, that it is not gospel to preach any other kingdom, located in the heart, in the skies, etc.

We would in all kindness ask our friends if this is not virtually preaching another gospel? and is it too much presumptuous to ask further; is there not danger of incurring the curse that is denounced against angels as well as men, for this departure from the gospel—from the Truth?

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been brought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read, and like The Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever may be interesting to the world at large, the deeds and misdeeds, the sayings, the philosophy, the notable folly, in the wide sense, the inspiring conscience—all the sense of the busiest mortal at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs the sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whales as well as about the small fish, in the face of discredit as plainly and forcibly as when supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purposes to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the Sun is indifferent to his welfare or his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone, the battles among newspapers, the fights that have resulted in the retirement of unfaithful servants, in the defeat of unfaithful officials, in the overwhelming popular rebuke of dishonest conventions and faithless leaders, in the defeat of corrupt schemes and combinations against good government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun will stand and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the Sun is the best Republican paper ever published. Because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has always whipped any of the leaders out of their party, and is now rending asunder the other half with undiminished vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because of the current interest it contains, and the readers who consider worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the Sun discovers one of its many excellences appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wicked men of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Typical Teaching of the Old Covenant Scriptures.

One of the most important factors in the katechumenic teaching of the truth as it is in Christ, has been little heeded in the history of the church since the apostasy began, and is sadly neglected in these last days by all modern orthodoxy. Although our attention is constantly called to the fact by admonitions in the New Covenant Scriptures, that the truths of the Old are brought before us in types and shadows, and that they were given us for our admonition, and as object-teaching from the hand of the only wise Master and Teacher, especially adapted to give the katechumen clear and correct concepts of spiritual truth, especially adapted to the newly regenerated, the babes who stand in need of milk rather than strong food—although all this and much more that might be said in this regard is true, nevertheless except in the few instances where the types are so marked as to be apparent to the casual observer, we see them utterly unheeded and disregarded by the modern teacher and preacher, or grossly perverted by reason of mistranslation and ignorance.

I purpose therefore, to call attention in this article to the importance of this neglect, and to try to awaken some from their apostasy lethargy, and I will proceed to point out a few of the types and show their relation to the truth as it is in Christ, and how they are in the light of this relation diametrically opposed to the teaching of modern orthodoxy, so-called.

1. Adam is a type of the natural or mortal man, as the first or progenitor of his mortal race, all of whom alike have an offer made or later, of a conditional immortality; a necessary condition of the offer being that each individual receiving the offer shall intelligently choose between life and death, and as we are positively told by Solomon in the Book of Wisdom (x. 1, 2,) that he, Adam, made this choice and was saved and granted immortality, and how this was brought about, and that it was "by being wise unto salvation," the special teaching of the type is the fundamental condition of an immortal life.

2. Cain is a type of a mortal man, who, having the power and opportunity of choice, chose to go his own way to destruction, instead of God's way to life, his sacrifice even being after a way pleasing to himself instead of pleasing and acceptable to God, while Abel becomes a type of an acceptable suppliant, or one who offers an acceptable offering or sacrifice unto God in faith. This acceptability and the significance of it being the special teaching of the type as brought out clearly and unequivocally in Heb. i.

3. Seth is a type of a "son of man," who receives the new typical name of "a son of God," a son of God in promise, or a covenant son of God; the type pointing specially to this sonship and the ultimate conformity in Christ, the first actual Son of God, of all sons in promise to the true image of the invisible God, as stated and prophesied in Gen. i, 26. "Let us make man according to our image and according to a process of conformity to us."

4. Enoch is a type of the realization of this conformity so far as the necessary change from the physical nature and surroundings to the spiritual is concerned, by a translation from the one state to the other without undergoing the death penalty of sin, the special teaching of the type being how God could and would have given Adam and his posterity immortality had their probationary mortal state or life been acceptable to him; and also teaching what Paul so much more clearly and particularly brings out in 1 Cor. xv. 44, "If there be a natural body, there is also a spiritual body."

5. Noah is a type of salvation personal or individual as well as of the way of salvation in all the various details of the typical picture, to two or three of the more prominent features of which I will call your attention. Noah as an eighth person typically teaches the relation of the law of harmony to the laws and conditions of salvation. We are to remember that God's universe of this creation is a cosmos (cosmos) or harmonic arrangement of things, according to certain laws, of which time and system are harmonic factors, and number one of the essential exponents. The numerical typical teaching appears in very many ways and places in the Scriptures, and this particular number eight and its typical significance in the eighth day of circumcision, the eighth day of the feast of tabernacles or the so called "wave-offering" of first fruits, in the pentecostal eighth day, the grand major octave harmonic which finds its typical fulfillment in the giving of the pentacostal Holy Spirit after Christ's resurrection and glorification.

Again in the eighth day of the feast of tabernacles, or rather its day of whole burnt offerings, and finally in the eighth day of Christ's resurrection from the dead and his appearance to his disciples at intervals of eight days therefrom.

Then there is the type of baptism in water in its relation to salvation and the type of the sealing process at the hand of God, as taught by the sealing up of the door of the ark preparatory to the pouring out of the flood of judgment upon the unsealed or the unrighteous. The completeness, moreover, of the fact that all the organic creation in which was the breath of natural or physical life, was included in it, the saving of the seed, as it were, which is to revivify and rehabilitate the desolated earth, a lesson whose teaching is amplified by Paul in Rom. viii. 20, 21, where he says, "For the creation (the organic intelligent creation in all its degrees of intelligence) hath been subjected to vanity, not willingly, but on account of the one who hath subjected the same in hope; because even the creation itself will have been set free from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God."

The mediatorial agency of this eighth person Noah, pointing as it does to the great Mediator Christ, in the work of salvation, however, is the greatest and most important of the typical lessons in this picture.

But leaving the picture of Noah and salvation, let us glance for a moment at the picture of Abraham as the typical "Father of the Faithful," the patriarchal head of a household, a household of faith, a type of the great spiritual household of faith in the new kosmos yet to come. Abraham as a son of God, being a type of Christ the Son of God, and head of this new household spiritual. Sarah as the wife of Abraham, being the type of the Church as the Bride of Christ, the present age or period being the engagement or "covenant" period of "the bride elect." The marriage and married life are still to come, and unfulfilled in the type.

Hagar in the type representing the imperfection and infidelity of the Mosaic or Levitical law as a means of spiritual grace, when viewed in its relation to the great law of love spiritual, as a unifying and harmonizing first principle. Like Abraham as the head of his household natural, Christ as the head of his household spiritual, must cast out the bond-maid of the law, when the claims of the hand-maid of love are asserted, and the wisdom and utility of monogamy natural thus teaching in the type that the unity of the new household spiritual can be perfected only through a law of love, which when asserted becomes the new unifying bond of perfection.

But leaving the type of the household of faith, let us glance at the kingdom of faith, or the royalty of the sons of God, and let the reader bear in mind that the word king and the word royalty are both relative terms, that God is King of kings and Lord of lords, and has a royalty that is omnipotent and sovereign over all; and then bear in mind that man by God's decree and purpose is now in promise, and is to be in reality Lord of this creation, but Lord under God however, and subject to his blessed will and guidance. The whole teaching of Scripture moreover, is that this blessed consummation is to be reached and realized in a Messianic man. We would therefore expect as a fact to be constantly kept before the reader in the types, and we find this teaching clearly set forth in the typical life and career of Joseph.

In Jacob we have the type in Christ the fulfilment.

If in this hasty review and glance at some of the typical picture-teaching of the Old Covenant Scriptures, I shall have awakened a spirit of inquiry in the minds of other Christian truth-seekers my object in this communication will have been accomplished.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. II.

Prelude.—The last days and fall of Jerusalem. Zech. xiv. 1, 2.—The millennial city—Under what circumstances and when taken.—Physical changes.—What reign follows.—Families, and nations.—Egypt.—Its history continued.—Hebrew period.—From the exodus to the close of the Hebrew commonwealth: to its subjugation by Nebuchadnezzar.

Prelude.—Let us look, for a few moments, into the future and continue our sketch of Jerusalem, whose past history has been so wonderful. Two terrible hours for Jerusalem coming: two sieges and one overthrow. 1. "And there shall be gathered together against her (the present Jerusalem) all the nations of the earth." Zech. xii. 3. This is the first siege of the millennial Jerusalem, followed by Jehovah's triumph, the conversion and union of Judah and Israel by the sight of Jesus (Jesus of Nazareth), which takes place after the rapture of saints. Christ's personal reign of subjugation: his official reign. 1 Cor. xv. 25; Rev. xix. 11–21. The present Jerusalem, being taken in the first siege, continues till near the evening of the reign of subjugation, when Satan, released from his prison, gathers the nations around the beloved city (millennial city) and take it; but is immediately overwhelmed by the Messiah, who deals with them by earthquake and a terrible tempest. A new city (New Jerusalem) takes the place of the overthrown millennial city. (Read Eze. xxxvii. and xxxviii; Rev. 8, 9; and Zech. xiv.) The new heavens and the new earth follow that overthrow, and the joint reign of the Father and Son commences. Rev. xxi. and xxii. During Christ's official reign the earth is full of subjugated nations; during the joint reign there are families of one nation. In the first siege Judah fights outside of Jerusalem; in the second siege Judah fights in Jerusalem.

Those who examine critically the last three chapters of Zechariah, will find two cycles of events; 1. The first cycle (Zech. xii., xiii.) contains an invasion, siege, battle, a manifestation of Messiah to Judah and Israel; their conversion, the conquest of the nations. 2. The second cycle of events (Zech. xiv.) a. The gathering of all nations against Jerusalem (the millennial or beloved city); b. Its siege and overthrow; c. The revelation of Messiah with his bride (all holy ones); d. A terrible conflict with tempest and earthquake; e. The new order of things is introduced. In the first cycle Jerusalem is not taken, and Judah fights outside of the city; in the second cycle Jerusalem is taken, and Judah fights in Jerusalem. We can find nothing in Zech. xiv., that, when correctly translated, and properly interpreted, will conflict with these views. We have taken a step in advance, since these are elements of the Hebrew phase of the Eastern Question.

Egyptian history continued, during its Hebrew period; from the exodus to the close of the Hebrew commonwealth and its (Egypt's) overthrow by Nebuchadnezzar.—This period covers the times of Joshua and the historic parts of the Old Testament, and extends to the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 604. It includes the period of the greater prophets, and, therefore, contains a divine record of what was purposed relative to that land, its people, and its rulers.

His absolute proprietorship is clearly stated, and his purposes made known to the prophets. His designs as made known to those holy seers will now claim our attention. Egypt, next to the land of promise, seems to be the object of God's special care. This will appear from his sayings to the prophets.

The Hebrew bondage cast a dark mantle over Egypt's prosperity. The overthrow of Pharaoh Amenophis II., in the Red sea, was a most signal proof that Jehovah had entered into the era of Egypt's national judgment. Amenophis II. was a native monarch of the race of Ham. The Pharaoh of Joseph was a shepherd king of the xvth. dynasty, and, consequently, of the race of Shem. These were but few native kings after Amenophis II. No country has ever had so great a variety of masters. Its great wealth, its ancient learning, and its monumental wonders attracted the cupidity of all nations: hence its numerous invasions by other empires. But it is our province to follow the foot-prints of Jehovah in this ancient land of Ham, and to open up God's purposes towards it at valley, as revealed to his prophets. Our space, and time limit us to a simple outline. What, concerning Egypt, did Jehovah reveal to his servants, the prophets? What has he accomplished? What are his future purposes relative to Egypt, as made known in his divine communications to the prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Joel, Micah and Zechariah? God's revelations to these prophets belong to the Hebrew period of Egyptian history; their accomplishments are scattered through all the periods then future, as well as through the one then transpiring.

1. Isaiah stands at the head of the list of Jehovah's prophetic servants. Let us examine the leading features of his Egyptian predictions. His prophecies were uttered in "the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, (and) Hezekiah, kings of Judah." B. C. 760 to B. C. 698. The principal kings of Egypt, against which he utters his predictions, are Pharaoh, Necho, and Pharaoh-Hophra. Jehovah's workings in Egypt are also clearly described in Isa. vii. 18. Jehovah calls upon Egypt to aid him in the punishment of his rebellious family. The prophet (Isa. xix.) sees the land of Egypt under the Messiah's reign of subjugation, when Judah and Israel shall dwell at peace (as one nation) in their own land. To that period we assign our remarks on this most graphic delineation of the future. Isa. xix. presents a gloomy picture of Egypt, passing through a severe civil war, under twelve tyrants, succeeded by Psammitticus who reigned for 54 years. From verses 18 to 25 are some remarkable predictions, especially verses 19, 20, 23, 24, and 25; but as they do not belong to the period of Egyptian history now under review, we shall omit their present consideration.

A national sin of his people is reproved in Isa. xxx. They looked to Egypt for help rather than to God; this was an insult to Jehovah. It presents a picture of Egypt's national standing in this period. The overthrow of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar is predicted in Jer. xliii. 10–13. Egypt was not, perhaps, fully subjugated by Nebuchadnezzar. Their king was a Khedive like the present governor. Jeremiah utters God's judgment against Pharaoh-hophra, xliv. 30, and also against Pharaoh-necho in xlvi. With this God's denunciations against Egypt by Jeremiah close.

By Ezekiel God's denunciations against Egypt are very distinct and exceedingly severe. They show God's absolute sovereignty over that land and its nationality. Let us turn to his predictions. From Eze. xx. 7–10 it appears that the Hebrews practiced the idolatry of the Egyptians. For that reason God led them out of that land to another flowing with milk and honey; a land which was the glory of all lands; casting out its idolatrous inhabitants, that they might not again be allured into idolatry. Eze. xxiii. 19.

The two great national sins for which Egypt was put under the severe judgments of Jehovah, were pride and idolatry. Pharaoh-hophra had established his throne as securely as to defy the power of any God to overthrow it. He said in the pride of his glory, "My river is mine, I have made it," (the Nile). This boasting of Pharaoh drew upon him the anger of the Almighty, who said to Ezekiel, "Nebuchadnezzar (my servant) King of Babylon, caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus; every head (was) made bald, and every shoulder was peeled; yet had he no wages, nor his army for Tyrus, for the service he had served against it. I will give the land of Egypt to Nebuchadnezzar; and shall take her multitude, and take her spoil and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army. I have given him the land of Egypt (for) his labor wherewith he served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God." Eze. xxix. 18–21.

"I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, he and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain. And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I, the Lord, have spoken (it). I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause (their) images to cease out of Noph (Memphis); and there shall be no more a prince (supreme ruler) of the land (native) of Egypt; and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt." Eze. xxx. 10–14. (see the entire chapter and part of the next.) For the accomplishment of these predictions see 2 Kings and 2 Chron. These contests between the kings of Babylon and Egypt continued till the overthrow of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, God's special servant.

With this overthrow closed Egypt's supremacy. It became a "base" or tributary kingdom. Nectanebus was the last native of Egyptian extraction, A. M. 3651, B. C. 350. We are henceforward to trace the history of Egypt, either as a tributary kingdom, or under a monarch of foreign birth. The philosophy of her destiny affords us lessons of deep interest. Its history, during the Hebrew period, is composed of a series of effects, flowing from legitimate causes. God's claims to the sovereignty of Egypt are repeatedly enunciated. He is the sovereign of the people, and the proprietor of the land. He declares his right to give or to hire the land, as he thinks proper. This is clearly seen in his conduct towards his servant Nebuchadnezzar, after his 13 years siege of Tyre. Jehovah appears to reason as follows: "Tyre, having become proud and corrupt, I resolved to destroy. I made use of the king of Babylon for that purpose, the siege of thirteen years was exceedingly laborious and expensive. There was no booty in it, for the wealthy citizens of Tyre had conveyed in ships, their valuables to an island.

"Egypt is mine. I will therefore give Nebuchadnezzar Egypt for his wages and for the payment of his army."

But what had been the great national sin of Egypt? Pride and idolatry. Pharaoh-Hophra had said, "My river (Nile) is mine; I have made it for myself." This was false and impious. He might have constructed a few canals for a more perfect irrigation; but who made the drainage for more than a third of the African continent? Who opened the Ethiopian fountains and filled the channels of the Nile? For mortal man to utter such language is a crime of the first magnitude. Such pride demands a fall. The idolatry of Egypt was a national sin, deserving immediate punishment.

Egypt, according to her light, should have known and worshipped the true God. The ten plagues were still fresh in their recollection. The fate of Pharaoh Amenophis II. should have taught them the existence and power of the Hebrew God; yet, in the face of all the wonders in the land of Ham, they were the worshippers of animals and reptiles, among which were cats and crocodiles. By their intelligence, in human learning, they drew to their valley the great of other nations. They led the people of God (the Hebrews) into their idolatry. Even Solomon, with all his wisdom, was corrupted by his Egyptian wife. So was it with other Hebrew kings.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The steeple of Great St. Bernard, 8,200 feet above the sea, can no longer claim to be the highest building in Europe. This distinction belongs to an observatory 1,000 feet higher, on Mount Etna. It commands a view half over Sicily, over Malta, and of Calabria, Italy.

Brevities.

Arabi Pasha and some other rebel leaders in the war in Egypt, with their families, are to take up their future home in the Island of Ceylon. They have given their word that they will not leave their place of exile without the permission of the British Government.

The Pope has been for sometime past becoming more and more gloomily preoccupied by the general signs of the times in Europe. Those near his person affirm that he has recently written authoritative letters to many sovereigns, urging them to rally all conservative social forces for stemming the torrent of radicalism, which menaces the destruction of the present order of society and all existing institutions. He also occupies himself in the composition of lengthy memorials showing the tendency of present theories to throw back civilization into barbarism.

The Russian journal, the Vostoc (the Orient), says there has been in Jerusalem an election of Greek-Eastern Patriarch in place of the Illustrious Patriarch of Jerusalem, Hierothy II, deceased. In August the bishops and Archimandrites selected twelve candidates. The list was sent to the Sultan of Turkey, who approved of two candidates according to the Holy Synod to decide who was the worthiest. Archimandrite Photy, secretary of the late Patriarch, has been accordingly selected. He is quite a young man, being only thirty-two years old.

DISCOVERY OF AN ANCIENT CITY'S REMAINS IN FRANCE.

It is a Jesuit, Father de la Croix, who is the discoverer of the remains of a forgotten Roman city, Sanxay, near Poitiers, France, which covers an area of nearly twenty-five acres. This is described as a "little Pompeii." If the work of discovery 50,000 francs ($10,000) have already been spent and much still remains to be done. The excavators have been rewarded by finding the remains of a temple with a facade two hundred and fifty feet broad; baths three hundred and seventy feet long by one hundred broad; and an inn covering seven acres of ground and containing one hundred chambers heated by a hot air stove intact; and a theatre built on the side of a hill capable of accommodating 8,000 persons. Father de la Croix considers that these building were erected in the second century by Antonius Pius to superintend the general meetings of the Gauls by having Roman officials present at the debates held there. The monuments were devastated in the seventh century and gradually disappeared under an accumulation of the earth and a growth of shrubs and woods. Arms, coins, frescos, sculptures, of very good workmanship, and architectural ornaments have been found in abundance. The French Government, always alive to the historical and artistic importance of archæological discoveries, are in treaty with Father de la Croix for the purchase of the land where these ruins are found.—Boston Pilot.

TWO PUNGENT HITS—ART AND ACCURATE.

An Iowa paper has supplied a long-felt want by giving to the public an obituary notice that bears upon its face the stamp of honesty. It says: "He gained his riches by loaning money and handling notes and mortgages, had a statewide name for his litigation in various counties and by the Supreme Courts, was grasping and heartless in his transactions, became divorced from his wife, and died with out a friend."

The following is told of Saphir, a deformed Jew, who lived centuries ago in Germany. He was travelling in a stage coach in company with two Jesuits, who made allusions to the personal appearance of Saphir, and were disposed to make fun of him generally. He put up with this for some time, but finally he asked: "Who are you two fellows, anyhow?" "We belong to the Society of Jesus." "Which society of Jesus—the first or the last?" "What do you mean?" "Well, his first society were donkeys, in the manger, and his last were thieves, on Mount Calvary. Now, I want to know to which of these societies you belong."

THE RESTITUTION.

A. B. MAGRUDER, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 21, 1882.

At this season of the year many Holiday Presents are given as tokens of friendship. A present of THE RESTITUTION for six months or a year would be very acceptable to many as an expression of kind remembrance, especially to some who are poor in the world's goods.

We have recently received copies of the following Books and Pamphlets. "The Phrenological Journal" for Jan. 1883, "Vick's Floral Guide," Mr. Magruder's "Reply to R. G. Ingersoll's Lectures," Sr. Carrie Williams tract in reply to Ingersoll's Lecture—"What must I do to be saved?" and D. T. Taylor's work entitled "The Reign of Christ on Earth." Specific notices of these publications hereafter.

PALESTINE AND EGYPT.

God in his history, causing events, as they come and go in the great line of advancement toward the consummation of all things, to so take place as to correspond with the words spoken by the holy prophets, whose predictions are but forecasts to be realized in actual fact. In one column the prophet tells us what will come to pass in future times, and the historiographer writes down in a parallel column as the times and seasons fleet by the precisely corroborative facts. God's revelation and purpose embrace prediction and fulfillment. The prophet says, So it will be; the historian says, So it has been.

In the evolutions of the Oriental Question, Palestine and Egypt were to come to the front, as prime factors in the last times, and Palestine and Egypt are becoming irrepressible elements in all that now pertains to national diplomacy in arranging the affairs of the East. From the Christian Herald we take two short extracts illustrating the importance of carefully noting the smaller links that make up in the aggregate, the grand chain of dispensational history. England is in Egypt to stay, and the Jew must go to Palestine. History is interpreting prophecy to the very letter.

"Jews in considerable numbers are flocking to Jerusalem from Russia, Germany, and other lands in spite of obstacles placed in their way by the Turkish Government. Many who were not allowed to disembark at Jaffa travel the long overland route from Beyrout, meeting with great hardships and experiencing what must have been more grievous, namely, the inhospitable conduct of their co-religionists at Safed. Arrived at Jerusalem their troubles do not end, their brethren could or would not afford them any help, and but for Christian charity they must sooner or later perish from famine or despair. The assistance they receive is and has always been rendered them freely at their own solicitation, and not as a bribe to induce them to pretend a profession of Christianity. The agents of the English Mission are at present in great perplexity as to where to secure suitable winter lodgings for their protégés. Applications for help have been received from the body of refugees at Jaffa, who finding themselves abandoned by their own brethren, turn in their hour of trial to those whom they had been accustomed to regard as heathens or apostates. This is a significant fact.

"A despairing forecast of Egyptian affairs is made by the distinguished traveler, Captain Richard F. Burton, who said recently to the correspondent of an American journal: 'I have never seen a population more discontented and dissatisfied than the Egyptians today. Should the English troops leave the country every European in Egypt would be tortured and massacred. In villages not ten miles from Tel-el-Kebir I saw Egyptians spit upon the ground the moment any European passed by. They have been so excited by religious teachings that at least another generation must elapse before Europeans can live in the country and not be subjected to sudden outbreaks of fanaticism. They are incapable of reasoning, and their fanaticism would make them believe that any benefits they might enjoy resulted, not from the English rule, but rather in spite of English rule. It is difficult to see any course for England to pursue other than to practically annex the country. Whether or not international etiquette requires annexation to be termed a 'protectorate' matters but little. If England does not take the bull by the horns and govern Egypt you may depend upon it some other nation will do it, for history has pretty well proved that the Egyptians cannot govern themselves, and western industry has taken root in the country and cannot be left to Oriental decay and destruction."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

S. A. Chapin:

DEAR BROTHER:—Please give a Scriptural answer to the following questions:

1. Is it right for brethren—baptized believers of the gospel of the kingdom of God—to take usury (unlawful interest) for money loaned to their brethren, or to unwashed Gentiles? Will the law of God hold such guiltless?

2. Are not believers bound by the word and teaching of Christ to give their brethren in the faith precedence over their kindred relations? See Mark iii. 31.

3. Can believers—members of the body of Christ—deal in contraband goods (crooked whisky) and be guiltless before God? Mr. Wesley would not allow the members of the early Methodist churches to do it. A plain Scriptural answer to these questions will go far to check Gentile encroachments upon the church of God.

N. BOND.

In reply to our esteemed Brother Bond we would here say that we can only give a very brief, and likely, therefore, a very unsatisfactory answer to the above questions. Indeed it is often very difficult to give a perfectly satisfactory answer to all questions that might be proposed. The principle contained in the Golden Rule, laid down by our Savior—doing unto all others as we would have them do to us—is one, if applied, that would guide the children of God, in most instances, in the right discharge of their duty both to the members of the household of faith, and to those who are without.

On the first question, to take interest beyond the rate fixed by the law of the land, is an illegal act, subjecting one, if prosecuted, to a penalty as a wrong doer; and no one reading the New Testament with any degree of care, could consistently claim that one violating the laws of his country—except when these laws contravene the law of God—could be doing right in the divine estimation. Our own conclusions from the general principles of Christianity are, that when a brother is crushed under misfortune we should give him something, when embarrassed and straitened with obligations, that temporary assistance by way of financial help would extricate him, we should cheerfully aid him without anything for the use of money; and when he asks money to invest for his commercial benefit, take only lawful interest.

On Brother Bond's second question, as the Friend Quaker would say, we do not know that we have any light. Respecting the rival claims of the saints of God and the people of the world, the apostle says, Gal. vi. 10, "So then as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, especially toward them that are of the household of faith." The ties of natural affection were linked within us by our Creator, and cannot be disregarded, and the bonds that bind together a holy brotherhood in Christ Jesus are sacred clasps, that unite us to the Redeemer as well as to each other. As a general thing, if we are anxious to do all our duty, we can usually meet the claims of each and both.

As to the third question we have no good word for dealing in whisky whether it be crooked or straight. It is one of the things concerning which we should say, "Touch not, taste not, handle not." We should hate to be in a rum-hole, or handling a barrel of the abominable stuff under any name of intoxicants, when the angels come for the elect. We should expect to be condemned with the rest of the world.

As to paying taxes, whether special, as duties, or general, as assessed on property, the Scriptures are plain enough. Our Savior's example and the directions of the apostles are explicit. See Matt. xvii. 24; Rom. xiii. 6, 7.

Communications.

AN ADMONITION.

All Scripture is given for our instruction, and we must heed it that we may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. The apostle Paul tells us that we must lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us and run the race with patience, looking unto Jesus Christ, the author and perfecter of our faith. American version. We feel that we are in a time of trial, that temptations and allurements are on all sides of us and that it behooves us to stand with our feet firmly upon the rock, Christ Jesus, as never before; knowing that these are perilous moments. No Christian has any right to follow after the things of this world, for the friendship of the world is enmity against God. Then we are commanded to strive, yes strive, to enter in at the straight gate, for the broad road leads to destruction. So then we must cleave to that which is good; and while we are to follow after the things that pertain to our eternal interest to the best of our ability, we then are only unprofitable servants; but we have this blessed assurance, that the Lord will not cast off his people.

The worldly-minded are watching us to see whether we will stand up for Jesus under all circumstances or not, and I fear there are too many lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Dear brother, dear sister, the Lord has told us to come out from among them and be a separate people, and he would receive us and be a Father unto us. And we should be his sons and daughters saith the Lord. We have a great work before us; so many things to overcome and conquer; but the greatest foe we have is the foe we have within. If we can subdue this one we will come off more than conquerors. It is a grand thing to have Christ formed in our hearts, and then we have the sword of the spirit which is the word of God. The Christian life is a warfare against anything that would drive us away from the duty which we owe to our God. We must fight the good fight of faith and lay hold of eternal life; for our citizenship is in heaven from whence we look for the Lord Jesus, who will change the body of our humiliation like unto his most glorious body. Soon the last call of mercy will be given to a perishing world and we have to stand before the judge of all the earth to give an account of our stewardship, and oh, shall we be among the faithful ones. Who will abide the day of his coming, or who will stand when he appears? Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him. In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee, for thou wilt answer me. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, for he is our God and we are the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand.

I cannot tell how precious
The Savior is to me
Since I have him accepted,
And he hath made me free.

SARAH P. CHAMBERLIN.

Reply to Col. Ingersoll's Lecture, "What Must I do to be Saved," delivered in St. Joseph, Mo., Nov. 22, 1882.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." Psa. xiv. 1.

The above is the title page of a pamphlet of 16 pages now in a publisher's hands in this city, to be on sale next week. Ten cents a copy; six for fifty cents; twelve for a dollar. To be had by addressing the writer, No 1021 North 18 Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Yes, the great infidel lectured here to, I believe, a larger audience than ever before here greeted one man. His eloquence, oratory and witticisms were on every lip, so to speak. The lecture entire appeared in our leading dailies and was repeated in one, as the demand was so great. One paper offered room for a reply. I responded to the call, believing it but right to stand up for God's everlasting truth, even if I did stand alone. My article was rejected as containing "too many new ideas," though "well written." I then appealed to the church at Severance, Kansas, and to a good brother in Missouri, and from both received a noble response. May the Lord reward them. Far be it from me to presume to compete with brother Magruder in his noble work against the great infidel. But when we see an opportunity to strike the foe, I think we should do so, however feeble the effort.

When brother M's work first came out, I sent for three copies and have tried to keep them in circulation ever since. They were all out when I wrote my reply, though I wanted to refresh my memory but could not.

If your better judgment give this a place in THE RESTITUTION, well; if not, all right. I will send some copies as soon as I get them. Your sister in the hope,

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

The New and Enlarged Edition of the Reply to Ingersoll's Lectures.

Editor Restitution:

Please allow me space to say, in answer to enquiries, that the second edition of my Reply to Ingersoll, and the Review of the Black-Ingersoll Discussion in the North American Review, is at length out from the press, and can now be supplied to subscribers and others. It makes a volume of 216 pages, and can be sold at 55 cents a copy in paper covers, and at one dollar and 25 cents in cloth binding—a handsome and convenient volume, with the usual reduction on these rates to the trade, or to any who will order in large quantities.

Though published under the same title that the first edition bore, it has been so amplified in the more than one hundred pages of new matter, as to justify the title—taken as a whole—of "The Bible Solution of the Problem of Life, Here and Hereafter." The work can be sent, by mail at these rates, and in other style of binding, by orders accompanied by the cash, either to the author, at Stephens City, Va., or to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind.

Selections.

A New Book of Popular Interest.

We are indebted to the author for some advance sheets of the second edition of Mr. A. B. Magruder's "reply" to the infidel lectures of the noted Col. Ingersoll—with a supplement containing strictures and criticisms on the late Gail-Black discussion of the Christian religion in the North American Review. This new matter covers about one hundred printed pages of the volume, in which Mr. Magruder, after showing that the disputants have planted themselves on fallacious premises, and therefore can never reach a logical conclusion, proceeds to argue the question at issue on a different and indisputable basis, which in its outcome clearly overthrows the infidel assailant and leaves the divine record unscathed.

We learn that the new edition will be issued soon, and will, no doubt, like the first edition, meet with a rapid sale. We select and insert in our paper the author's treatment of the great subject of the constitution and destiny of our race as drawn from Bible premises, pure and simple, which is also indicative of the direct and pointed style of the writer. He says:

Nothing is more simple and easy of comprehension than the Mosaic narrative of the creation, constitution and destiny of man. Here we have the "whence" and the "whither" fully answered. As to whence he comes, the answer is, "from the dust of the earth," and as to whither he goes, we read, "dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." It reveals to us what otherwise we should never have discovered, that "God formed man from the dust of the ground and breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul." His continued life was made to depend on the observance of the Creator's law. This simple sentence tells the whole story. From these premises we argue logically, the following conclusions:

1. That man, being in his creation organized dust, was, before the inbreathing of the breath of life, mere inert matter—had no more life than the dust of which he was formed. But when this dust organism was set in motion, animated by the breath of life, from God, he became "a living soul," not, however, an immortal soul, neither "in the head nor in the heart," nor the lungs, nor the "grey matter of the brain," according to the fanciful theory of physiologists and philosophers, but simply a living soul, or being, as we see him now, liable to death.

2. As he had access to all the fruits of the garden, including the tree of life and excepting only that of the knowledge of good and evil, which was forbidden, he continued to live until his transgression, which entailed upon him the prescribed death penalty—death as we see it literally fulfilled to this day.

3. That, from that moment, becoming mortal, he paid himself, and his posterity after him, pays to this hour that penalty, death, which ends that Adamic life—the only life he had—and remands him again to the dust of the ground.

4. That Adam lived and his descendants still live under this death sentence which in their case is contaneous with their birth, the execution of the sentence being, however, suspended until he reaches the goal of life; then "the dust returns to the earth as it was and the spirit (or breath of life) returns unto God who gave it." Eccles. xii. 7.

Thus man realizes and proves in his own person that the "wages of sin is death"—not eternal life in misery. Now who can discover in this simple narrative any hint, even the faintest intimation of immortality, or even of any future life to man?—any threat of pain or promise of pleasure in the death state?

To that future life our right and title is derived from another source—the second Adam; as it is written, "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul. The last Adam was made a quickening (life-giving) spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy such are they also that are earthy, and as is the heavenly such shall they also be that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

There is indeed not only no immortality out of Christ, but absolutely no future life for any of our race, except according to his sovereign will and pleasure. It is he who "holds the keys of death and hell (the grave). He opens and no man shuts. He shuts and no man opens." He says of himself, "I am the resurrection and the life." "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." It is his voice that is to wake the sleeping dead. Hear his words: "The hour is coming in which all that are in their graves (not in heaven or hell, or paradise or purgatory), shall hear his voice and come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation," (condemnation). How justly and wisely he will employ this high prerogative trust which the Father hath confided to him as the King, Judge and Ruler of all nations at his coming in his kingdom, we may learn from what is written for our admonition unto whom the consummation of the ages is come. "He will render to every man according to his works. To those who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life; but unto those who are contentious and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile, for there is no respect of persons with God."

Truly, "Life and immortality are brought to light through the Gospel," and not by Thales, Socrates and Plato, who flourished many hundred years before Christ. In truth it was not until the Paganization of Christianity, in the days of Constantine, the Roman Emperor, and subsequently, that the Christian faith became thoroughly corrupted by these interpolations of the heathen mythology, viz., immortal souls in men, the doctrine of purgatory, the invocation of dead saints, the worship of the Virgin Mary, prayers to and for the dead, future probation, the eternal torment of the wicked, etc., just as we see them at this day, incorporated into the creeds and formulas of both Catholic and Protestant sects around us; all claiming to have unchallenged, as we have seen, under the name of Christianity. Fortunately, such daring usurpations, and pernicious corruptions of the pure and simple Christian faith, are foretold, and have not escaped profane history, whose pen has faithfully recorded them for our instruction and admonition. We have already recited in the body of this work some relevant testimony from the historians, Gibbon and Macaulay. We select from abundant similar material, brief extracts from recent sources, in support of the statement we have made as to the Paganization of the Christian religion in modern times, by its professed friends, those who claim to be of the household of faith.—*Winchester (Va.) ### RUSSIANS TORTURED AND MURDERED BY CHINESE.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—The Turkestan Gazette says that the Chinese in the province of Ili tortured and murdered in October two Cossacks and a Russian clerk. The Russian Consul at Kuldja is making an investigation. The Russians on the frontier are exasperated, and threaten reprisals. The guards on the frontier have been reinforced.

The first part of the military force which is to reinstate Cetywayo on his throne has started for Zululand. It consists of mounted infantry.

A passenger train has been stopped and robbed by an armed band in Italy. The Government has offered a reward of 2,000 francs for the apprehension of the robbers.

The Sultan has taken away from the Franciscan monks of Jerusalem a piece of land that had long been in their possession, and has made a present of it to the Czar of Russia, who wishes to erect there a memorial chapel to his mother.

Seditious proclamations have been posted in the streets of Constantinople, and many arrests have been made. The mind of the Sultan appears to be giving away, and his insanity is becoming daily more pronounced.

Rev. Dr. Jessup, who is familiar with the state of affairs in the East, suggests that the following results may be traced to the war in Egypt. The sultan has lost his prestige in the eye of his followers. He simply looked on and saw England gain her victory. France also has lost her political influence in the East. She has been aiding Jesuitism, that worst form of the Papacy. She must now retire and leave England to solve the Eastern problem alone. Mohammedanism has received a staggering blow. Had Arabi been successful, no Christian would have been allowed to remain in Egypt. Now we may hope for protection to Christians.

A curious mistake was committed recently by all the Turkish newspapers of Constantinople, which anticipated this pregnant Mussulman new year, 1300, by a day. They all appeared on Sunday, the 12th of November, with the date "1st Muharrom, 1300," while the proper date was "30th Zilhijeh, 1299." They were put right, when too late, by the proper religious authorities, whose duty it is to see to such things; and they all had to repeat the date on Monday, the 13th of November. The error seems to have been caused by ignorance that the month of Zilhijeh had thirty and not twenty-nine days in 1299, and the able editors were also confused by the new moon of the 28th and 29th of Zilhijeh (10th and 11th of November). It was peculiarly hard upon a people who regard with superstitious awe and expectation this beginning of the fourteenth century of the Hegira that they should not even know when it dawned.

A Mother's Gift of a Bible.

"From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16.

Remember, love, who gave thee this,
When other days shall come,—
When she who had thy earliest kiss
Sleeps in her narrow home:
Remember 'twas a mother gave
The gift to one she'd die to save.

Thy mother sought a pledge of love,
The holiest for her son:
And from the gifts of God above
She chose this holy one:
She chose for her beloved boy
The source of light, and life, and joy.

I bid thee keep the gift, that when
The parting hour shall come,
We may have hope to meet again
In an eternal home.
The precious faith in this shall be
Sweet incense to my memory.

And should the scoffer in his pride
Laugh that fond faith to scorn,
And bid thee cast the pledge aside
That thus from youth hast borne,
I bid thee patise, and ask thy breast
If he or I have loved thee best.

A mother's blessing on her son
Goes with this holy thing;
The heart that would enjoy the one
Must to the other cling:
Remember 'tis my bible boy—
A mother's gift, my darling boy!

A Logical Child.

A little girl, whom we know, came in her night clothes very early to her mother one morning, saying:

"Which is worst, mamma, to tell a lie or steal?"

The mother, taken by surprise, replied that both were so bad she couldn't tell which was the worst.

"Well," said the little one, "I've been thinking a good deal about it, and I've concluded it's worse to lie than to steal. If you steal a thing you can take it back, 'less you've eaten it; and if you've eaten it you can pay for it. But"—and there was a look of awe in the little face—"a lie is forever."—Evangelist.

Little Things Great.

Sometimes we can only sing a psalm, or offer a prayer, or speak a kind word, or give a tender look, or a warm grasp of the hand. It is enough in the eyes of the just Savior that we do things as little as these, if these should be the only things we can do. A young lady who had been thrown from a carriage was ill in bed for ten years; but her hands were free, and with her free hands she knit little gloves for poor children. It was only helping to keep warm some little fingers that would, otherwise, have been very cold in winter. But it was all she was able to do, and it was done with a loving heart, and as a service of the Lord. No one is so humble, or poor, or weak, as not to be able to do something. Even a child can serve the Lord.

The Bethlehem Child.

In his imperial palace at Rome sat the man at whose feet the greatest empire of the world was kneeling. The grand-nephew and adopted son, of the dead Julius Cæsar, he had taken into his own hands all the power of the magistrates, had been deified by the Senate under the title of Augustus, and reigned absolute monarch, the first of the Roman Emperors. He had found the seven-hilled city brick, and had made it marble. He had gathered about his throne men renowned in war, in arts, in literature. He had determined that the world should be a great circle, of which he was the centre, and the golden milestone which he erected in the forum stood as a symbol of that determination—It was the centre of the world; all roads should lead to Rome. All the glories of the nations should come to him; all that was costly and to be desired was to be brought to him as his rightful spoil. Over his well-built roads, which were so many cords binding the conquered world to its centre, so many channels for the impulses which streamed forth from it, moved the mighty legions to control subjugated nations, majestic Pro-consuls and Prætors to administer its affairs, and swift messengers to bear the edicts of their monarch. In the matchless city itself were gathered representatives of all the nations of the earth. There were the cultured Greek; the savage African, leading his lions for the combat to the arena; the stately Spaniard; the Gaul, proud of his new citizenship; the wily Jew, thronging wherever money was to be made, and the warlike Illyrian and Thracian, who followed the Roman eagles. The luxury of the rich was unsurpassable, and the squalor of the poor unimaginable. It was an age and city of extremes, a city whose inhabitants were slaves to pleasure-seeking; an age when suicide was a passion.

From the palace of the Emperor went out a decree that all the world should be taxed. Straightway to the four corners of the empire is the edict borne, till it reaches a humble home in a despised Judean village, the home of a carpenter and his wife, who must go forthwith to Bethlehem where their names are enrolled upon the tax list. It is strange, this slight notice of Rome and its ruler in the sacred narrative. Only once is Augustus mentioned, and then simply because a political measure which he ordered happens to affect the fortunes of an obscure Jewish maiden.

Suppose it had been suggested to an old Roman annalist, a Livy, a Tacitus, that the history of the most important event that agitated the world at that time would be written by despised Jews, but comparatively illiterate men, who could find no room for the exploits of generals, the efforts of orator, the strains of poets, the vagaries of philosophers, or the political triumphs of kings and emperors! Why, these hangers-on at the court of Augustus had no knowledge of a land of Palestine, except what they gained by chance conversation with some despised Jew who lived across the Tiber, or when some traveller from the East had spoken of a strange people, who dwelt apart, with laws, customs and a religion of their own. To be placed in an official position among such a people must have seemed to a noble Roman, like Pilate, for instance, very much as it would seem to a refined and exclusive Bostonian to be sent to represent his country among the Patagonians. And yet the books which these unlearned men composed outweigh today all the treasures of learning which Rome has bequeathed to us; and the name of the little child who was born nearly nineteen centuries ago is worshipped where the name of the Emperor Augustus is never heard.

The story which these obscure writers have told is a very simple one. The carpenter and his wife take the journey, which, as far as man could judge, might prove only dangerous to her. It is not a very hospitable reception which awaits them at their journey's end. One can imagine the crowds that would throng in Bethlehem, strangers of all ranks and degrees, Cæsar's officers attended by a vast retinue, and this poor carpenter and his wife dressed humbly and without attendants. Of course we know what would happen. The rich and well-appearing would have all the spare places. One might think that the pale face of the tired woman would inspire some kind heart to give her shelter. But no; she goes to the stable (which is that rocky country was probably a cave), and there the Savior is born. He came to his own, but his own received him not. Not like the royal line of illustrious kings was he born into the world. The lookers-on saw no halo about his head, no aureole of sanctity above the brow of his mother, such as painters have depicted. It was simply a poor woman and her babe! Doubtless at that time there was some stir and curiosity, but the wonder soon died away. Kind women heard of "the little stranger," and remembered how pale and travel-worn the mother had looked; and they came, as women always do, with their sympathetic offers for help. And their rude, peasant husbands stood about in the way, as men always are at such times, and asked questions. But no one saw that veiled beneath that infantile weakness, was the brightness of the Father's glory. No one knew that the slender finger of that little child was stronger than the mailed arm of earth's most powerful monarch.—Providence Journal.

"CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATERS."

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,"
Thou shalt not the power be;
Give to him that asketh bounty,
Some day 'twill come back to thee.

It will come in richest blessing
From the store-house of the Lord,
With an overflowing measure
Upon those who trust his word.

It will come like heavenly manna
In thy soul's dark hour of need;
And with heaven's benediction
Thou shalt reap in joy thy seed.

O remember, then, the needy,
Turn not any from thy door;
Go thyself into the highway,
Seek the wretched and the poor.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,"
Thou shalt not the power be;
Give to him that asketh bounty,
Some day 'twill [illegible] to thee.

NATURE'S PROTEST.

This thing has greatly impressed me, that I have not met one believer in the eternal torment theory who appeared to admit to himself that any relation or cherished friend of his, who had given no clear evidence of conversion before passing away, had gone to the abode of wretchedness. I can look back on many such cases, and they are all of a similar character; not an interested survivor had a suspicion that it was ill with the removed, and in many instances assurances of their felicity were uttered in unqualified terms. My object has been carefully to watch examples of the kind, without once ever hinting my purpose when noting results and inscribing spontaneous utterances on my memory for future use. On occassions when notoriously wicked persons—openly profane, drunkards, and the scandalously impure, for example—had been suddenly laid low, it was always the same,—not one note was looked upon with despair; on the contrary, as a rule, friends described them as now separated from all their frailties, and as mingling henceforth in the society above. Not one sorrowed over them as those who had no hope. Why, without any discoverable valid authority, they settled matters in that easy way is a legitimate inquiry; it must tarry, however, till our contribution is further advanced.

Such has been my own discovery in instances manifold, and I have also taken steps to determine what in like circumstances others—persons in whose accuracy and credibility dependence might be placed—had found. Their testimony exactly corresponded with my own; the worst, without exception, fare as enviably, in the opinion of surviving friends, as the best. At any rate, that the most impenitent had gone below, whose terrible experiences are known, was a thought not to be entertained for a single moment. Happened it that the deceased, who had been cut down in their godless state, were strangers in whom no special concern was felt, their probable fate might be dimly adverted to, perhaps with something like a shudder, and a hope expressed that all present would leave this scene in a better mind, and with better prospects. Relationship, on such occassions, made all the difference. Hell would forthwith, as an abstract entity, receive the unconverted when summoned hence, but it had no dungeon for any connexion of theirs.

Whatever the motive may be, this method of disposing of profane, at all events Christless, kindred, renders, so far as mortals can arrange final allotments, salvation as nearly universal as may be. How do without some one to shed a tear over their departure, and to wish them well in the untried region they are supposed to have entered. Father or son, mother or daughter, brother or sister, companion or friend, may not have spent the best of lives; nay, perchance may have ended their career sadly deformed by sinful habits; but, for some reason or other, they cannot be supposed to find a dwelling, now where the dismal creeds appoint all such ultimately to congregate, and they are therefore held to have gone to a pleasanter locality; all difficulties in accomplishing their rescue and exaltation being conveniently overlooked. In such cases, my observation has been, friends tarrying behind do not suspend judgment,—the while awe-struck into silence by transpiring events,—leaving the matter, as they surely might in wisdom, with the All-Just; no, the awful abyss is for none on whom their affections were placed, and they are unhesitatingly spoken of as already at an infinite remove from its terrors and pangs. Thus the generality soothe their hearts in such hours of bereavement, and human ingenuity, helped by tender tearful sympathy, effects for the most depraved even the final deliverance which renders their long future, regarded as the destiny of all, an experience of heavenly peace. That the mental act of transporting them to such a field of existence avails nothing in reality, disturbs not one mourner anxious to escape from the horrors which the grim Tartarian enclosure behind the veil so inevitably suggests. As if they had the key of the nether world, and the key of Paradise in their charge, they lock the dismal doors and open the gates of light at their will. Judging by their conclusions, human friendly choice regulates the destiny of all, and it is ever so arranged in the most desperate instances so as to provide abundant solace for those who weep: whether it is genuine, enduring solace is obviously foreign to the question altogether. As a deplorable, yea tremendous result, Christ ceases to be an indispensible factor in the issues of salvation; promises to his friends, threats against impiety, are simply airy nothings that come and go.

There must be a reason for this peculiarity—non-belief in the misery of dear ones who are smitten down without repentance, or time for repentance. It has its origin not, to the best of my discernment, in a doubt of the orthodox tenet, for those who are so hasty with their compassion cling to it rigorously, and not unfrequently go so far as to denounce as heretics whoever may pronounce it—the fiery threat—an impostura. Indeed, hell is the key-stone of their gloomy religion, and if removed the whole structure—all that is morally authoritative, all that has spiritual potency, all that imparts meu to the Savior, hurries forthwith down into ruins.

For myself I discover no explanation of the fact except this, that it is the forceful, instinctive recoil of nature from the malign teaching of the creeds. The fate therein described is more than can be thought of; if dwelt upon, reason would fail to preserve its balance.

The death-bed physical agonies of loved ones, quite irrespective of their spiritual condition, harrow the feelings well-nigh beyond endurance, and enfeeble the wearied watchers by the couch of pain. This one comfort at least remains for attendants, the suffering cannot last. Death will soon allay the storm, and release the sufferer and his heart-wrung friends. To heaven, whom all hope of cure has fled, the inarticulate prayer has often risen from watchers on the doomed that the relieving crisis might speedily draw near. Assure them that for months yet the object of their care must submit to cruel throes, and can we doubt the effect of the communication on their sensibilities? Nature bears up under such spectacles because there may be recovery at length; when that is a vain expectation, she reposes in the belief that the great rest-bringing change cannot be far away. Transfer the sufferer to what is called the other world, add torment unspeakable to his whole being, add the element of ceaselessness, add the gloom and blasphemy supposed to be collected in the region of horrors, and need we wonder when a beloved one expires, one who had been a stranger could scarcely have been reckoned fit for Paradise,—that there is no hesitation in assigning him immediately an entrance among the blissful and the just. Every plea that the nimbleness of intellect can fabricate will bend the heart in favor of a tranquil hereafter in his case. But defined plea or no plea, he cannot be considered as in the pit; the mind revolts from such a conception and humanity triumphs over the dogma of perpetual woe. It is the up-rising, not unarmed, of reason for her own preservation. It is her free-born, unconquerable protest against the barbarity that blind ruthless, fleshly minds have audaciously ascribed to him who is the Judge of All, who while he reigns in righteousness is encompassed, and ever will be encompassed, with the symbols and the songs of infinite love.

When in analogous circumstances others, differently constituted perhaps, begin to realize what the ancient and serene threatening means, they defiantly hurl the Bible from them as a monstrous Oriental myth. With them the Bible and the dogma are one. Thinking so, can we be astonished when they banish them, with a parting malediction, from their sympathy and table in company? To gain this very result is a part of the tactics of Col. Ingersoll, the clever, witty, and eloquent apostle of unbelief. He attacks the atrocious dogma invented by priests and patronized by the churches, yet never enquires "but after all is it in the scriptures, old or new?" He ought by this time to understand that it is not the teaching of the Book. He ought to know that in its pages, the simple, but momentous alternative is —Life or Death; and that if Death is proferred by any son of man, there is no wrong done in allowing his own choice to take effect. That can in reason prejudice no fair-minded individual against the Book of God. It brings no intermingable agony to those who refuse Everlasting Life: nor need it agitate beyond measure any friendly bosom when the irreversible doom has been undergone, though many a time the calm, sad thought may rise in the heart as eternity proceeds, taking some such form as this:—"Would that those for whom our love was great, now in the deep shadow of oblivion, had received Christ, and by the aid of his mighty arm climbed with us the stairway, long and steep though it was, that conducted to glory, honor, and immortality."—W. G. Moncrieff, in the Bible Standard.

"What Must I Do to Be Saved?"

CHICAGO, Dec. 6, 1882.

Ingersoll seems now to be entertaining large audiences in this city with a merry lecture having the above caption. I also have listened to him and laughed heartily over his drolleries, as every one must who hears him; yet I was not convinced. And I am sure that many—perhaps a majority—of those who go there and laugh, can not laugh away the conviction that there is after all something to be saved from; nor do his drolleries entirely satisfy the deep cravings of every heart and soul not utterly abandoned to vice to be saved. Many, I am sure, go away feeling that they have been fed on the east wind, and are still empty and hungry. Yet the feeling is well nigh universal that something is wrong with the generally-received opinion on the subject of his lecture. Multitudes now only laugh at the threat of endless misery which is still occasionally launched from the pulpit. And such are asking with more or less earnestness, "If there is no hell, what is there to be saved from? Then what is salvation, of which so much is said? Isn't the whole thing humbug and priestcraft, as Bob says?"

Now, to a real honest inquirer, who is bewildered by the present state of opinion, I do want to say a few words—not so much to untie all the knots which puzzle him as to give direction to his thought, and leave him to pursue his investigations in his own way. I want to ask such a one a few questions.

Do you believe there is any evil in this world? Is there any lying, stealing, murdering? Is there any adultery, hypocrisy, treachery, cruelty, oppression, hatred, slander? Are there sin and sinners in this world or not? You certainly do know that the world is now and ever has been in a very bad way. Perhaps it is getting worse, perhaps better; I don't know; but I do know and you know that it is now very, very bad. Now, if this is a fact, is it not a very desirable thing that you and I and everybody shall be saved from the love and from the practice and from the debasement and the defilement of those dreadful vices? How can I be saved? How can my children be saved? How can my friends be saved? How can the young men and maidens, the citizens of this land, of the world, be saved from being overwhelmed and carried away by this black and fetid stream of vice? If there is no hell and no heaven, no God and no Christ, no future life at all, but only the blackness of darkness forever, would it not still be too serious a question to laugh at—"What must I do to be saved?" If "death is an eternal sleep," is not vice still vice? And is not virtue preferable to vice? Would not you be better off if you did not drink, or chew, or lie, or swear, or cheat, wrong your fellows? Would not man live longer and happier if the world was saved from sin? Now, are you able to tell me how it can be done? Is Ingersoll able? Is the whole school of infidel philosophers, from the fellows that filled the world with violence and blood and laughed at the threatening of a flood, down to yourself, who are beginning now to doubt for the first time—are the whole of them equal to the task? Can you tell me how one man can be saved? "What must I do to be saved?"

Of course you can tell me to quit. Certainly, that is just the way to do it. But did you ever know anyone to quit who hadn't any God in it, who hadn't any Christ in it, who hadn't any hope of a future life in it? Don't those fellows say: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," and go in for a good time?

Now, another thing. I know of hundreds who reason this way: I came into this world without any will of my own; I live under conditions for which I am not responsible. I leave this world without any will of my own. He who gave me this life has provided for me very well thus far, and when he calls me hence I can trust him to care as well for me there. If I have not done exactly right in everything, I do not think he will be hard on me, but if he punishes at all it will be tempered with mercy, and I shall be after awhile all that he desires."

Now isn't that the kind of reasoning you indulge in? And is not such the ground of your hope and the real reason why you do not come to Christ?

We will admit that it is specious and looks fair in the face, but don't let us be too sure that it is altogether sound. "Come now, let us reason together," and see if you can safely trust such conclusions. Now, what is the basis of your reasoning and your hope?

First, you take it for granted that your sins are mere peccadillos—wild oats—trifles from which you can turn at will. But don't experience prove the contrary? Isn't it a fact that the farther you go on a wrong road, the longer it will take and the harder it will be to get back? And what if there should be a limit to time and strength and disposition to return? Have you ever tried to quit swearing, or even smoking? Not to speak of other vices which, when once they get a hold on you, hold you under like a devil-fish with a thousand horrid arms? Have you ever measured strength with a bad habit of any sort? Don't you know that a human being is like a tree? It starts from a seed, grows to maturity, remains for a time in a fixed state, performing its natural functions, undergoing meanwhile little change, then dies. "Just as the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." You have bent the sapling, every year it is more difficult to do, and at last it breaks rather than bends. Isn't it true that thousands all about us want to change, but can't do it? Do you know of any judges, lawyers, preachers, doctors, and good and honorable men otherwise, who would sever their good right arms to get rid of the demon of alcohol? But it is too late. They have lost their will-power. It is an interesting question to them, "What must I do to be saved?" But don't you know that men come to love their chains, how galling soever they may at one time have been?

> Vice is a monster of such frightful mien,
> That to be hated, needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity—then embrace.

Can you, can you tell me what will save men from the love of sin?

There is such a thing as having become full-grown, mature, in vice, and they? Can you bend this giant oak? Depend upon it a change of worlds don't bring about a change of moral character. That grows little by little, either from good to better, or from bad to worse. If you find it hard to give up a bad habit while you still have the desire to do so, who shall change you against your will? If it is only by slow and painful labor you unravel the tangled web of an evil life to rekuit it as a garment of unrighteousness before you are fixed in the love of evil, what hope have you that any change is possible when once you are in love with it? You certainly know that no moral change is possible without the consent of the will. Do you know of any way of changing the will against the will? But leaving this point now, I want to say that the second ground of your hope is that you will have all eternity to change in. Bob says he don't want to believe in a God who won't give a fellow a chance to reform. By that he means an everlasting chance. It is all right to give a calf time and chance to grow into a cow, but if when the thing gets its growth it's an ox, would it be sensible to wait to all eternity for it to change? But aside from this principle of growth, I want to inquire seriously, how do you know you have an eternity before you?

I deny it positively, and challenge the proof. If you live a sinner and die a sinner, and yet live on forever, the chances are that you will be an immortal sinner; and then, indeed, Almighty love and wisdom has a problem on its hands most difficult of solution. But suppose it should happen that the "wicked shall be turned [returned—turned back] into Sheol [the grave] with all the nations that forget God." Suppose it should be true that "all the wicked will God destroy"? that "they that know not God and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ shall be punished with everlasting destruction"; that "he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption," while he who "soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Where, under this state of affairs, would your chance be of reformation even if you had the will? Remember that immortality or eternal life is declared in the Scriptures to be the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. It is promised, therefore not now possessed—is a matter of hope and will be bestowed by and by at the resurrection only on those who are worthy of it. The life, death and resurrection of Christ proved God's ability to grant it, and the character of those to whom he would grant it.

Faith, then, in Christ becomes the grand moral force which reforms the character by furnishing the grandest of all motives—hope of immortality—as the instrument by which the work is done.

So "we are saved by hope." "We are saved by faith." We are saved by works, and the salvation itself is deliverance from the love and power of sin, and a final inheritance of an immortal nature in God's everlasting kingdom. —J. F. Wilcox, in Chicago Tribune.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

The items below are sent by Br. H. Heyes of England. It is one object with us to keep our readers as fully informed as we can about current events, both in our own country and abroad. The work of the so called "Salvation Army" is a protest against the cold indifferent Pharisaism of what passes as Christianity in our times. While these enthusiasts may come very far short of presenting the gospel truth in all its glorious features, they may be the means of elevating some among the fallen masses to a higher level on the plane of morality. The piece below, in relation to the working of this class, is given more as a piece of general information as to what is transpiring in our age of transition than for indorsement. The shorter items picture some sad features in our fallen world. When will deliverance come to a groaning creation?

The French Confession address was read and spoken to by the Rev. James Hocart, one of the French representatives. He said that in no State school in France was either prayer or the reading of the Bible allowed.

MISERABLE CHILDHOOD.

I was passing the Cathedral last evening shortly after ten o'clock when I saw a miserable-looking girl, about eight or nine years of age, fast asleep on the stone ledge by the gateway. A policeman came up and drove the wretched child away. The constable stated that the mother made a living by her children in this way; he had threatened to lock her up on a former occasion. I then followed the child, and one more careworn I have never seen. On my speaking to her she wept most bitterly, and stated she was afraid to return home, as her mother beat her unless she and her little brother brought back a shilling with them by selling matches. Presently a shoeless dirty little fellow came up, about five or six years old. After giving them something to eat I passed on, wondering what could be done to mitigate the misery of these helpless little ones in Manchester. As I am not a resident perhaps some of your readers might suggest a plan.—J. W. Cooke, to Editor Manchester Guardian.

THE TREATMENT OF MISSIONARIES IN NUBIA.

Swedish missionaries in Nubia report that they have lately experienced much opposition from the Egyptian agents and officers in the Upper Nile valley, who exceedingly dislike Europeans on account of their hatred of the slave trade. A very extensive slave trade is carried on by Egyptian and Turkish merchants in the regions south and west of the Blue Nile. Troops of negroes are brought north in chains. Those who prove too weak for the journey are either abandoned without mercy to perish from hunger or wild beasts, or their drivers at once kill them. The girls are sold to the harems of wealthy Egyptians and Turks, while the men and women are disposed of as servants. There is also a steady demand for male negroes of a certain class for attendants and guardians of the Mahometan harems; but the great proportion of these men die from the injuries sustained in the preliminary training for the duties of this office.

A STRANGE INCIDENT.

A Plymouth correspondent says a strange incident is reported in that town. On Tuesday evening a young man, residing at Devonport, called upon the editor of a local paper, and begged to be informed if any telegrams had been received giving the names of Englishmen killed during the day in Alexandria. He was informed that no such message had been received. He thereupon mentioned that during the afternoon the mother and wife of a petty officer, named Rovington, serving in Alexandria, had what they regarded as a token of his death. They were sitting together in their house, talking and working, when they heard, or thought they heard, the voice of the absent son and husband say "Mother!" three times. With forebodings upon them, the brother was at once despatched to the nearest newspaper office, with the result indicated. On Wednesday, however, the relatives of Mr. Rovington received a telegram from the Admiralty to the effect that he was shot in the streets of Alexandria on Tuesday, whilst serving on police duty.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The "searchings of heart" which the Churchmen of Ardwick and Cheetham justly feel respecting the Salvation Army will, it is hoped, produce a useful result. I trust you will allow me to contribute to it.

Let it be well understood that the Salvation Army is doing no more than the Church has both the duty and the means of doing. "Where there's a will there's a way." Unhappily the alleged "stolid apathy" of the stolid masses to their own salvation is not greater than the apathy shown by the well-to-do classes who possess and manage our churches towards the salvation of all others than themselves. Take an average church congregation of 100 or 200 seat holders—not one-tenth of those are probably communicants; and, again, not a tenth of the communicants ever seem to trouble themselves (except by a money subscription) to secure to their poorer brethren the religious privileges which they enjoy themselves. But for this indifference—this want or will to make the least sacrifice to the duty of christianizing the people—the ample facts and experience accumulated in the first half of this century must have constrained Churchmen in the ensuing quarter of a century to adequate efforts to remedy their neglect. For 25 years, however, a faithful few have striven, and cried out, Vae nobis si non evangelizaverimus." They have been all along the true salvationists; they have persevered through good and ill report in spite of the opposition and discouragements by bishops and other authorities, by partisan clergy and their lay adherents. Yet the principles and methods which they propounded in 1857 and still urge forward are precisely those of the early Christians and of every missionary church, and are substantially identical with those which have achieved so wonderful a success in the Salvation Army.

I have no wish to charge upon those who have from the first strenuously opposed these principles and methods in the Church, and who for distinction's sake may be termed anti-Salvationists, the blame for the sad consequences which some of them are now hastening themselves not very judiciously to meet in a small part of this parish. All that one can now demand is that they shall renounce their former policy of antagonism to Scriptural methods and retrace their steps. The lines upon which General Booth and his army have achieved their success are substantially such as these:—

1. Absolute equality in religious privileges in the Church, without regard to social distinctions, of all, rich or poor, brought to worship with them.

2. Entire freedom of all places used for public worship on Sundays or week-days.

3. Constant weekly collections for maintaining the mission work, no importance being attached to what the bishops, Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and building committees seem to regard as the summum bonum of endowments.

4. Total rejection of the commercial system of admitting worshippers by means of payment. Imagine the complete collapse of General Booth's laboriously raised edifice which would ensue from charging his converted followers even a nominal rent of so much a quarter!

5. The relation of experiences by persons loaded with sin, and their testimony to the gifts received from God, confession of the early Church, as amongst the Salvationists, being made before the whole people, or imparted to the minister as representing the congregation.

6. Musical services hearty and congregational, instead of monotonous read psalms.

7. Processions with banners, pictures of the crucifixion, chants, and other appeals to the sense and feelings of the people.

8. Best of clergy of various orders there are laymen and laywomen, choristers, acolytes, brotherhoods and sisterhoods, all helping to the means for acting efficiently upon the mass of the people.

Such are the means which are available in the Salvation Army as in the Church, and in the English as in the Roman and Greek Churches. It is remarkable, also, to find that for the objectionable features of the Salvation Army the Anti-Salvationists are themselves mainly responsible. The sacraments unappreciated; the duty of saving oneself individually, without any regard to church or organization; the indifference to Scriptures where it directs the equality of worshippers exactly as where it directs sacraments to be complied with—these are some of the points to which exception has fairly been taken in General Booth's as in the Anti-Salvationists' programme. Whatever else may be needed to enable the Church to do the same work in its congregations and amongst those outside them as General Booth has done, one thing is certainly needful—viz., the entire rejection of that system of selfish exclusiveness, the buying of sacerdotalism, the dreary and dull services, the separation of classes, the "despising of the poor," by which the Church has in two or three generations converted the great mass of the English nation into a non-worshipping people.—A Catholic Salvationist, to Editor Manchester Guardian.

Millennial Blessedness.

Under the special government of the Lord Jesus, the whole aspect of things on the earth will be changed. The groans of creation will cease. Nature will exult in the restored favor of God. Wars, pestilence and horrid disease shall depart. The glowing descriptions of the happiness and peace of earth, including all animate nature, which we find in the prophesies of Isaiah xi., lx. 17-25, Micah ii. 1-4, Hosea ii. 18-24, will then be fully realized. The families of earth will be the families of God. All will be holy: for the Holy One shall dwell with man. "Then shall the moon be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients, gloriously." Isaiah xxiv. 23. The judicious Calvin, in his comment on Rom. viii. 21, has the following forcible remarks:—"He [Paul] does not mean that all creatures shall be partakers of the same glory with the sons of God, but that they, according to their nature, shall be participators of a better condition; for God will restore to a perfect state the world now fallen, together with mankind. But what that perfection will be as to beasts, as well as plants and metals, it is not meet nor right in us to inquire more curiously; for the chief effect of corruption is decay. Let us then be content with this simple doctrine:—that such will be the constitution and the complete order of things, that nothing will be deformed nor fading." —Ramsey.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. There are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

JOY TO THE CHRISTIAN.—AN ACROSTIC.

A. F. HAVEN.

Joy to the Christian! The Lord will come,
O rapt'rous day! no more will he roam,
Happy the time for all of the saints,
No more to suffer earth's sad complaints.

Lord of earth's glory, welcome to deserted!

We long for our trials and troubles to end.
In God do we put our confidence trust,
No grief shall be ours when we're moved from the dust.

Come then, dear Savior, to give the new birth,
Endless life, and Its joys, to the Isles of the earth.

A crown of bright glory encircles all wear,
No death, nor dark prison, nor pain shall be there,
Dear Lord, for that we do look with desire to the East.

Rather, haste the day, we dear Lord, pray,

Raise up the dead ones and receive to the East.

We hope for that joyful peace and joy.
In hope of the promise of Moses to Joshua,
No more shall fear at the nation's confusion,
Canaan will be place with right [illegible] to our home.

Dearest Life, that is, full of our God,

To all who obey and put their trust in the Lord.

A Political Forecast of the Future of Palestine.

We shall probably not have to wait above a year for a complete revolution in the constituent national elements in the East. The conquest of Egypt by England means the disintegration of the Asiatic dominions of the Ottoman Empire. If Geypt becomes independent of Turkey, it becomes the leading independent Arab state—the country destined to lead a Pan-Arabic movement against the Ottoman power—a movement which, according to a prophecy current throughout North Africa, is destined to spread from one P. to the other—from Tangier in Morocco to Tripoli in Syria. That one of the first countries which must be affected by an independent Egypt is Palestine, which lies on its border, is certain; that it must of necessity become the pivot upon which the destinies of the adjoining countries must turn, is no less self-evident. As our policy in Egypt develops—as under the pressure of circumstances it is inevitably bound to develop, the assurances of the Government notwithstanding—with the virtual administration of the country by England, the national susceptibilities of France, Russia, and Italy already strained almost beyond bearing, will find active expression. Compensations will be demanded, which must infallibly be the prelude to conferences, or wars, or both; when the European powers will have to consider French claims in regard to Syria, Italian claims to Tripoli, Russian claims to Armenia, and the problem of Palestine and the Holy Places will present itself as the first for solution. We shall not, therefore, have long to wait before the fate of Palestine will become a burning European question, and it is in anticipation of this contingency that it is desirable that the public mind should be familiarized with the idea—the only one which will probably be found practicable, regard being had to the jealousies existing among European powers on the subject—of neutralizing the Holy land under a European guarantee. But for this purpose it is necessary that it should be erected into a nationality, and thus, in the absence of any local population worthy the name, can only be done possibly by the restoration of it of the race to which it formerly belonged.

The sacred associations which are attached to this consummation naturally here present themselves, and they exist so strongly, both among Jews and Christians, that they cannot be disregarded. If we would consider the question in all its bearings. It is singular that while I have found among western Jews an inclination to shrink from this aspect of the subject, and even to oppose a movement tending to a re-occupation of their own country by the Jews, on the ground that Providence does not need human instruments to carry out His designs, is itself a fallacy, I have found no such feeling among eastern Jews who all recognize the fact that, if Palestine is to be re-occupied, it must be by their own efforts. The circumstance that the Bible contains prophecies predicting such a restoration has, indeed, been one of the principal reasons urged by enlightened Jews why it should not be attempted by practical organizations in a rational manner. According to them, God will bring it about in his own way, and at his own time, and all they have to do is to sit still and wait. I should rather have expected to have heard this not very unenlightened view propounded by a fanatical member of the Chassidim; but quite the contrary, they are fully prepared to act in the matter as reasonable beings, and do not expect miracles to be performed in their behalf—at least, none of those with whom I have conversed on the subject have such an anticipation. The fact that prophecies on the subject exist, however, does not seem to me to add weight to the suggestions which I have here ventured to offer, and which would hold good whether they existed or not. A western Jew once remarked to me that Christians looked to the Bible, found a prophecy, and then said, "Oh, here is a prophecy, let us go and fulfil it." The converse of this proposition, which was the one apparently acted upon by my friend, is, "Oh, here is a prophecy that let us go and not do this thing, for fear, if we do, we shall fulfil it," and so he set his face against any effort to restore the Jewish race to the Holy Land. The only sound and safe way to look at the question is irrespective altogether of what may be the human interpretation of mystical utterances 1500 years old, and, if it is a good thing in itself try and accomplish it. At the same time, it is not to be denied that the religious motive based upon the interpretation of certain passages of Scripture, operates strongly in the minds of a certain class of Christians who have interested themselves in the movement, no less than with a certain class of Jews. I have heard a sermon preached in a Christian church on the subject of the Jewish restoration to Palestine, on the same text taken from a chapter in Isaiah, which I have heard read in a Jewish synagogue in Galicia, upon which the Rabbi preached a sermon in exactly the same sense as the Christian priest; and I have been surprised to find that far less scruple existed among the orthodox about taking money to assist the movement than among the western Jews; but this, no doubt, arises largely from the fact that the former are apparently so much more eager for the accomplishment of the prophecy than the latter, that they wisely refrain from looking a gift-horse in the mouth. I have found among them, nevertheless, strong suspicions of conversion-projects underlying Christian munificence in this matter, which is not to be wondered at, considering the aggressive tendency of certain missionary societies, and the means which are sometimes resorted to, and which have come to my personal knowledge, for making converts; and this has been taken advantage of by persons opposed to the movement in many instances—as it appears to me, quite unnecessarily. If there were any moral obligations incumbent on Jews, forming a colony with the assistance of Christian funds, to become Christians, subscriptions from Christians to the Mansion House Committee and other relief associations for the refugees the other day, should have been refused. A colony of 45 families has already been organized by the "Syrian Colonization Fund," of which the president, Lord Shaftesbury, is also president of the Society for the Conversion of the Jews. At the request of the Rabbi, his lordship purchased for the colony a handsomely-bound scroll of the Law, which, in his unavoidable absence, was presented to the Rabbi by Lady Strangford; and the former, on the occasion, read an appropriate chapter in Hebrew from the Bible. It must be admitted that the Rabbi of a highly orthodox congregation, receiving on behalf of that congregation a copy of the Torah from the president of the Society for the Conversion of the Jews, is an extremely novel and most significant event. If no conversions result from it,—and it rests with the Jews themselves to see that they don't,—a very valuable precedent will have been created, which will go far to destroy the existing prejudice against taking subscriptions from Christians for the establishment of Jewish colonies in Palestine.

It is likely, however, that this colony which is to be established in North Syria, together with another, consisting of 288 families, organized by the central committee of Roumania, representing 42 sub-committees, and which has started for land selected for them on the plain of Hottin, near Lake Tiberias; and a third, land for which has been purchased by Mr Lewontin, president of the Russian Society of the "Advanced Guard"; and a fourth, consisting of Russian students, who have selected land in Syria,—will all find serious obstacles thrown in their way by the Turkish Government, which is firmly opposed to colonization in any part of—Syria or Palestine. And it is not until the changes to which I have alluded alter entirely the existing conditions, that, in my opinion, any colony should be attempted to be established in either of those countries, for fear of their being overtaken by disaster, in the by no means improbable event of this region becoming a theatre of war.—Blackwood's Magazine for

Communications.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 15, '82.

Editor Restitution:

I am glad to see the brief letter from Dr. Petavel in the last issue of THE RESTITUTION, and that you have hope of receiving other communications from him. He is a ripe scholar, a man of decided ability, and an acknowledged leader in the theological reformatory which you advocate, in Switzerland and among French-speaking nations.

I am pleased also, to observe that you have taken notice of the case of Rev. Charles Byse, of Brussels. Mr. Byse is also a scholar of extraordinary attainments in the ancient and Oriental languages, as well as in the modern languages of Europe. He is in the prime of life, thoroughly evangelical, and of a sweet Christian spirit. I spent a day with him last summer, at his house, when he was on the eve of his trial for the heresy of owning Christ as the only source of eternal life to believers. I am not surprised to hear of his condemnation, nor am I really sorry for it; for I believe that the Master will bring great good out of it, though it may work great personal hardship to him for the present. He is not the man to flinch or to prove false to his convictions. I wish we had more such men among those who are more than half convinced of the truth for which he is suffering martyrdom.

I was very much interested in the sketch of Rev. J. F. Wilcox's discourse on "The Survival of the Fittest," at Chicago, which you reprinted, and I was hoping to have the opportunity of reading the whole series. But it does not surprise me so much that the Chicago Tribune "could not find room" for the second, as that it should have found room for the first in the series. The political, as well as the religious papers, do not venture to unnecessarily offend the popular prejudice in favor of man's natural immortality. I hope, however, you will be able to get hold of the subsequent discourses of Mr. Wilcox, if he shall be permitted to deliver them, and that you will give them to us through your excellent paper.

I am glad to read in your last number a letter from the brethren of the Church of God in this city, expressing a desire for a better acquaintance, a more practical sympathy, and a more earnest co-operation among the brethren of like faith that are "scattered abroad." I do not worship with them, for my duty seems to call me elsewhere, but I desire to second this expression with all my heart. I am praying and laboring to this end as I am able. This was one of the chief objects of the symposium in my work, The Life Everlasting, of which you have so kindly spoken. But I do hope that this movement will be carried out with a very liberal Christian charity toward all who may agree with us in the main, though they may not yet have reached as definite conclusions as we have upon minor points. This is no time for those who are one in heart and desire and hope, to disfellowship each other and pull apart because of varying views, all of which may be more or less crude and imperfect in regard to external forms and the interpretation of obscure and doubtful passages. I am greatly pleased with the catholic spirit of your paper, and hope all your readers will second it as cordially as I do.

I have just received Rev. Mr. Byse's protest against the unjust action of his synod. I take pleasure in translating it for THE RESTITUTION, for I am sure you will be glad to publish it.

Yours, in the faith and labor of the Gospel of our blessed Lord.

J. H. PETTINGELL.

To the Friends of the Belgian Evangelical Society.

The Belgian Evangelical Society, in publishing its condemnation of my "views" in its 14th report, has certainly misled those who have no other source of information.

It would seem by the terms of the resolution passed by the synod, that the heresy of which I am accused, concerns, among other things, "the nature of the redemptive work of Christ," and that my conception of Christianity "is in direct antagonism to the teaching of Scripture as understood by different evangelical churches, and as set forth in our confession of faith."

Now I most earnestly protest against both these allegations. My teaching has given no ground for the first; and not a particle of evidence has been adduced in support of the second. I believe firmly and joyfully in redemption by the expiatory death of Jesus Christ.

It is, perhaps, a dextrous but a serious imputation to charge me with opposition to the cross of Christ. For to be true and just, the ordinary and positive designation of "life in Christ" should have been given to my theory, instead of the indefinite and exaggerated terms by which it is characterized.

The second allegation is no more exact. There is no "direct antagonism" between my views and those of other Evangelical Christians. I consider myself as fully in accord with them in all that is essential.

I recognize with them, that according to the Scriptures, there is no possible salvation but by Jesus Christ, the only Son of God. The majority, no doubt, still think that this salvation consists in the felicity, according to being made miserable by sin, but already immortal by nature. I believe, on my part, that it consists, first of all, in the life—the spiritual, blessed, eternal existence accord to sinners on their way to destruction.

There are two ways, sufficiently distinct, of conceiving of the final lot of the wicked, and no impartial arbiter would see in these two interpretations of the Scriptures on this point, any "direct antagonism." But on the contrary, both of them are in "direct antagonism" to that system that represents man as good, and in no need of a Savior. And it is our view, as I endeavored to show, that most truly agrees with the letter and spirit of the sacred Scripture.

What I preach is, in my opinion, the very gospel, the original and eternal gospel, the gospel better understood than in the past, and consequently relieved of those foreign elements that hindered its work of enlightenment and sanctification. In fact this conception seems new only because it has been too long ignored, and reconquers itself to the heart, the reason, and the conscience of man.

Indeed at the very moment when the Synod is stigmatizing and repudiating this view so rashly en bloc, without daring to call it by its true name, or to oppose to it the old dogma of eternal torment, it is gaining most important victories in various parts of the world.

As to the confession of faith of Guy de Bres, the doctrine of conditional immortality cannot rightly be rejected in its name. For according to this monument of the faith of our fathers, the wicked "will be made immortal in order that they may be tormented in the eternal fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Art. xxxvii. If God immortalizes the wicked at that day, that he may pour out upon them "terrible vengeance," it logically follows that they are not immortal by birth. Compare Art. xx. ....to the end, that by him (his Son) we might have immortality and eternal life." Without Christ then we would not have immortality.

It will be seen then that I have reason to complain of public accusations in terms so unjustifiable that tend to bring discredit upon my ministry, and upon the cause so dear to my heart. If a belief in immortality by Christ only, as has Christianity itself in the first century, is a heresy especially to be opposed (Acts xxviii. 22), I love to think that noise made about it will induce many to seriously examine it.

Judge ye, my brethren and sisters, whether I am right or wrong in giving you the simple and natural interpretation of the teaching of Jesus and his apostles—especially of John and Paul. Judge ye whether I am wrong in teaching my flock what I, as their pastor, believe to be the truth. Only do not condemn me before having heard and known what I have done." John vii. 51.

Permit me to add that the church of Bolliard St. has just this last evening proclaimed my right and defended my liberty as well as their own, in voting by a majority of 25 to 5, to separate itself voluntarily from the Evangelical Society. By this separation, to which it has been driven by this ill-advised action of the Synod, it takes again the position of absolute independence, in which it lived and prospered for fourteen years.

Respected members and friends of the Evangelical Society, your sympathy and your esteem are not to us a thing of indifference. But there is something that I regard more highly, "Il nous, Domine Jesu, tribunal subpella."

CHARLES BYSE, Pastor.

Brussels 47 Rue du Prince Royal.

"To thy tribunal, Lord Jesus, I appeal."

An Admonition Easily Understood.

Take heed how, and what, ye hear.—Jesus.

1. The wondrous love of God to the world may be admired and recommended by the many, but now few accept the necessity imposed on them for faith and "the obedience of faith," to avoid perdition! Rom. xvi. 25; 2 Cho. ii. 10.

2. Many claim to rejoice in the first advent, and rely on Jesus' work for pardon, peace and everlasting life, while they yet revolt and rebel against the doctrine of his second coming as an affront to them!

3. Christians claim to believe in "the baptism of the Spirit," as at Pentecost, and its ordinary gifts (1 Cor. xii.); yet how few accept of baptism after the example of Jesus, "who came to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him." Matt. iii. 14-17; Luke iii. 21.

4. Another class claim to have hope of a reward at "the resurrection of the just," but disclaim the next clause of all the same texts as to "the resurrection of the unjust. Matt. xi. 22-24; John v. 29; Acts xxiv. 14-15; 2 Peter ii. 9.

5. Some see that man, in every age, from Eden on, to ours, has been held amenable to God, and that the Gospel of Christ teaches us that "unto whom much is given, much is required," (Luke xii. 45-48), yet they deny or ignore, and try to argue away, "the condemnation" taught in John iii. 19-21: "This is the condemnation that light is come, and men love darkness and hate the light."

See the parable of the talents, Matt. xxiv. 14-30, and note the destiny of the "wicked and unfaithful." Is it piety, or even prudence, to brave such a doom? Does not the Gospel "not gather of every kind"? and when brought to shore are not "the bad cast away"? Matt. xiii. 47-49.

6. Another may "confess and teach the Lord Jesus" in a general way, as having "the pre eminence," while yet, as I am told, he insists that Joseph—a poor mortal like ourselves, and all alike lost, except as we shall be redeemed—was his father! Please read again: the record that God has given of his one begotten Son," John i. 14; 2 Pet. i. 17; Luke i. 30-35; 1 John v. 11-12.

The admonition is, that we take both parts of all such passages as are alike tenth. The doubt and disclaimer of the second part may expose our want of faith in the first part. Does it not show that what passes for such faith is rather an educational impression, a mere think so?

Has not God as guilded his word above all his name"? Ps. cxxxviii. 2; Isa. xiii. 21; Matt. v. 17-19.

The result of adding to or taking from his word is "written for our admonition; wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. x. 11-12; Rev. xxii. 18-19.

Lovingly, in hope of blessing on both you and poor me.

J. B. COOK.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 21, 1882.

Dear Brother U.:

Your kind letter was received. I send by this mail all the bouquets I have on hand, hope they will reach you by Christmas. I leave the price to your judgment, and shall be satisfied. I shall send a large card for yourself, also one for Bro. Chaplin next mail, as a present, which I hope you will enjoy.

I presented Mrs. Wallace, wife of our Minister from Constantinople two bouquets, and received the following letter which I copy, that you may see how much she is interested in the Holy Land.

My Dear Mrs. Davis:

I have this moment received your charming present of flowers from the Holy City. They are much the best and largest grasping we have seen, and I thank you heartily. Often as I look at them I shall think of the delightful visit we have had here, and the friends whom we have made, whom we shall not forget, and by whom we hope to be remembered.

Receive assurance of my cordial friendship, for I am, dear Mrs. Davis, your friend sincerely and truly.

SUSAN R. WALLACE.

P. S.—Will you not write me a letter, telling how you get on through the winter? It will always give me pleasure to learn of the prosperity of our American colony. S. R. W.

It is seldom I think that any visitor to this city has the honor paid them that Gen. Wallace and wife have received. On Saturday a German prince arrived, but no one knew it—Gen. W. is the lion hero.

I hope to send the cards next mail; am very busy. I like my new residence very much.

I am truly your friend.

A. E. DAVIS.

[The card bouquets came to hand safely, and are really beautiful. Our friends who have asked concerning the prices will see that Mrs. Davis sets no prices on these flowers, but whatever you are pleased to send her will be used for benevolent purposes.]

The Astronomer Royal for Scotland (Professor Synith,) states that, the Comet now visible (Oct. 6,) is very possibly the comet of 1843 and 1880 returned before its time (having been retarded in the solar corona), and therefore to return again still more quickly, and soon to be absorbed by the sun, with effects possibly serious to the inhabitants of the earth. This calculation has since been verified by the Astronomer Royal for England (Professor Prootor). May we not have in this expected event one of the causes of the wondrous natural phenomena foretold in connection with the closing days of this dispensation?

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first published. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read by so many men and women.

We see, people intelligent enough to buy, read, and like the Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for human kind; the events, the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable toys, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned first in Nassau-hydra concerning persons and affairs the Sun prides a practical testing from the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the white as well as about the small fish. In the face of direct, so plainly and fearlessly as when supported by General approval.

The Sun has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble but the Sun is interested in his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can shape influence to be done him. No man, no set association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the present overwhelming popular verdict against bourbonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public rascals.

All life's is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the Sun is the best religious paper ever published, because its Christianity is modified with sense. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers value nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the Sun discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a clear, bold, independent, and interesting newspaper, full of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a champion for the cause of honest government, a resolute foe of corruption and Bourbonism in Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life are essential for final salvation.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 12.

Prelude.—An exposition of Isa. xix. 25, "Blessed (be) Egypt my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." History of Egypt. 4. Babylon's period—5. Egypt under Persia—6. Egypt under Greece. 7. Egypt under Rome—8. Egypt under Arabia.

Prelude.—Explanation of Isa. xix. 25. Relative to the future of the earth, the Bible enunciates one central thought, around which all others, as a family, revolve. Thus speaks Jehovah, "But (as) truly (as) I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. xiv. 21. During the age, or reign (official) of subjugation shall there dwell on the earth subjugated nations, so that Messiah will thus be the reigning King of reigning kings, and living Lord of living lords" Rev. xix. 16. That being established, our inquiry will then be, What nations, what their territory, and their rank? These questions we shall consider, as they are elements of the Eastern problem. It is not simply, what shall be their position and agency in the coming struggle: but what shall be their subjugated positions? We desire (as far as the Bible will afford light) to follow those nations into and through the official reign; into the joint reign on the new earth. The destinies of certain distinct nations will afford us data.

Three families are named in Isa. xix. 25. Three national families are placed prominently before us. By their condition we decide the state of the world at that period. What is (or of) those three nations? "A Blessing on Egypt my people, Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." The nature of the blessing here pronounced is not stated. It will, however, be suited to the dignity and power of the Donor. This passage will be more fully examined when we speak of Israel and Assyria. One general remark will, perhaps, be in place, viz., the relationship existing between these three nations.

For many centuries the land of Israel was the Switzerland of the East; especially was it the bone of contention between its western and eastern neighbors. Egypt and Assyria, each conquering, claimed the land of promise, in its turn. Such severe chastisements were allowed by Jehovah for Israel's transgressions. Their success filled them with national pride. "My river is mine, I have made it for myself," says Pharaoh-hophra. "Is not this great Babylon that I have made by the might of my power?" No sooner uttered than their robes were taken from them, and they were driven from their thrones. Egypt became a base kingdom and Assyria ceased to be a nationality. Great national sins are expiated by severe national judgments. For the abuse of God's family and his inheritance, they were first required to pay the penalty. After that it was proper that they should receive pay nationally for any service they had rendered.

What has Egypt received for the home given to the Hebrews, from the elevation of Joseph to the commencement of their bondage? It is the land of which we are speaking and not the race of Ham. If the whole earth is to be full of Jehovah's brightness, Egypt being a part, must have its portion. So also will the land of Assyria.

4. Egypt under Babylon.—Of this period, but little, in addition to our previous statements, is required. During 40 years after its humiliation by Nebuchadnezzar, its trials were severe; some of its inhabitants were carried into Babylon; others into the various provinces. Jehovah's proprietorship is distinctly seen. It was Nebuchadnezzar's wages for his doing God's work against Tyre "Egypt is mine," says Jehovah, and I will give it to the king of Babylon. This is Egypt's first period of humiliation. Her proud spirit trembled under God's sore judgments. Her lofty mountains were swift witnesses against her.

5. Egypt under Persia. This period extends to the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great (B. C. 332). It begins (B. C. 525) when Egypt was taken from Babylon by Cambyses. It was a period of great oppression, exhibiting the continued judgments of God for their former pride and idolatry, fulfilling the prediction, "There shall be no more a prince (native) of Egypt." Ezek. xxx. 13. God's jealousies are extended over many generations.

6. Egypt under Greece.—This period extends from the conquest of Persia by Alexander the Great to its overthrow by the Romans, B. C. 30. This period is one of very considerable interest. Its change of masters was quite favorable to the valley of the Nile. So happy were the Egyptians that they viewed Alexander as a savior rather than a conqueror. On the death of Alexander a new dynasty was inaugurated, the dynasty of the Ptolemies. The government, language, administration, philosophy, sciences, arts, literature, and its religion, in part, became Greek. The court of the Ptolemies, however, was not pagan in the common acceptation of that term. Under the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, it became a distinguished seat of learning and refinement. Under his patronage, the museum and library were founded, and the Hebrew Scriptures were translated into Greek, called the Septuagint (because it was made by 72 persons). Manetho, under that reign, drew up his Egyptian history. Under his successors the Egyptian monarch was much extended. Their conquests extended at times into Ethiopia and over southwestern Asia, including the land of Israel.

After the reigns of Euergetes, Philopater, Epiphanes, Philometer, Euergetes II., Soter II., Cleopatra (B. C. 106), Alexander (B. C. 87), Nova Dionysus (B. C. 51), and of Cleopatra II., following the battle of Actium (B. C. 30), it became a Roman province, under a Roman governor, and of the contemptible but of the equestrian rank—a base kingdom.

We cannot close this period of Egyptian history, without calling attention to the visible workings of its supreme Governor—the power behind the throne. Noah's three sons, had, during the ages immediately succeeding the flood, and after the confusion of tongues, taken distant homes: Asia, Africa, and Europe; but at the time of which we are now writing, their descendants had become somewhat mixed up. This was more particularly true of Egypt. As the soil of Egypt was formed of particles wafted there by the waters of the Nile from more than one-third of Africa; so did its early civilization draw the inquisitive of all races to see and learn its laws, government, and its architectural wonders.

Egypt, originally Hamitic, having for centuries been Shemitic, now, under Alexander and his successors, becomes Japhetic or European. Out of three races a new Egyptian is created; a new man, destined to another sphere, is put in possession of this beautiful valley, this second paradise. Who cannot discern the hand of God in these great ethnological changes? Men, in their various attributes, must be adapted to their work. Idolatrous Egypt, as it existed under the Pharaohs (crocodiles), could never have carried out the designs of Jehovah under the twelve Ptolemies, B. C. 332, to B. C. 30. These three centuries accomplished a great work in moulding Egyptian character for a new and more elevated position.

This change had to do more with the religious thought of the nation, than with its physical and political ideas. From the most debasing of nature worship, such as deifying dogs, cats and crocodiles, they were to learn the character of the one true God. Such new thoughts required a new man. This new man was a mixture of Hebrew, Macedonian, and the old Egyptian stock.

Alexander founded a new city (Alexandria) in Egypt. To this new city of European architecture, Alexander invited citizens of all nations. Among those solicited to become residents of Alexandria were Jews, who were allowed to come with their religion, given by God to Moses. Nearly 1,000,000 Jews were carried into Egypt. They increased to one million, a half; had a temple and worship. This new worship changed the religious character of Egypt. Egypt was [illegible] translation of the Hebrew Bible (Septuagint) from Greek (which language was almost universal) of God's ancient revelations could be read by all nations. God was preparing a people in Egypt to teach all nations the future gospel of his beloved Son. This was the Lord's appointed period. During the six hundred years of the captivity of the Ptolemies, Judea was under the dominion of Egypt, such an element must have had great power in shaping religious thought.

Ptolemy Philadelphus made Judea exceedingly prosperous. He released 100,000 captive Jews. With a large fleet in the Mediterranean and one in the Red Sea, Egypt became the mart of all nations. This period covers that of Apocrypha, and for the wonderful exploits of the Maccabees.

Under Ptolemy V., surnamed Epiphanes, (Illustrious), the Jews in Egypt as well as of Judea, suffered a severe persecution. This persecution tended to scatter the seeds of correct religious thought.

7. Egypt under Rome.—This period extends from the battle of Actium (B. C. 30) to the conquest by Omar, the Mohammedan Caliph, A. D. 640—670 years. It is a period of very considerable interest, since it covers the first six and one-half centuries of the Christian era. We have seen that the land of Egypt, under the Macedonian dynasty, had in its soil a mixture of the three families: that of Ham, of Shem, and of Japheth. This mixture of the races progressed under the Roman empire. Egypt, being the half-way house; the world's hotel; the national toll-gate; the world's seminary; the land of monuments and wonders; the world's bazaar, was visited by strangers of all nationalities and of all varieties of religious thought. As a nation it was still Hamitic, Shemitic, Japhetic, Roman governor of the equestrian order. Two features in this period of Egyptian history claim attention. 1. That it became a house of refuge; after that a house of bondage; 2. God first made Egypt a house of refuge for his Son, when his life was hunted by Herod. When they (the wise men) were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth unto Joseph in a dream, saying, "Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt; and was there until the death of Herod." In this was fulfilled that which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet (Hos. xi. 1) saying, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son." Matt. ii, 13-15. Why flee into Egypt? Three reasons may be given. 1. God claimed a special proprietorship over Egypt. b. His worship was there established, and consequently a home was provided for his Son among his own household. c. Egypt was the most convenient land beyond Herod's jurisdiction. More also the gospel of Christ was to work a reformation in the religious ideas of the Egyptians; that the land in which idolatry had its origin should be the foster-mother of the Christian system, agrees with the method of divine providence. During the second century, the gospel exerted great power over Egypt. The residence of the Jews in that country prepared the Egyptian mind to receive the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, but the paganism of the Roman empire (the ruler of Egypt during this period) had so far corrupted the pure doctrines of Christ that the Egyptians saw but little in the Christian worship but a mixture of Judaism and Paganism. Long before the birth of Mohammed, the Greek empire (whose capital was Constantinople) patronized a Christian worship that had but little in common with the doctrines of Christ and his apostles. Image worship had become very general. During this period (near its close) the Bishop of Rome became the head of the apostate church. Egypt was being prepared for another revolution in her religious thoughts. During this Roman period of Egyptian history her political and her educational interests were on the decline; and, with the [illegible] productions to sustain the [illegible] Christ was crucified, also God was evidently but not [illegible] dissatisfied with his character of E[illegible] Egyptian [illegible] and was rearing a [illegible] neighboring power to effect another great moral, social, and national revolution. To this extraordinary change we are prepared to turn our thoughts.

ABDUL MEDJID A MADMAN.

Forced by Excesses of His Father and His Brother were.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 28.—Abdul Medjid has softening of the brain. He is crazy like his brother Mourad, who is to-day shut up in the Palace of Tcheragan, and like his father, the predecessor of Abdul Aziz. His monomania is the fear of being dethroned, as his brother and his uncle were, and, perhaps, assassinated, as he believes the latter was. I have already told you what I think of that so called assassination.

Three days ago Fuad Pasha was ordered to the Palace, where he is still kept a prisoner. Fuad is the youngest among the Mutsahls of the empire. In the last war he distinguished himself by his bravery. About a fortnight ago he was chosen by the Sultan to convey in his name to the Emperor of Austria the diamond badge of the Osmanli. Fuad himself received this order, and at Vienna, I believe, that of St. Etienne. He is, therefore, not only one of the great personages of the Empire, but one of the favorites of the Sultan.

Great was the astonishment of Fuad at his arrest. He angrily demanded to know what was the charge against him, and bitterly reproached the inconstancy of a sovereign who one day treat in such a manner the highest dignitaries of the empire and his best friends. Fuad was told that he had been denounced by a [illegible]ish Minister Pasha, the [illegible] Mussulmans, [illegible] Greek [illegible] Christ is becoming his own lawgiver, and [illegible] but now transformed by the caprice of the Sultan into a cavalry General, charged with the duty of organizing and commanding two squadrons of Circassians! The thing is absurd: it is the idea of a lunatic."

And he spoke the truth. Dr. Kiadilian, whose tragic death and civil funeral made so much noise two weeks ago in Constantinople, was several times called to the palace of the Sultan as the most distinguished physician of the country. He announced formally that the Sultan was suffering from softening of the brain, and that the disease was progressing rapidly. He attributed the malady to excessive dissipation, just as was the case with the Sultan's father and brother.

The mania of the Sultan's father was a superstitious dread of cats. For him every cat was a messenger of certain death. Consequently he commanded that all cats should be slaughtered without mercy. He also had another delusion. Every curtain and every other piece of drapery or upholstery touched by the hand of a foreigner he regarded as accursed, sure to bring bad luck. In terror he would cry out, "Quick! quick! Take that away and throw it into the sea!" What quantities of curtains, napkins, tablecloths, and textile fabrics of all sorts were pitched into the Bosphorus!

Mourad's madness is of quite another sort. He imagines that he is constantly receiving ghostly armies. He puts on his uniform and his long boots and struts about delivering orders in a stentorian voice.

It was not long before the prediction of Dr. Kiadilian was verified. For the birthday of the Prophet, the Sultan had sent out invitations to the Sheik-ul-Islam and the Grand Vizier, but when the time came he had completely forgotten the fact. At the appointed hour the two greatest dignitaries of the empire presented themselves at the Palace, and were announced. The Sultan was informed of their presence.

"What!" he exclaimed, "the Grand Vizier and the Sheik! They have undoubtedly come to announce my deathwarrant. Let them be questioned."

A chamberlain went to them and asked what they desired. They replied that they had come upon the invitation of the Sultan. The chamberlain returned with the answer.

"Oh, very well," said the Sultan. I understand them perfectly. You [illegible] will send [illegible]

[illegible] Ottoman Bey, First Chamberlin since the death of Hamid Pasha, to go and interrogate the Sheik and the Grand Vizier. The latter, greatly astonished at such a reception, repeated the answer which he had given before. Osman returned and told the Sultan the same story. The Sultan, striking his forehead, suddenly recollected his invitation, and admitted his guests; but not knowing how to get out of the difficulty, he pretended to be indisposed. The Sheik-ul-Islam, affecting out of courtesy, to believe in this explanation, replied: "Non inferior hæredita guidicio"—that is to say, "These things proceed from the weather." But to a Turkish ear the phrase might also mean an insinuation that dethronement would come in time.

"Ah!" cried the Sultan, "I knew well that you came to dethrone me! Quick, arrest them, and let them be questioned!" Everybody understood the position of the Sultan's mind, and the matter ended there.

This is not the first time that a misfortune of this kind has happened to Fuad. A short time ago a boy brought him a letter full of insulting language about the Sultan. A similar letter was sent at the same time to Osman Pasha and to Hafiz Pash, Chief of Police. Fuad, from a sense of duty, sent his letter to the Sultan, who immediately had him arrested and brought before a court martial. The court martial investigated the matter and discovered the proof that the boy had been paid by people of the palace to deliver the letters in question. The matter was dropped.

The element of it all is this: There is [illegible] Palace a ring of intriguers [illegible] their speculations upon the [illegible] of the sovereign, and [illegible] [illegible] Turkish [illegible] kept for [illegible] had a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE DEPARTED YEAR.

Another year has numbered its days, and gone, with all other circling periods that the shining spheres have measured off on the chronometer of the skies since creation's birth, into the soundless abysms of that past eternity whose stupendous cycles stretch backward, not only beyond the building of universes, but infinitely farther into that measureless vastness baffling all finite comprehension as duration retreats toward the unbeginning.

Its seasons have been like the seasons of all other years. With its sunshine and vernal showers it wooed the gardened earth, till it put on its bridal robes of floral lovoliness, and wreathed its virgin temples with a coronal into which the faultless white of the lily and the bluslings of the queenly rose entwined their matchless tintings. In its summer radiancy the wavy wealth of golden harvests covered the countless fields, and birds, that built their homes amid the gorgeousness of blossomed trees, carolled with their new-fledged nestlings their matin songs when the dawn colored the East with hues of softest light, or trilled vesper notes as somber twilight with shadowy curtains closed out the vanishing rays of the departed sun. Then autumn came, and ripened fruits and the harvest home gladdened the multitudinous rural abodes. But when the hours of light grew shorter, and the hours of darkness longer, the cold that "cometh out of the north" [illegible] the de- [illegible] till the [illegible] treats toward the unbeginning.

[illegible] changed to [illegible] this imperial [illegible] wealth of Coloring was but as the rainbow grandeur that girdles the robes of the storm. The skirmishing blasts of an invading winter scattered the frail magnificence of leafy gorgeousness to mingle with humbler frost-blighted beauties into the soil-dust of earth. The birds chanted a farewell requiem over the dead blossoms, and winged their flight to the summer lands in southern zones. The winter came with storm and snow and icy sleet, and the year, that had grown old, departed and was entombed in the past. As we drop a parting tear, and write its epitaph, we remember that many other loved forms have been coffined and hidden away. We have seen rose-bug infancy blighted and given back to the earth with the frost-discolored petals of the garden's queen of flowers. We have seen virgin loveliness fade out from fairest cheeks, and lustrous eyes grow dim: then we have seen the fair slumberer placed in a chamber of decay, and then heard the falling sounds of the tolling bell supplemented with the dread echoes of the falling clods upon the lowered casket's covering. We have seen the noble brow of youthful manhood grow pale, and the strong hands folded across the breast over a stilled heart. We have seen this pride of form placed where dust will go to dust, earth to earth, and ashes to ashes. We have looked ere the coffin was closed for the last time. We have seen an agonized group gathered around for the final leave-taking. That grief-stricken company was looking into a mother's face. The complacent smiles had vanished—displaced by the sadly solemn lineaments that the King of terrors had sealed upon the cold marble forehead. Bereaved hearts then realized, as never before, what a priceless jewel was lost in buried mother-love.

O year entombed with memories of thee come back the fonder memories of the loved and lost and buried: gems that earth now embosoms with her unmined treasures of hidden preciousness. O departed year! thou hast taken thy days of brightness with thee into the reyless night to give them back no more. And thou hast taken the lights of our households and of our lives, and left a blackness of darkness to shadow our pathway till it blends with the still deeper gloom that mantles our grave.

And with days departed and with vanished friends how many have buried irrevocable opportunities of serving God, of promoting the Redeemer's cause, and of benefiting poor fallen humanity. How many have lost sight of the crown of endless life to look enviously on a withering fading wreath that human hands have plaited for some frail mortal's head. How many have withdrawn their gaze from the gem-built walls, and pearly gates of the city of gold to covet some structure of perishableness that purse-proud pride has built for last-day ruins. How many, to look upon glinting tinsels, have suffered that eternal weight of glory—inexpressibly transcending description though intensified hyperbole be taxed to bear the burden of meaning—to pass from their view.

O departed year! thy graves will not give back the coffined infant though it be the mother's first-born and the father's only child. They will not restore the fair young faces whose images love has photographed on some remaining living hearts. Nor can the widow's impassioned outbursts of grief, nor the orphan's piercing, wailing cries evoke to life and companionship the husband and father that passed with thy hours away. Nor will the awful, engulphing past ever give back the days that lights and shadows measured off to fill out that lost mystery whose symbols we mark—1882. Nor though we weep more bitter tears than Esau wept over the lost birthright, can we ever re-possess our lost opportunities. If our faithfulness would have placed additional stars in our crown, and if unfaithfulness has forfeited the sparkling brilliants, they are lost through "a sad waste for which no after-thrift atones." Let it be our care lest the final loss be the crown itself. We borrow a verse for the mourner.

"We know whence the shadow comes o'er you now,
Ye have strewn the dust on the sunny brow!
Ye have given the lovely to earth's embrace—
She has taken the fairest of beauty's race,
With their laughing eyes and festal crown,
They are gone from amongst you in sheaves down."

And in partly borrowed language we write an epitaph for the departed year.

"Rest in thy grave thou lifeless year,
With withered joys and sorrows rent;
And we will shed the mourner's tear
Repentance upon thy frozen breast,
Yes, heap the sod—it matters not
How deep and dark thy sleep may be,
Yet grateful memory marks the spot,
And lingering oft shall think of thee.
—Shall think of thee, thy deeds of love,
Thy ample space for mirth and woe,
Thy calls to wait for Christ's return,
Thy warning—
Thee, buried
Eternal darkness

We write the [illegible] mental shafts of [illegible] ern to the new [illegible] ties, its joys and [illegible] deaths and its burials [illegible] phenomena. It is [illegible] mystic cycle—the time of the end. It may bring the day for opening the graves, and emancipating the prisoners of death. The buried saints may be the "Angel-equals"—isangeloi—before the year shall close. If so, O hail, happy day, that brings the resurrection, the incorruptibility, the immortality, and the glory revealed. Whether there come death or come life, whether there come burial or come resurrection, may we all number the days of this new year by applying our hearts unto wisdom.

Typographical Errors.

In the address to the friends of the Belgian Evangelical Society by Chas. Byse translated from the French by J. H. Pettingell for our paper the following errors escaped correction. For—"According to being made miserable"—read "according to beings made miserable" 14 lines from the top of the page: instead of "his Christianity" read—"Was Christianity" in the 4th paragraph from the end. And in the second line of the protest—"condemnation" read "condemnation."

On Saturday, December 30, Count von Wimpffr, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Paris, committed suicide. At an early hour in the morning of Jan. 1, the celebrated French statesman, Leon Gambetta, died in the same city after some hours of extreme suffering. And on Monday Jan. 1, Hon. E. Allen fell dead in the White House in Washington at President Arthur's grand New Year's reception.

OBITUARY.

DIED.—Near Morenci, Lenawee Co., Mich., November 25, 1882, Homer Bell, son of William and Loretta Bell, aged 2 years and six months.

Little Homer was an only child, and his death was very sudden and unexpected, and it fell with crushing weight upon the hearts of fond and doting parents. But we look forward to the resurrection of the dead, and to the land that shall know no blight.

Little Homer, he has left us
And is sleeping in the street;
There to wait till Jesus calls him,
When he comes from death to save.

Words of comfort were spoken by Elder T. C. Chase; then we followed our darling to the church-yard where we left him in the silent home of the dead.

Youths' Column.

If Thou Hast Crushed a Flower.

If thou hast crushed a flower,
The root may not be blighted;
If thou hast quenched a lamp,
Once more it may be lighted;
But pin thy harp on on thy lute,
The string which thou hast broken,
Shall never in sweet sound again
Give to thy touch a token!

If thou hast loosed a bird
Whose voice of song could cheer thee,
Still, still he may be won
From the skies to warble near thee:
But if upon the troubled sea
Thou hast thrown a precious pearl,
Hope not that wind or wave will bring
The treasure back when needed.

If thou hast blighted a star,
The summer's breath is in alliance,
And its cheeks to fet—as glow
Through the leaves their flowers revealing
But if thou hast a capo'erthrown
With a bright flower in its dewdrop lover
Shall earth give back the fair child's wealth
To cool thy parch'd lips' fever!

The heart—like that crop,
If thou waste the love it bore thee;
And like that jewel gone,
Which the deep hath to store thee;
And like that string of harp or lute
Whose low sweet sound is scattered:—
Gently, oh gently touch the clouds,
To look for ever shattered.

Sir Isaac Newton and His Dog.

Sir Isaac Newton's temper, it is said, was so equal and mild that no accident could disturb it; a remarkable instance of which is related as follows: Sir Isaac had a favorite little dog, which he called "Diamond." Being one evening called out of his study into the next room, Diamond was left behind. When Sir Isaac returned, having been absent but a few minutes, he had the mortification to find that Diamond had overturned a lighted candle among some papers, the nearly finished labor of many years, which were soon in flames, and almost consumed to ashes. This loss, from Newton's advanced age, was irreparable; but without at all punishing the dog, he exclaimed, "Oh, Diamond, Diamond, you little know the mischief you have done!"

Rudeness Reproved.

If a mild reproof could reach offenders of the type described below, the one administered in this case ought to be sufficient. But these persons who can coolly annoy others through a [illegible] entertainment are likely to need more than a hint to cure them.

The party thus offended, consisted of a young lady and two young gentlemen who affected all that indifference for the delightful music, and for the [illegible] group them. [illegible] Underwood last week. I hope they will arrive safely. I did them in a great hurry and had but just time to mail them. I think I am the busiest woman in Jerusalem. I scarcely take time to eat any food.

[illegible] superior [illegible] a mark of high-breeding. For, doubt it not as we may, there are many otherwise good-hearted people who think it elegant to evince the least feeling or sentiment at a public concert.

When all was over, the lady alluded to above, leaned across one seat, and catching the eye of the girl, who was pretty and well-dressed, said in her blandest, gentlest voice, "May I speak with you one moment?"

"Certainly," said the young lady, with a flattered, pleased look, bending forward.

"I only wish to say," said the interrogator, "that I trust in the whole course of your life, you will not suffer so great a degree of annoyance as you have inflicted on a large party of lovers of music this evening."

Thy Sins Be Forgiven Thee.

There is something in this form of expression, used as it is by the Savior in the healing of the sick, that is very suggestive.

Sin brought death into the world; disease leads to death; when the sins are forgiven, disease departs, and the death that is threatened the man, because of individual transgressions, will not, if he walk in God's way, fall upon him.

To the poor man, palsied in every limb, who was brought on a bed to Jesus, it was as easy to say, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," as to say, "Arise, take up thy bed and go unto thine house."

It was as if Jesus had said to the proud and doubting Pharisee, "Why do you find fault with me?" The two expressions are equivalent in meaning and force. Man must first be pardoned before the seeds of death can be eliminated from his frame.

If I say to your suffering fellow, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," He, full of the riches of health, will be his; and, if I say, "Take up thy bed and walk," and he does take up his couch and go to his house, it is proof conclusive that I have the power, and that I have forgiven him his sins. I show you by this, that the Son of man has power on earth to forgive sins.

God says to the obedient child, coming up from the waters of baptism, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," ought we to be astonished if the same marvellous results should follow to the child of faith, that occured to that palsied man from the comings to Jesus. In the full assurance of faith? The miraculous power to heal is not ours; we cannot forgive. But that disease should flee when God forgives, is all right, and in harmony with his word. It has been so in numberless instances in the past, when the strong desire to obey God has conquered all fear, and the poor invalids, triumphing over pain and weakness, have been lifted from their beds, carefully wrapped, and borne through stinging cold, to the ice-cut graves of the river, there to be buried in the likeness of Christ's death, and to feel, to their own wonder and the wonder of all their acquaintances, new life surging through their veins.

Well, we thank God that it is so, that he sometimes condescends to give us in this way new proofs of his love. We somehow are led through such manifestations of his power, to look with joyful eyes to another and still brighter scene. If God gives health and lengthened life now to the pardoned sinner, who has been raised from a watery grave, there will be everblooming health and never-ending life for them when they shall rise from the dust graves of mountain and valley, of forest and wasteland, in the day of the Lord Jesus. Faith grasps with iron fingers all that is meant in the terse sentence, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." She sees in the brief account of the palsied man, food for hope. In speaking the words of pardon, Jesus addressed him as a "son" or "child;" he addresses us as "sons and daughters" when he speaks pardon to us, and the sons of God, being heirs to the coming glory with Christ. We, when "forgiven," are accounted as "rebels" no more, we are of the family of God; of the commonwealth of Israel, our citizenship is in the coming kingdom.

Those little dots once also wall
Outside the gate
Oh come and be forgiven,
That jewel of heaven
May be for you,
In earth made new.

Letter Drawer.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 20, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

I send by this post two wreaths of Jerusalem flowers. I have made them hastily but hope you will be pleased to accept one as a Christmas gift, the other you will receive Mr. Underwood, your printer. I wish you could get the one which you saw like it last. These [illegible] to me [illegible] I love to [illegible] pleasure to [illegible] packages to Mr. Underwood last week. I hope they will arrive safely. I did them in a great hurry and had but just time to mail them. I think I am the busiest woman in Jerusalem. I scarcely take time to eat any food.

Our meetings are very interesting, and the interest is increasing. Business is good. The Greeks are building a block of new stores unlike anything ever seen in this city, they are very beautiful. We still have an abundance of grapes—and such delicious grapes grow nowhere else. Oranges and lemons are now in the market and plenty at a low price. There is no place like dear Jerusalem. What will it be when the King is here? Everybody is looking for some great event.

The Jews come for the "Restitution." They seem to think it strange that Christians see as they see. I shall try to write an article for THE RESTITUTION next week. I hope you will come soon; I am sure you will love Jerusalem. Your sister in Christ,

A. E. DAVIS.

P. S.—All the money sent by you has been received. Many thanks.

[Wreaths have come to hand—flowers from Jerusalem. Precious Christmas present indeed. Many, many thanks to the sender.]

Editor Restitution:

It gives us much pleasure to enclose our annual donation to the beloved RESTITUTION, and to thank you cheerfully for its prompt delivery. We never undo the cover but a thrill of pleasure stirs our heart, and seldom are we disappointed in its contents. We are pleased, to learn that our patient and affectionate Brother Chaplin, and his able and intelligent corps of assistants are again appointed to lead the van in the defence and promulgation of the truth for another year. May the future be as abundantly blessed with the mercy and goodness of God, as the past has been. And if the Lord tarry, may the end of the coming year find us as faithful and zealous as we are today.

We are grateful to Brother Cameron and others for their fervid and interesting articles on the gospel and other important themes.

We have been holding the fort in this place for about a year, preaching the truth as time and opportunity would permit, realizing the usual opposition in consequence of misunderstanding; however, we have reason to believe that if we continue in well-doing, the good seed now being sown is falling into good ground. Brother Crockett, a strong soldier in the Christian warfare, is now with us; together we are storming the fortress of the enemy, and are hopeful that a foundation is being laid that may in the near future rear its superstructure to the glory of God.

Our Sunday-school numbers about 50, which may, to our brethren, be somewhat wonderful. Here are Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist, all knowing our peculiar faith. Yet they continue to send their families and little ones to us for Christian tuition. We praise the Lord for using us in his service, and trust we may always be found worthy of his confidence. We have tried to be all things to all men yet never compromising the truth, it is needless to say some will become offended. We next week enter upon a series of lectures in an adjoining town, and hope for good results. But we must conclude, unconsciously we have been giving you a synopsis of our labors.

Our mite-like donation is in your hands, do with it what seemeth good in your sight. Continue the paper for another year to our aged parents in "Bonny" Scotland; and when the blessed Master returns may it be our privilege to cast our crowns before him and crown him "Lord of all."

Editor Restitution:

I am pained to announce the death of our much esteemed Sister Jane, wife of Elder E. Chesebrough, who died Dec. 8, after an illness of only thirty-six hours, with what the doctor called neuralgia in the stomach. The family and community have sustained an irreparable loss in her death. Sister C. was an exemplary Christian, a faithful and devoted wife, self sacrificing to the wants and welfare of others. She always knew of those in the neighborhood who were sick or destitute, and never waited for others to contribute to their necessities, but was ever ready to do her part and never wearied in doing good. We firmly believe that she fell asleep in Christ and will be among those that the apostle John says will not be forgotten, but will be raised up at the last day. Therefore "We sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Sister Chesebrough was 58 years old the 20th of September last. Was married to Bro. C. the 25th of Dec., 1854. Was baptized May 15, 1860.

ANTIQUITIES AT SHECHEM.

A place of such importance as Shechem, celebrated and flourishing as it has been from the earliest period of the history of Palestine to the present day, ought to possess ancient ruins and relics of great value. The conditions for burying such relics are more favorable here than in many other oriental cities. A deep valley between two mountains, a large and prosperous city, where building and rebuilding has been constantly going on, a town situated under the very mountain wall of Gerizim, from which masses of rock and earth, to say nothing of the wash carried down by the rains, are constantly falling, are conditions which preclude the idea of finding many ruins above ground. The case is different on the summit of Gerizim and the ruins there have been examined with considerable thoroughness. Some of the Roman coins of this ancient city are interesting, because they show the temple on the top of Gerizim and the road or stairway which led to it from the town below.

Quite recently, at Shechem, or Nablous, some excavations have been made which, if they could be followed up, might lead to important results. Outside of the walls of the city, near the southeast corner of it and close under Gerizim, a native commenced to build a house, and, at a depth of eighteen feet, came upon a large slab of stone, which was ten feet long, about seven feet wide, and more than two feet thick. One edge of it was finely carved and dentils and egg-shaped ornaments existed in abundance, while some of the fragments bear acanthus leaves. The block may have formed a part of some rich cornice. The workmen had no means of raising the slab to the surface except by breaking it in pieces, which was accordingly done, and the fragments were brought up and laid by themselves, where they now lie. Finely-faced walls, carved work capitals and columns in large numbers. Mosaics of different patterns, large blocks of stone, and flights of steps are among the things reported as having been found at various points at the depth before indicated.

Among the objects discovered was a bullock's head, which has since been stolen, and a statue of a man which has been preserved. This is of choice marble (not the marble of the country) and from the shoulders to the feet is covered with drapery, which left the right shoulder and breast bare. The right arm is broken just above the elbow, and the left arm, which was entirely covered by the drapery, is broken at the wrist. The statue is headless and the head has not yet been found. From the base of the neck to the bottom of the feet the figure measures fifty-six inches. The pedestal, or, rather, a pedestal has been found which appears to fit the statue and on which it may once have stood. The pedestal stood on four flaring feet, one of which has been preserved. Its platform, which is thirty inches square, is seven inches thick and its feet were about fifteen inches long. The top of the pedestal would thus be raised at least twenty-two inches above the ground. The sides of the platform of the pedestal were richly ornamented. The feet of the statue were attached at the rear to a block of stone, which was thirty inches wide, corresponding to the size of the platform. Above the block the statue proper, from edge to edge of the drapery, had a width of eighteen inches.

Hearing of this discovery, I rode up to Nablous last Wednesday, and returned to Jerusalem on Friday, making the journey of four days in two. Rev. C. Veitscher, a resident clergyman, examined the place with me, as he had done before my arrival, and from what this gentleman told me, together with what I learned from the owner of the ground, I gathered many facts which I cannot communicate in this note, but which convince me that important remains lie buried at this point. I had special facilitates for obtaining information, since the owner of the property is a near relative of one of the Kawasses at the American consulate at Jerusalem. There remains may be those of an amphitheater, a supposition which is favored by the peculiar shape of the mountain at this point. They may be those, also, of a once beautiful temple. Those who are interested in such matters do not need to be told that here is a place where the pick and spade, in the hands of intelligent explorers, would be likely to disclose one or perhaps some of the structures and objects with which "Flavia Neapolis" was once adorned.—Selah Merrill, in the New York Independent.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ATHEISM.

The Bishop of Manchester, in one of his recent addresses, drew this striking contrast between the demands on men's faith in regard to Christianity and Atheism. He said:

Its would admit that Christianity had its difficulties, and there were points on which they might desire that the revelation had been fuller and more clear; but those things were ordered for them by One whom they believed to be wiser and whom they knew to be stronger than themselves. There was sufficient light for a man to walk by who did not deliberately choose darkness, and he was not going to try to escape from those small difficulties by plunging into and accepting the infinitely greater difficulties and perplexities of the creed of atheism. To call upon him to believe that this wonderful universe, with its varied courses and wonderful controlling mechanism, these worlds upon worlds in space, until he was lost and his mind and brain became dazed in the contemplation of them—to ask him to believe that all these things came by chance, and that he himself, with all the wonderful faculties with which God had endowed every human being, was developed by protoplasm from a germ without any designing providence of God governing him, was asking him to believe what to his mind was absurd and impossible. And so because there were difficulties in his faith which he could not explain, he was not going to accept the infinitely greater difficulties of the creed of atheism, for it did not make the theory of life easier, but a thousand times more difficult to say there was no God, no Christ, no Holy Spirit, no soul, no life beyond.

MARRIED.

CONYE—HOW.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. David How, near Plymouth, Ind., on Thursday evening, Dec. 21, 1882, by E. A. Chaplin, Mr. Alfred Conye and Miss Precelove A. How.

Bring flowers, fresh flowers, for the bride to wear!
They were born to blush in her shining hair.
She is leaving the home of her childhood's mirth,
She with old fare well to her father's hearth,
Her place is now by another's side—
Bring flowers for the locks of the fair young bride! —Her. Thomas.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $360. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500! To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions, and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way, brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

"Thy Will be done."

Three little words, in truth so full of meaning;
Three little words, the burden of a song;
Three little words, in every heart and dwelling,
What wonder that they are the watchword given!

"Thy will be done" in the new heavens, below the earth,
On earth's wide plain and in the ocean's bed;
Of countless stars in their appointed courses,
Of living things that range the air and tread;

"Thy will be done" in the dark home of sorrow,
Where sighs and tears are all the language known,
Where every heart is bleeding, every dwelling
Is filled with mourning for the loved and gone;

"Thy will be done" in the bright home of gladness,
Where joy and love their golden sceptres wield,
Where hearts o'erflow with rapture unrestrained,
And every tongue the new song has learned;

"Thy will be done" in the fair home of beauty,
Where all is pure and holy and divine,
Where angels dwell in the full light of glory,
And drink unmingled from the source of wine;

"Thy will be done" in the dark home of darkness,
Where hatred, malice, and revenge have sway,
Where every heart is filled with passion's madness,
And all are joined in the revolt's array;

"Thy will be done" in the wide home of nature,
Where all is subject to the Maker's will,
Where all obey the laws of the Creator,
And all are filled with his life-giving skill;

"Thy will be done" in the dark home of error,
Where sin and death have reigned for many years,
Where all is wrong, and where the truth is hidden,
And where the heart is filled with doubts and fears;

"Thy will be done" in the bright home of heaven,
Where all is right, and where the truth is known,
Where all is love, and where the heart is given
To God, the Father, and to Christ, his Son;

"Thy will be done" in the dark home of sadness,
Where all is wrong, and where the truth is hid,
Where all is sin, and where the heart is given
To all that God has in his wrath forbid;

"Thy will be done" in the bright home of glory,
Where all is right, and where the truth is known,
Where all is love, and where the heart is given
To God, the Father, and to Christ, his Son

MY JEWELS.

Shall I hold them back—my Jewels!
These that traveled many a day
Since I laid them by forever,
Safely locking them away;
And I thought them yielded wholly,
When I dared no longer wear
Gems, contrasting, oh, so sadly,
With the adoring I should bear.

Shall I keep them still—my Jewels!
Shall I, can I, yet withhold
From that loving, loving Savior
Aught of silver or of gold?
Gold so needed, that his gospel
May resound from sea to sea;
Can I know Christ's service lacketh
Yet forget his wish in me?

No; I lay them down—my Jewels,
Truly on the altar now.
Stay! I see a vision passing
Of a gem encircled brow,
Heavenly treasure worn by Jesus,
Souls won through my gift outpoured;
Freely, gladly I will offer.
Jewels thine to crown my Lord.

Selections.

The Man of Sin. 2 Thess. ii. 1-8.—No. 8.

The question next requiring an answer is as follows:—

(8.) Do facts bear out the idea that the bishop of Rome has opposed and exalted himself against all civil or ecclesiastical rulers, or both? Keeping in mind that we have endeavored to show that "all that is called God or that is worshipped" is capable of being understood in the limited sense of human rulers, it is a fact well known to all who have paid any attention to Church history, that the bishops of Rome have not only claimed universal authority over civil rulers, which is perhaps as much as the language of the apostle requires, but they have actually been permitted, in many instances, to put this claim into actual operation among the States of Europe. In his "Dissertations on the Prophecies," Thomas Newton, D. D., Bishop of Bristol, states this fact in a single sentence, which may serve as a summary of what we shall find detailed in the pages of history. The bishop says that the pope has exalted himself "not only above inferior magistrates, but likewise above bishops and primates, exerting an absolute jurisdiction and uncontrolled supremacy over all; not only above bishops and primates, but likewise above kings and emperors, deposing some and advancing others, obliging them to prostrate themselves before him, to kiss his shoe, to hold his stirrup, to wait barefooted at his gate, treading even upon the neck, and kicking off the Imperial crown with his foot," etc.

This comprehensive summary of Bishop Newton, however, must not be accepted even on his authority. We must inquire of the historians who have written the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Europe for the purpose of ascertaining the real facts of the case. Pursuing this course, we might try to ascertain the accuracy of the statement that the bishops of Rome claimed, and even to a large extent exercised, supremacy over the civil rulers of Europe in their political relations.

We must here premise that this pitch of power was not reached at once, that, in fact, it had, like the tide, a flow and an ebb. It was not till the 13th century of the Christian era that this tide of papal supremacy reached high-water mark; although for several centuries before and after that period it maintained a greater or less degree of ascendancy. We shall glance, therefore, at several facts in the history of Europe during the period named, so as to put the main count in the charge beyond the possibility of dispute.

The general fact of papal supremacy over the civil power is patent to the reader of European history. Guizot, in his "History of Civilization in Europe"—treating generally of the period between the 9th and 12th century—says, "By a tendency natural to human ambition and pride, the church endeavored to establish for the spiritual power not only independence, but supremacy over the temporal power." And he represents the "spiritual power" as reasoning, "How! I have right and sway over what is most lofty and independent in man—over his reason, his inward will, his conscience—and shall I not have right over his outward, material, and fleeting interests? I, who am the interpreter of justice and truth, shall I be debarred from regulating earthly matters according to justice and truth?" And, mentioning the monopoly of mentality possessed by the church, he says, "The spiritual power thus finding itself at the head of the whole activity of the human world naturally fell into a self-assumption of general government of the world."

The late Henry Hallam, in his "View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages," says, "The boundless ... of papal dominion extends from the pontificate of Innocent III. inclusively to that of Boniface VIII.; or, in other words, through the thirteenth century. Rome inspired during this age all the terror of her ancient name. She was once more the mistress of the world, and kings were her vassals." The first-named pope's claims were thus expressed in his own words: "As the sun and the moon are placed in the firmament, the greater as the light of the day and the lesser of the night, thus are these two powers in the church—the pontifical, which, as having the charge of souls, is the greater, and the royal, which is the less, and to which the bodies of men only are entrusted." Hallam, from whom this quotation is extracted, says of it, "Intoxicated with these conceptions (if we may apply such a word to successful ambition) he thought no quarrel of princes beyond the sphere of his jurisdiction." The second-named Pope (Boniface VIII.), nearly a century later, in a constitution termed "Unam Sanctam," promulgated in a church council held at Rome, declares that "the church is one body, and has one head. Under its command are two swords, the one spiritual, the other temporal; that to be used by the supreme pontiff himself; this by kings and knights, by his license and at his will. But the lesser sword must be subject to the greater, and the temporal to the spiritual authority. He concludes by declaring the subjection of every human being to the see of Rome to be an article of necessary faith." Hallam mentions that "another bull pronounces all persons of whatever rank obliged to appear when personally cited before the audience or apostolical tribunal at Rome," "since such is our pleasure, who by divine permission, rule the world."

"But the epoch," remarks Hallam, "when the spirit of papal usurpation was most strikingly displayed was the pontificate of Innocent III." In each of the three leading objects which Rome has pursued, independent sovereignty, supremacy over the Christian Church, control over the princes of the earth, it was the fortune of this pontiff to conquer." It may be remarked in passing that it was this Pope who established the Inquisition. In Chambers' Encyclopædia, Innocent is thus spoken of: "His pontificate is justly regarded as the culminating point of the temporal, spiritual supremacy of the [illegible] and it is freely avowed by the learned historian of Latin Christianity, that if over the great idea of a Christian republic, with a Pope at its head, was to be realized, 'none could bring more lofty or more various qualifications for its accomplishment than Innocent III.' Accordingly, under the impulse of his ardent but disinterested zeal for the glory of the church, almost every state and kingdom was brought into subjection."

Leaving these general historical statements regarding the time of Innocent III., we must begin our more detailed evidence at an earlier period. It was chiefly during the pontificate of Gregory VII. (more than a century earlier) that the way had been prepared for what was accomplished by Innocent III. Hallam puts the relations of both these popes, and a subsequent one, very forcibly thus: "As Gregory VII. appears the most usurping of mankind till we read the history of Innocent III., so Innocent III. is thrown into shade by the superior audacity of Boniface VIII." In Chamber's Encyclopædia Gregory VII. is termed "pre-eminently the historical representative of the temporal claims of the mediæval papacy;" and in Cassell's Biographical Dictionary, he is described as "a man of extraordinary abilities and sagacity, fired with the greatest ambition for the exaltation of the Holy See, proud and impetuous, and devoid of any strong religious character.... He strove to subject the Church Catholic to the will of the Pope, and to exempt clerics and church property from civil control.... He endeavored to make all kingdoms fiefs to the pontiffs; and to form an episcopal council to meet annually at Rome, which was to take charge of all the kings and peoples of the world. He was unable to succeed in this owing to the opposition of William the Conqueror and Philip I. of France. But though he failed in this great attempt, he wrought a mighty change in the political state of Europe, abridging or annulling the rights of kings and emperors," etc. He was, according to Hallam, "by far the most conspicuous person in the eleventh century."

Christopher William Koch, Professor of Public Law in the University of Strasburg, in his "History of the Revolutions of Europe," gives a concise yet clear account of this portion of papal history in connection with European politics. This work is written in a tone of moderation and candor, and has been highly commended by eminent authorities, both French and German, and affords a convenient means of stating the facts of the case. I shall, therefore, quote a few extracts from it.

"A new and powerful monarchy rose on the ruins of the German Empire, that of the Roman pontiffs, which monopolized both spiritual and temporal dominion; and extended its influence over all the kingdoms of Christendom. This supremacy, whose artful and complicated mechanism is still an object of astonishment to the most subtle politicians, was the work of Pope Gregory VII., a man born for great undertakings, as remarkable for his genius, which raised him above his times, as for the austerity of his manners, and the boundless reach of his ambition. Indignant at the depravity of the age, which was fostered in ignorance and vice, and at the gross immorality which pervaded all classes of society, both laymen and ecclesiastics, Gregory resolved to become the reformer of morals and the restorer of religion.

To succeed in this project it was necessary to replace the government of kings, which had totally lost its power and efficiency by a new authority, whose salutary restraints, imposed alike on the high and the low, might restore vigor to the laws, put a stop to licentiousness, and impose a reverence on all by the sanctity of its origin. This authority was the spiritual supremacy of the pope, of which Gregory was at once creator and inventor.

"While he was cardinal (Hildebrand) taking advantage of the minority of Henry IV. Emperor of Germany, he caused, in a council held at Rome, 1059, the famous decree to be passed, which, by reserving the election of the pontiffs principally to the cardinals, converted the elective privileges which the emperors formerly enjoyed in virtue of their crown rights, into a personal favor granted by the pope. . . . .

"On the death of Pope Nicholas II., Hildebrand secured the election of Alexander II., without waiting for the order or concurrence of the imperial court; and he succeeded in maintaining him in the apostolic chair against Pope Honorius II., whom the reigning empress had destined for that honor. At length, being raised himself to the pontifical throne, scarcely had he obtained the imperial confirmation, when he put in execution the project which he had been so long concerting, and proclaiming, viz; the erecting of a spiritual despotism extending to priests as well as kings; making the supreme pontiff the arbiter in all affairs. The basis of this dominion was, that the Vicar of Jesus Christ ought to be superior to all human power. . . .

"At that time the city of Rome, and the whole ecclesiastical states, as well as the greater part of Italy, were subject to the kings of Germany, who in virtue of their being kings of Italy and Roman emperors, nominated or confirmed the popes, and installed the pontiffs of Rome, who there received the power of the sword in their name. They sent also every year commissioners to Rome to levy the money due to the royal treasury. The popes used to date their acts from the years of the emperor's reign, and to stamp their coin with his name; and all the higher clergy were bound and subject to the secular power by the solemn investiture (by the sovereign) of the ring and the crosier.

"This investiture gave to the emperors the right of nominating and confirming bishops, and even of deposing them if they saw cause. It gave them, moreover, the right of conferring, at their pleasure, those fiefs (chiefly land) and royal prerogatives which the munificence of princes had vested in the church. The emperors, in putting bishops and prelates in possession of these fiefs, used the ring and crosier, which were badges of honor. They made them take the oath of fidelity and allegiance; and this was the origin of their dependence and their obligation to furnish their prince with troops, and also to perform military service.

"Gregory VII. prohibited, under the pain of excommunication, all sovereigns to exercise the rights of investiture, by a formal decree which he published in a council assembled at Rome in 1074. There was more than the simple ceremony of the ring and crosier implied in this interdict. He aimed at depriving princes of the right of nominating, confirming, or deposing prelates, as well as receiving their fealty and homage. He thus broke all those ties by which the bishops were held in allegiance to princes; making them, in this respect, entirely independent.

"In suppressing investitures the pontiff had yet a more important object in view. It was his policy to withdraw both himself and his successors, as well as the whole ecclesiastical state, from the power of the German kings, especially as [illegible] the rich that these princes had so long exercised of nominating and confirming the popes. He saw, in fact, that if he could succeed in rendering the clergy independent of the secular power, it would follow, by a natural consequence, that the pope, as being supreme head of the clergy, would no longer be dependent on the emperors, while the emperor excluded from the nominating of bishops would have less right to interfere in the election of pontiffs."

Professor Koch then refers to the effect of this policy in divesting princes of the right to dispose of ecclesiastical fiefs, seeing they had committed the unfortunate error of putting the greater part of their domains into the hands of ecclesiastics. If they could have retained the patronage they might have exercised control over the persons possessing benefices. He also shows the influence of the law of celibacy in severing another bond of union between the clergy and the civil orders of society. Gregory endeavored to enforce this law more vigorously than ever, renewing it in a council held at Rome in 1074; enjoining the married priests (of whom there were still many not only in Germany, England, and kingdoms of the North, but even in France, Italy and Spain) either to quit their wives, or renounce their sacerdotal order. His design was not to render the clergy independent, but to make them subservient to his own elevation, and to employ them in humbling the princes.

He then mentions the use which was made by Gregory of the "False Decretals" forged about the beginning of the ninth century, and attributed to the early bishops of Rome. I here give more fully Hallam's account of their nature.

"Their effect was to diminish the authority of metropolitans over their suffragans, by establishing an appellant jurisdiction of the Roman See in all causes, and by forbidding national councils to be holden without its consent. Every bishop was amenable only to the immediate tribunal of the pope; by which one of the most ancient rights of the provincial synod was abrogated. . . . .

"Upon these spurious decretals was built the great fabric of papal supremacy over the different national churches; a fabric which has stood after its foundation crumbled beneath it; for no one has pretended for the last two centuries that the imposture is not palpable to any but the most ignorant ages (of credit).

Koch affirms that Gregory fully carried out his policy, and, in a council held at Rome in 1079, even prescribed the oath for the bishops of fealty and homage such as they, as lieges, vowed to their sovereigns. This he "claimed for himself alone, bearing that they should aid and defend, against the whole world, his new supremacy, and what he called the royal rights of St. Peter." This was maintained and augmented by his successors, in spite of its inconsistency with that which the bishops swore to their princes.

Another means by which Gregory confirmed his new authority was by sending more frequently into the states of Christendom papal representatives, called legates. He made them a kind of governors, of provinces with ample powers, which greatly impaired the authority of metropolitans, bishops, and councils. The bishops were even required by their oath to furnish maintenance for these legates, which led to frequent exactions and impositions.

Koch next touches on Gregory's direct interference with the civil power. He says: "While occupied with the means of extending his power the clergy, he did not let slip any opportunity of making encroachments on the authority of princes and sovereigns, which he represented as subordinate to that of the church and the pope. As supreme head of the church he claimed a right of inspection over all kings and their governments. He deemed himself authorized to address admonitions to them as to the method of ruling their kingdoms; and to demand of them an account of their conduct. By-and-by he presumed to listen to the complaints of subjects against their princes, and claimed a right of being a judge or arbiter between them. In this capacity he acted towards Henry IV., Emperor of Germany, who enjoyed the rights of sovereignty over Rome and the pope. He summoned him to Rome (1076) for the purpose of answering before the synod to the principal accusations which the nobles of Saxony, engaged in disputes with that prince, had referred to the pope. The emperor, burning with indignation, and hurried on by the impetuosity of youth, instantly convoked an assembly of bishops at Worms, and there caused the pontiff to be deposed. No sooner was this sentence conveyed to Rome, and read in the presence of the [illegible] assembled, than Gregory ventured on a step till then quite unheard of. He immediately thundered a sentence of excommunication and deposition against the emperor, which was addressed to St. Peter, and couched in the following terms:

"In the name of Almighty God, I suspend and interdict from governing the kingdom of Germany and Italy, Henry, son of the Emperor Henry, who with a haughtiness unexampled has dared to rebel against thy church. I absolve all Christians whatever from the oath which they have taken, or shall hereafter take, to him; and henceforth none shall be permitted to do him homage or service as king; for it is who would disobey the authority of thy church deserves to lose the dignity with which he is invested. And seeing this prince has refused to submit as a Christian, and has not returned to the Lord whom he hath forsaken, holding communion with the excommunicated, and despising the advice which I tendered him for the safety of his soul, I load him with curses in thy name, to the end that people may know even by experience that thou art Peter, and that on this rock the Son of the living God has built his church; and that the gates of hell shall never prevail against it."

This measure, which seemed at first to have been merely the effect of the pontiff's impetuosity, soon discovered of what importance it was for him to persevere, and what advantage he might derive from it. In humbling the emperor, the most powerful monarch in Europe, he might hope that all the other sovereigns would bend before him. He omitted nothing, therefore, that might serve to justify his conduct, and endeavored to prove, by sophistries, that if he had authority to excommunicate the emperor, he might likewise deprive him of his dignity; and that the right to release subjects from their oath of allegiance was an emanation and a natural consequence of the power of the keys. The same equivocal interpretation he afterwards made use of in a sentence which he published against the same prince (1080), and which he addressed to the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, in these terms:

"You, fathers and princes of the apostles, hereby make known to the whole world, that if you can bind and unbind in heaven, you can much more, on earth, take from all men empires, kingdoms, principalities, duchies, marquisates, counties and possessions, of whatsoever nature they may be. You have often deprived the unworthy of patriarchates, primacies, archbishoprics, and bishoprics, to give them to persons truly religious. Hence, if you preside over spiritual affairs, does not your jurisdiction extend a fortiori to temporal and secular dignities? And if you judge the angels who rule over princes and potentates, even the haughtiest, will you not also judge their slaves? Let, then, the kings and princes of the earth learn how great and irresistible is your power! Let them tremble to contemn the commands of your church! And do you, blessed Peter, and blessed Paul, exercise from this time forward, your judgment on Henry, that the whole earth may know that he has been humbled, not by any human contingencies, but solely by your power."

"Until that time," continues Koch, the emperors had exercised the right of confirming the popes, and even of deposing them, should there be occasion. But by a strange reverse of pretensions the popes now arrogated to themselves the confirmation of the emperors, and even usurped the right of dethroning them.

"However irregular this step of the pontiff might be, it did not fail to produce the intended effect. In an assembly of the Imperial States held at Tribur (1076), the emperor could only obtain their consent to postpone their proceeding to a new election, and that on the express condition of his submitting himself to the judgment of the pope, and being absolved immediately from the excommunication he had incurred. In consequence of this decision of the States, Henry crossed the Alps in the middle of winter to obtain reconciliation with the pope, who then resided with the famous Countess Matilda, at her castle of Canossa, in the Modenese territory. Absolution was not granted him, however, except under conditions the most humiliating. He was compelled to do penance in an outer court of the castle, in a woolen shirt and barefooted for three successive days, and afterwards to sign whatever terms the pontiff chose to prescribe. This extraordinary spectacle must have spread consternation among the sovereigns of Europe, and made them tremble at the censures of the church.

"After this Gregory VII. exerted his utmost influence to engage all sovereigns without distinction to acknowledge themselves his vassals and tributaries. 'Let not the emperor imagine,' says he, in a letter which he wrote to the German nation, 'that the church is submitted to him as a slave, but let him know that she is set over him as a sovereign.' From that time the pontiff regarded the empire as a fief of his church; and afterwards, when setting up a rival emperor to Henry IV., in the person of Hermann of Luxemburg who took an oath of vassalage. Gregory pursued the same conduct in regard to the other sovereigns of Europe. Boleslaus II., King of Poland, having killed Stanislaus, Bishop of Cracow, who had ventured to excommunicate him, the pontiff took occasion from this to depose that prince, releasing all his subjects from their oath of fidelity, and even prohibiting the Polish bishops henceforth to crown any king without the express consent of the pope.

"This aspiring pontiff stuck at nothing, he regarded nothing, provided he could obtain his object. However contrary the customs of former times were to his pretensions, he quoted them as examples of authority, and with a boldness capable of imposing anything on weak and ignorant minds. It was thus that, in order to oblige the French nation to pay him the tax of one penny each house, he alleged the example of Charlemagne, and pretended that that prince had not merely paid this tribute, but even granted Saxony as a fief to St. Peter; as he had conquered it with the assistance of that apostle. In writing to Philip I. of France, he expressed himself in these terms: 'Strive to please St. Peter, who has thy kingdom as well as thy soul in his powers and who can bind thee, and absolve in heaven as well as on earth.' And in a letter which he addressed to the princes of Spain, he attempted to persuade them that the kingdom of Spain, being originally the property of the Holy See, they could not exonerate themselves from paying him a tax on all the lands they have conquered from the infidels.

"He affirmed to Solomon, King of Hungary, that Stephen I., on receiving his crown at the hands of Pope Silvester II., had surrendered his kingdom as free property to the Holy See; and that in virtue of this donation his kingdom was to be considered as a part of the domain of the church. He wrote in exactly the same style to Goyas, his immediate successor. In one of his letters to Suono, King of Denmark, he enjoins him to deliver up his kingdom to the power of the Roman See. He refused (1076) to grant the royal dignity to Demetrius Swinimir, Duke of Croatia and Dalmatia, except on the express condition that he should do him homage for his kingdom, and engage to pay the pope an annual tribute of two hundred golden pieces of Byzantium. This pontiff had the art of disguising his ambition so dexterously under the mask of justice and piety, that he prevailed with various other sovereigns to acknowledge themselves his vassals. Bertrand, Count of Provence, transferred to him his fealty and homage, to the prejudice of those feudal obligations he owed to the empire. Several princes of Italy and Germany, influenced by artifice or intimidation, abandoned the emperor, and put themselves under submission to the pope. His efforts were not equally successful with William the Conqueror, King of England, whom he had politely invited by letter to do him homage for his kingdom, after the manner of his royal predecessors. That prince, too wise to be duped by papal imposition, replied that he was not in a humor to perform homage which he had never promised, and which he was not aware had ever been performed by any of his predecessors.

Possibly the following is the letter referred to by Koch. I find it quoted by James Bryce, D. C. L., in his "Holy Roman Empire," from Migne, cxlviii., p. 508, as a letter from Gregory VII. to William I., A. D. 1080:

"As for the beauty of this world, that it may be at different seasons perceived by fleshly eyes, God hath disposed the sun and the moon lights that outshine all others; so hath the creature whom his goodness hath formed after his own image in this world should be drawn astray into fatal dangers, he hath provided in the apostolic and royal dignities the means of ruling it through divers offices. . . . If I, therefore, am to answer for thee on the dreadful day of judgment before the just Judge who cannot lie, the Creator of every creature, bethink thee whether I must not very diligently provide for thy salvation, and whether for thine own safety thou oughtest not without delay to obey me so that thou mayest possess the land of the living."

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1880.

Many people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read, and like The Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news column as printed in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for human kind; the events of the week and outlooks, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the unimproving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people here learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs The Sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, hoping the whales as well as about the smaller fish, in the laws of dissent as gladly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is overbold a newspaper. No man is so humble that The Sun is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can defy injustice to be done him. No wealth, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of the principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the most overwhelming popular protest against Bourbonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun stands and will continue to stand like a rock against the encroachments of the people against the usurpation of power, the unrighteousness of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the Sun is the best religious paper ever published, because its piety absolutely is unalloyed with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has already whipped out of the ranks one of that party, and is proceeding against the other and with unabated vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its features are more numerous, richer, and of better taste than are to be found in any other publication.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in 1880 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a monitor for the cause of honest government, a terror for public enemies of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 13.

Prelude.—Can the moral constitution of a people be changed without the subversion of its political system? How are these systems associated?—Political and religious thoughts—8. Egypt under Mohammedan Arabia.—Egypt conquered by Arabia.—Political and moral results.

Prelude.—Can the moral constitution of a people be changed without the subversion of its political system? This problem has a direct bearing on Mohammedan Egypt. We propose, therefore to attempt its solution. Has man by nature a natural sense—the power of judging between right and wrong—or is it the creature of education? Both these questions may, in a certain degree, be answered in the affirmative. Man, by nature, has such an element. Education is required for its development. As a nation is the aggregate of its population, its character is the sum of its individual characters. Since man is a "religious animal," (worship of some kind being his normal state), his religion shapes his moral character, and his gods shape his religion, the character of every nation varies with the attributes of its divinities. A nation that has cats, dogs and crocodiles for its deities, must partake more or less of their attributes, and consequently become morally degraded. Egypt's religious history has been exceedingly varied. Her early history makes her the mother of debasing idolatry. Her monuments and her political institutions show in every age the footprints of her religion.

During her monumental period, Egypt was under other moral influences than her nature worship. The shepherd kings, and the sojourn of the Hebrews, gave birth to new religious thoughts. These new moral elements tended to elevate and protect the political constitution. Jehovah taught by his prophets his sovereign claim to the land of Egypt, and his right to rule monarchs. Her prosperity was in the ratio of her submission to his divine government.

During the Hebrew monarchy Egypt had a great increase of moral light. The intercourse between Egypt and Israel during the reigns of David, Solomon, and Judah, was such as to create for the land of the Pharaohs a new moral constitution; and under Alexander and his successors (the Ptolomies), the old moral constitution died out—was superseded by a new system of religious thought. Under the Roman empire Egypt was full of a mixture of moral ideas, composed of Pagan, Jewish and Christian. During these changes the old political systems were on the decline, and finally passed away.

History has demonstrated that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people," Prov. xiv. 34; and that religious and political ideas are so intimately associated that one cannot change or die without a corresponding change in the other. This truth will further appear as we advance.

Egypt under Mohammedan Arabia A. D. 640 to A. D. 1250—610 years.—Egypt fell under the dominion of the Mohammedan Saracens, under the Caliph Omar, who had taken Jerusalem, and had erected the mosque bearing his name, now standing on the site of the old temple. This conquest introduced a new era in Egypt, a revolution in its religious and civil institutions. The Koran contained a new system of religion, and at the same time it had a code of civil jurisprudence adapted to the wants of the new religious empire. One of the first acts of the Arabian dynasty was the burning of the great Alexandrian library. Amrou, the conqueror of Egypt, wrote to Omar, relative to what disposition should be made of the library. His answer was: "If these writings of the Greeks (Greek Christians) agree with the book of God (the Koran), they are useless, and need not be preserved; if they disagree, they are pernicious, and ought to be destroyed." "The volumes of paper or parchment were distributed [illegible] months were barely sufficient for the consumption of this precious fuel," says Gibbon. The size and grandeur of Alexandria, the capital of Egypt, shows its condition at that time. Amrou thus describes it: "I have taken the grave city of the West. It is impossible for me to enumerate the variety of its riches and beauty; and I shall content myself with observing that it contains four thousand palaces, four thousand baths, four hundred theaters or places of amusement, twelve thousand shops for the sale of vegetable food, and forty thousand tributary Jews." Egypt had become full of monks and idols of nominal Christianity; for we may safely affirm that Egypt has never seen pure Christianity. What changes took place under the Arabian dynasty?

1. The changes will be described under two heads—(1.) Ecclesiastical; (2.) Civil—those of church and state.

Egypt, coming under a new foreign master, must put forth a growth of new religious ideas, those contained in the Koran, which sprang from the brain of the Arabian prophet, Mohammed, in that system, takes the place of Jesus; the sword is their gospel of persuasion. At the beginning of the Arabian dynasty, the Greek population of Egypt, who were idolatrous Christians, constituted about one-tenth of its inhabitants, while the remaining nine-tenths were Jews and natives. It is said that scarcely any native abandoned his old religious ideas. The cat, the dog and the crocodile were still his deities; and therefore he looked with sullen hatred at the Christian abuse of those sacred animals. They regarded the Arabians as their deliverers, since nothing was required but tribute. The religious sentiment was changed only by the addition of a new element. The social and political ideas passed through a more serious revolution. The morals of the Koran affected the organization of Egyptian society; and its civil jurisprudence was quite unlike what they had ever experienced. Their government was a royal priesthood, the chief ruler, the Caliph, residing at Mecca. This subjugation of Egypt was a judicial overthrow, intended by Jehovah as a deadly thrust at its hated idolatry, the worship of animals by the natives, of images by the Greek Christians, and of the rejection of his Son by the Jews. These three kinds of worship were exceedingly offensive to the Deity. He sent the Arabian as an executor of his wrath.

Egypt, under the Arabian dynasty, was still degenerating. Nature smiled with its usual Eden beauty, but its population had no vigor of moral, political or intellectual vitality. During the 610 years of Arabian domination there were three dominant families—1. The Thoulounides, A. D. 868; 2. The Akshidids; 3. The Fatemite, A. D. 969. Under the Fatemites, who ruled Egypt till A. D. 1250, Cairo was built and Egypt gained some of its former prosperity, but towards the conclusion of that dynasty wealth introduced luxury, and, like Rome, slaves as domestics, they were called Mamelukes, from memalik, slave), were introduced by their higher officers. In A. D. 1214, there was formed from these (Georgian and Circassian slaves chosen for their beauty and strength) a body of cavalry. They governed Egypt 263 years. In 1201 they expelled the Christian crusaders from Palestine. They continued a military power till A. D. 1810, and in A. D. 1811 were treacherously annihilated by Mohammed Ali. This body of cavalry was mounted on splendid Turkish hordes, splendidly caparisoned. They formed the most efficient body of cavalry that the world ever saw. This recruits were Georgians, Circassians, Turks and Tartars. About the year 1250 they became so numerous as to make one of their own number Sultan of Egypt, putting an end to the Fatemite, the last of the Arabian dynasty.

The Mamelukes dynasty had two subordinate dynasties:—1. The Bobarites, continuing till 1382; 2. The Borjites, reigning till A. D. 1517. The Caucasian element predominated in the first dynasty, the Tartar element in the second." The second dynasty was overthrown by Selim I. began the Turkish domination in Egypt.

3. Egypt under the Turk, from A. D. 1517 to A. D. 1840—323 to 328 years.—This period covers a few years over three centuries; a period of great interest in Egyptian history; a period peculiar in its power to recast Egyptian character, and to prepare it to occupy its destined position in the approaching age. Every change is, therefore, to the student of prophecy, fraught with the most thrilling interest. It is not what Egypt has been, but what she will be, that attracts our attention. We have examined the forty-two centuries of her past history to obtain the key to her future destiny. What is Egypt's position in the age of subjugation, and in the joint reign of the new creation? These are problems difficult of solution, but involving matters of great moment. We often speak of Christ's personal reign on the new earth, or on this earth made new, but say very little about the preparatory work of that endless era. Paul says that "He (Christ) must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet;" "all rule, and authority and power," 1 Cor. xv. 24, 26. Where is there a nation now existing that is not an enemy to Christ's personal reign? Where is there a nation that forms an element in the stone increased to a mountain, rather than a part of the metallic image? When the whole world, with its kings, rulers and emperors, is gathered by the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, into Satan's army, at the battle of the great day, what nation is not there in one of the two opposing armies?

Some hold that the reign named by Paul is now in progress; that the reign of subjugation belongs to this age. Against that view there are many serious objections. We do not here intend to discuss that question. A few points, however, are pertinent to our present subject. So far allow us to put forward our views:

1. Christ undertook a work which divides itself into three parts. 2. He is to do the work himself, and not by an agent, since it is a work that no other person can do. 3. It being necessarily a personal work, it requires his personal presence; and since no substitute can do the work, Christ's presence (previous) is absolutely required.

What is that work. The work required to save one human being: the Messiah's work. What are its three divisions? (a). The work of a prophet like unto Moses. Did this work allow any substitute? It seems not; at least Christ thought that it required his personal presence, since he came in person and did the work. (b). The work of the antitypical High Priest. Did this work require his personal presence in the most holy place (heaven)? Christ thought so, for he went there in person to do the work. So thought Paul when he said that he could not be a priest on earth. Two parts of his work have required his personal presence. (c). The third division is the work of a king, a subjugating work, and the establishment of a kingdom. Where is that work to be accomplished? All admit that the work has the earth for its location. If the work does not require the presence of the Nobleman, why does he return when he receives the kingdom from his Father? This work must also require his personal presence. When Christ returns he finds the earth full of hostile nations. He subdues them, and rules them, and rules over them as a personal, present King of personal and present kings. "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies," Ps. cx. 2. Read the whole Psalm. His work of subjugation is, therefore, a personal work. He utters his voice from Jerusalem. As Judah's lion he roars out of Zion. We seek to know the position of every nation in that conflict, and of every land during that age of subjugation.

A Letter to My Cousin.

Dear Cousin:

I was exceedingly well pleased to hear you say that a true Gospel faith is the glory of Christianity. I can hardly [illegible] you with saying that it [illegible] what a man believes only a Christian. Very [illegible] to say this [illegible] have heard professing Christians say it—yet none act it out completely when they refer to their feelings as proof of their being Christians. They know they are Christians because at a certain time in the past they experienced a witness of their acceptance with God, when alone in the closet or some other secluded place, God for Christ's sake pardoned their sins. Now, I can have no confidence whatever in a genuine conversion to God that refers to one's feelings as proof of such conversion. The trouble, as I look at it, is just here. At some time of life most members of Orthodox churches have felt an anxiety to become Christians. This anxiety was frequently and perhaps generally the result of some highly wrought and terrible description of the torments and eternity of the sufferings of a lost soul in hell. Their feelings being wrought up to the highest possible tension, they were told in their extremity to look to Jesus for relief, and they would certainly find peace. This they tried to do, and trusting in what had been told them, they obtained relief. They now felt better—felt happy. They were all aglow with the hope of going to heaven. And this happy feeling they mistook for proof of genuine conversion to God, without a particle of knowledge of the promises of the Gospel, and even without an enquiry as to what the Gospel is. They refer to their feelings as proof of their conversion. They simply feel happy, and that is all they know or care about the Gospel. But Paul says, Rom. i. 16, "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation." Now I would ask, how much of a Gospel faith have persons who refer to their feelings as proof of conversion? Every effort that they have made towards becoming Christians has been the result and direct offspring of a slavish fear of being buried, coupled with a selfish desire to go to heaven simply to enjoy themselves. And this undoubtedly is the intention, the studied intention of those preachers who, on revival occasions, resort to such pictures of divine wrath. This is what the doctrine of the eternal burning of men and women was invented for—to be used as a whip to drive men and women into the Catholic church, and which Protestants use for the same purpose.

A Methodist minister was reported by the New York Tribune as saying that "hell is the foundation of the Methodist church." He was undoubtedly correct so far as a fear of hell is an incentive to action, as well of the Methodist church as of all others. This slavish fear of being burned is evidently the grand motive power that impels by far the largest part of the members of the various churches to make any sacrifice in the interests of what they call the cause of Christ.

There are no doubt many in the different churches through hypocrisy, and some who are sincere, and act through honest motives; but how few realize the grand object of the Gospel, to-wit: The restitution of the earth and man upon the earth back to the position that was occupied before the fall and consequent curse. This, we understand from a plain, fair exegesis of Scripture, is the objective point of the Gospel, and this we are called upon to believe, if we would be Gospel believers and be saved. And yet, how few, how very few, have the slightest thought or care about what is to become of the earth! And yet they claim to be Christians, and on the road to heaven, simply because they felt happy at some portion of time in the past!

Now, I can have no confidence whatever in a man's feelings, be they what they may, as being any proof of pardoned sin, or that the man is a Christian. The Bible, God's Word, is the standard of Christianity, not a man's feelings. A man's feelings may deceive, but God's Word never. When I hear Peter, on the day of Pentecost, saying to the believing and enquiring Jews, "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," I can have no confidence whatever in a man obtaining a remission of his sins, or an introduction into the family of Christ in any other way.

We know that the blood of Christ is that which cleanseth from sin. But how is that blood applied to the sinner? Not literally, of course. We believe it is applied symbolically; i. e., being buried with Christ in baptism. Peter told the Jews to repent; and so, if you are dead to sin, we will bury you, and thus the old man with his deeds is put off, washed away in the baptismal waters, while Jesus Christ, the new man, is put on, and the penitent, believing sinner arises to walk in a new life. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Here is the water-birth alluded to by the Savior. The Spirit-birth takes place at the resurrection, when the candidate is reorganized, made immortal, having a body like unto Christ's most glorious body. Also when I hear Ananias telling a believing Saul to "arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins," I conclude that the blood which cleanseth from all sin is applied in the symbolic act of baptism, and not alone in answer to prayer. A believer—one who has been baptized, and thus inducted into the family of Christ—may obtain forgiveness of sins in answer to prayer, "for the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayer."

The Bible lays down the rule of faith, as well as practice; tells me what God has promised to bestow upon me as a reward for obedience, and calls upon me to believe the promise, and such belief is one of the conditions of salvation. This is what constitutes faith. God wants me to believe that he will do even as he has promised to do. He wants them to trust his word. A belief that he will do what he has never promised to do, is no part of a Gospel faith, though a man may believe it never so honestly and sincerely.

You say "there are some truths plainly taught which must be believed in order to constitute a man a Christian." Now this is talking right to the point. But what are the "some truths"? Simply to believe that Jesus died on the cross and rose again is not enough to believe to constitute a man a Christian. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." But what is faith? Paul says: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for." Do you hope for the death of Christ? If not, then the faith that is well pleasing to God must be founded upon some other substance; even, as Paul says, upon "things hoped for." It must be founded upon something in the future, in order that it may be an object of hope. Faith and hope cast anchor on future ground, not on anything in the past. Faith and hope look forward, but never backward. Now has God promised to take men to heaven to reward them with an inheritance? If so, where is it so stated? Such a promise would be the substance of a faith and hope, and would be Gospel, or good news, if it were only true. But I have never been able to find any such a promise, though I have found an abundance of plain and unmistakable promises that go to prove positively that the righteous are to be rewarded on the earth. See Ps. xxxvii. 9, 11, 18, 21, 29, 34. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Prov. ii. 21; Isa. lx. 21; Matt. v. 5. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." This is a promise that came from the lips of him who "spake as never man spoke." Jesus never spoke jestingly, nor made a mistake in his promises. He knew what he was talking about. His plain promises do not need any fixing up or construing in order to make them agree with a manmade theory or an Orthodox creed. This plain promise was given as the substance of the Christian's faith and hope. One can look forward to the fulfillment of this promise, with some assurance of faith. The mind can grasp it and hold it in contemplation; but an inheritance "beyond the bounds of time and space" is incomprehensible. A man may believe in the death of Christ; indeed, no one can be a Christian unless he does thus believe, but such belief is no part of a Gospel faith and hope.*

God has promised to take away the least and last vestige of the fall and consequent curse from the earth, and to inaugurate a complete "restitution of all things spoken of by all his holy prophets since the world began." This is the grand and great promise of the Gospel. This is the polestar towards which all the stars of lesser brilliancy point and tend. This is the consummation of all that train of events and promises that commenced when God gave promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, and that has inspired God's holy prophets and apostles, and the church of all ages of the world down to the present time, and for which the saints of all ages have longed, and prayed, and waited. This is the first and leading feature of a remedial system; as if this were the first thought that entered into the mind of Deity when the announcement was made that man had sinned, and brought ruin and the curse upon the world, and death upon all mankind. As if God had made the enquiry—"What can now be done to avert the dire calamity, and save the six days' labor from being an utter failure, and the earth from eternal rebellion?" So God gave promise that in the great future one should be born of the seed of the woman who should destroy the serpent and all his progeny, and take away the sin and death that were entailed upon the race of man on account of Adam's disobedience, and restore the Paradisaical state that was lost. So when John the Baptist saw Jesus coming to him, he said, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "The sin of the world" is the sin that was entailed upon mankind by the disobedience of our first parents in partaking of the forbidden fruit. This sin, with all its consequences Jesus was appointed to take away and render powerless.

But as a preliminary to this, and for the same purpose, it was found necessary to establish a government among men, so as to bring them under restraint, and compel obedience to righteous and wholesome laws. So the seed of the woman, Jesus the Christ, Son of David, and Son of God, and heir of all things, was appointed to set up a kingdom and take the government of earth into his own hands, and teach his laws to the nations, and require obedience thereto. This kingdom is brought to view when we pray, "Thy kingdom come," and this obedience when we pray, "Thy will be done on earth, even as it is done in heaven."

The death and resurrection of Christ were necessary in order that he should have the power to bring from the dead to immortal life all those who sleep in him. And the resurrection of the saints, also, is necessary in order to form a cabinet of officers to reign with Christ over the nations, to compel obedience to just and righteous laws, and to punish the refractory, even "with a rod of iron, if necessary." All these are necessary in order to the grand finality, to-wit: the restitution of earth.

*[As to the future promised life and blessings—understood confusedly by both faith and hope—this expression is correct. Faith stops, however, refers to past transactions, and specially to the death of Christ. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God." Heb. xi. 3. "Through faith to his blood." Rom. iii. 25. Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. xv. 3.—EDITOR RESTITUTION.]

SOLITUDE; OR, ALONE WITH GOD.

It is a sign of superficial piety when Christians are almost always seeking the excitement of public meetings, and have no desire for solitude. It shows that there is little preparation of the soul and spirit, by secret prayer and meditation, for discharging the duties and meeting the trials of daily life. It is for the want of this preparation in solitude that there are so many failures and stumblings in the lives of the generality of Christians. And it is the want of this that renders meetings for prayer and for the preaching of the Word less interesting and less useful than they would otherwise be. There is a sense in which we shall have to die alone; but if we cannot endure to be alone now, communing with our own spirits, or communing with the Lord, how shall we be when we have to face these great events? Let us never fear to be searched through and through, that no lurking evil may be hidden from us, and that a thorough regeneration of our whole souls may be wrought by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Frequent seasons of loneliness or solitude are necessary for the strengthening of our virtues, the maturity of our characters. Solitude is necessary for reviewing our tempers and our behavior, for meditation on the Word, for contemplation of the divine attributes, for fellowship with God, for intercession for the saints and for sinners, for our establishment in the faith, for gaining knowledge, fortitude, courage, power and unction for Christian work. "The solitude that has Christ in it," says Dr. F. D. Huntington, "renews man's strength. It fortifies his resolution. It establishes his peace. It clears away the dust of the earth and day-delusions and the damps of its night-sorrows. It enables us to look abroad with an untroubled eye on the future. It makes the mind populous with beautiful imagery from regions of the invisible. It sends the thoughts on cheerful pilgrimages to all the holy shrines of the Bible and the universe. It lets in happy memories through the open doors of our affections to console our misery, and blessed promises to animate our faith. The Father is with us."

If a Christian would rise in purity above the generality of professors,—if he would escape from the corruptions, that have the sanction of the Christian name,—if he would be constantly ready and waiting and looking for the appearing of Jesus, he must be much alone. There are many things in our churches, our institutions, our associations, our societies, and our social customs, unfavorable to entire devotion to God. The various practices and habits of the present times, if fully complied with, will leave but little time for shutting the door of our closet, and getting a fuller, a more blessed experience of divine and perfect love. A frequent solitary walk, or a walk alone with God, is necessary to deep spiritual-mindedness. Many by neglecting this are walking in a fog while they might walk in clear, bright sunshine.—Silas Henn.

An Ancient Library.

It is now more than thirty years ago, says a member of the Society of Biblical Archæology in Knowledge, since Sir Henry Layard, passing through one of the doorways of the partially explored palace in the mound of Kouyunjik, guarded by sculptured fish gods, stood for the first time in the double chambers containing a large portion of the remains of the immense library collected by Assurbanipal, King of Nineveh. The floors, to a depth of a foot or more, were covered with thousands of tablets, all engraved with cuneiform writing; many in perfect condition, but the majority broken into several fragments, frequently widely separated, and portions apparently sometimes missing altogether. These tablets were of various sizes, ranging from one inch square to about nine by six inches, by far the greater portion alike in shape, something similar to a pin-cushion, or dog-biscuit, but occasionally resembling a cylinder or small barrel. The lesser ones contained perhaps only two or three lines of characters; the larger sometimes nearly one hundred. From the manner in which they were heaped together and broken, and the fact that many have been found buried in neighboring parts of the debris, it is evident that these chambers were not the original depository of the tablets, but that the library must have been placed in the upper part of the edifice of which they formed a part. Then, upon the destruction of the building, they were precipitated into the position in which the explorer found them. Since that time, with but slight intermissions, this treasure-house of a forgotten past has been turned over again and again, notably in the expeditions of the late Mr. George Smith, and still the supply of its cuneiform literature is not exhausted. Until last year this discovery remained unique; but the perseverance of the British museum authorities, and the patient labor of Mr. Ranam Were [illegible] rewarded by the exhumation of what is apparently the library chamber of the temple or palace at Sippara, with its 10,000 tablets, resting undisturbed, arranged in their position on the shelves just as placed in order by the librarian twenty-five centuries ago. The contents of the library, so [illegible] they have yet been deciphered, [illegible] to commercial transactions.—Tribune.

RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 10, 1883.

EXPECT to go to Br. W. T. Gu..in's by way of Nickel Plate Road on Saturday.

BR. BOND'S article came too late for this number. Will insert it in our next.

SO FAR as we have read some books sent us we are favorably impressed with their contents. Will do something more than notice by title shortly.

READ the selection from the Rainbow—"Progress of the truth in its ins." How wonderfully the truth of eternal life only in Christ is spreading. In addition to two papers in our own country we send one abroad. Who would like to send one to India to the writer of this article. The expense for one year is $2.50, including foreign postage.

THE DEPARTING YEAR.

Since we wrote in our last number on "The Departed Year," mornings and evenings have opened and closed the primal days of another cycle that we name with the slight variation of one word, "The Departing Year." It is by the swift succession of these briefer periods, made by rising and setting suns, that the ages of old gray antiquity have become so remote that the most penetrating eye of far-sighted historian can scarcely discern across the intervening stretches of dim oblivion the fading out of that earliest dawn of loveliness, when Morning Stars sang their celestial melodies and sons of God exulted over the new-born creation. A feeble radiance glimmers across the deepened gloom of the ever lengthening duration, faintly revealing in the extreme distance a long-lost Eden of fadeless bloom, where grew a tree by whose life-sustaining fruitage, youth, beauty, and being could be perpetuated to time without end. Hard by grew a fatal tree in whose noxious fruits were mingled the discordant properties of good and evil with an imbittering of poisonous mortality. The new-made pair ate the forbidden fruit "of mortal taste" and lost Paradise.

During the long tract of the ages since, the earth has reeled under the curse, sin and death have run riot through the world, and groaning creation has been agonized with "lamentation and mourning, and woe." Like oases in trackless desert, some patriarchal landscapes dot the wastes this side of the Garden of God to which "angel-visits few and far between" were made. Once only since that bright morning of creation have the heavens been flooded with celestial brightness, once only have Morning Stars chanted their hymnals and Sons of God exulted in transports of joy. Over a manger-cradled infant in a Bethlehem stable the heavens above grew brilliant in radiancy, and the glad voices of Celestials sang such melodies as are heard around the throne of the Invisible.

But we dwell not in the past. From the desolations and ruins of 6000 years we turn away. The light from the "evening time" is glimmering backward to cheer and direct the footsteps of the last-over part of the church in this "time of the end." We have looked sorrowfully back upon a Paradise Lost, but the apocalyptic veil is slowly lifting, and beyond its beautiful fringings and foldings we can discern the New Jerusalem with its gem-built walls, its pearly gates, its golden streets, and its abodes of sanctity, as it comes down out of heaven to glorify the Paradises of a world made new. O how beautiful will this ancient earth become when decorated with its restitution glories! Then groves of fragrancy and unwithering leaf shall grace the waste plains, and roses of divinest tintings beautify the deserts and infuse the balmy air with sweetest incense. With rainbow hues more beautiful than summer paints on Sharon's matchless flowers, shall light color the dawnings of mornings without clouds. Earth's countless days shall be days of sevenfold and softest splendors, and its night-skies shall be vastly more thick-set with stars of undimmed lustre, for as earth becomes a heavenly country, we may expect that new stars and new constellations will glow in the infinite spaces above.

Toward that regeneris, when "he that sits upon the throne shall make all things new," we hasten. The church has well nigh finished her night watch. Soon shall she see the King in his beauty. Long has she been a mourner, looking down into graves where redeemed captives are held in the bondage of corruption. But now she looks [illegible] ecce resurrection. Angels [illegible] the Heir of earth when [illegible] solemn state of the [illegible] orders.

ing and seraphs from the Holy of Holies will soon newly attune their golden harps to sing the coronation song of the King of kings and Lord of lords. To the year [illegible] a few connected years, the finger of prophecy is ominously pointing. It is a year of that small cycle called "the time of the end." Its nearing boundary is the border line of the Millennium, and our year may touch that line of dispensations. And while our pencil traces these words, that mystery, denoted by the symbol characters, "1883," is departing. A little time to work for Him, who holds the crowns, is all that remains for the left-over fraction of the church that is out of the grave. O to work as those who have fallen asleep! O to work as apostles worked—as martyrs worked—as all the saintly ones whose names are in the book of life once worked! He, whose smiles are life and whose benedictions are raptures, is coming—and coming soon. For that coming an agonized creation groans. For that coming a church in robes of mourning widowhood weeps and prays. He says, "I come quickly." Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus.

Explanations and Corrections.

In our two last issues several errors escaped correction. In the article headed "Robert Ashcroft on the Bible," in the very last number, in the fifteenth line of the fourth column, on the third page, the word variety should read vanity; about seventy-three lines further down the same column the incomplete sentence, "In that case it looked as though it had been created," should read, "In that case it looked as though it had been created in vain."

In the preceding number, in the address of Mr. Charles Byse, "To the Friends of the Belgian Evangelical Society," in the fourth column, on the fourth page, and about twelve lines down that column, the following exceedingly faulty sentence occurs: "The majority, no d abt, still think that this salvation consists in the folicity according to being made miserable by sin." We made this fully as bad in our abortive attempt at correction in our last, where it was changed to read: "According to beings made miserable." Two words should have been corrected, and the sentence made to read: "The majority, no doubt, still think that this salvation consists in the folicity according to beings made miserable by sin." As we have twice spoiled the meaning of this sentence through want of care, we will give the expression in French, as sent us by our worthy correspondent, Mr. Pettingoll: La plupart, sans doute, pensant encore le salut consiste dans la felicite accordee a des etres rendus miserable par le peche."

Some of our readers were educated in Paris, and they will readily perceive that the talented translator, Mr. Pettingell, gave an accurate and close rendering of the French into English. This is perfectly obvious to us, with our superficial knowledge of French. We greatly regret the twice made blunder. Calls away of proof readers, and many cares pressing just at this time of year, will, we hope, be accepted as an excuse in part, and for the rest we must bear whatever censure may be our due. Hereafter we will try to closely watch copy. To readers of the French we say we have not the type to represent the French accents.

BOSTON, MASS., January 1.—A letter received in this city from an officer of the United States steamer Alaska gives an account of a meteor which was seen from the ship on the evening of December 12, 1882, a few minutes after sunset, in latitude 38 degrees 21 minutes, longitude 134 degrees 7 minutes. All at once a loud rushing noise was heard like that of a large rocket descending from the heavens with immense force and velocity. It proved to be a meteor, and when within ten degrees of the horizon it exploded with much noise and flame, the fragments streaming down into the ocean like great sparks and sprays of fire. The most wonderful part of the phenomenon then followed, for at the point in the heavens where the meteor burst there appeared a figure shaped like an immense distaff, all aglow with a bluish light of intense brilliancy. It kept that form for perhaps two minutes, when it began to lengthen upward, and, growing wavy and zigzag in outline, diminished in breadth until it became a fine, faint spiral line at its upper end, dissolving into gathering clouds. It remained for about ten minutes, when it began to fade and finally disappeared at 11 minutes past 6 o'clock.

PLEASE read the new advertisements in this paper. The new Edition of Brother Magruder's work against Ingersoll and infidelity is now ready. We have also received a large invoice of books written by Brother Wiley [illegible]. We will promptly fill all your [illegible] pocket?

Selections.

THE CASE OF PASTOR BYSE.

The Protestant Church of the Rue Belliard, in the city of Brussels, is a church included in the Presbyterian system, and consequently under the control of the Synod of the Belgian Home Missionary Society, otherwise called the Evangelical Society. To the pastoral charge of this church, Monsieur Charles Byse was elected a few years back, and soon after became famous throughout Protestant France as the translator into their language of Edward White's treatise on "Life in Christ." The conference of pastors of the province of Liege at once took alarm, and warned Monsieur Byse of what he had to expect when the Grand Synod should next meet in conclave. The hostility of the synod was not long in pronouncing itself, and may probably be fairly represented by the language of Pastor Durand, one of their prominent members, when he said, "The entire Whitish doctrine is founded on materialism. It modifies, or rather overthrows, the dogma of the Fall, and hence the whole doctrine of the redemption." . . . "The system of conditional immortality is a menace and a danger, not only for evangelical Christianity, but also for all natural and revealed religion."

Eventually, to make a long story short, the Synod decreed Pastor Byse's dismissal from the number of their ministers; but he and his Church anticipated the blow by excommunicating themselves; and although by this act of severance from Presbyterian protection they probably lose their chapel, they at least enjoy "the glorious privilege of being independent."

Various letters, as is well known, have recently appeared in the Christian World, reflecting on M. Byse's good faith in the matter—urging, for instance, that he ought first, before preaching, to have submitted his views to the criticism of his brethren in the Synod. M. Byse says in reply that he had put himself under no engagement when accepting the pastorate, and that his reservations in respect of everlasting torment, which were most explicit, had been accepted as quite satisfactory." No one who knows anything about M. Byse will accept a charge of this nature against him. His probity is as securely established as his scholarship. This, therefore, is not the point at issue; though it is very possible, nay, nothing is more likely, than that the Synod little expected at first whereunto all this would grow, and that it was only by very slow degrees that they at last opened their eyes to the temper of M. Byse's weapon, and its capacity for undermining spiritual despotism. As the ugly fact expanded into more ominous dimensions, they raised the old war-cry for union. No advance against the powers of Rome without uniformity of belief, without synodical action, without periodical inspection of our "stand of arms."

No. The prominent fact which flashes out of this most auspicious and happy event, for such I regard it, is the fatality which has ever attended religious synods and councils, from the time of the great apostasy down to our own era. All ecclesiastical historians bear witness to the fact, yet ecclesiastics in every age, with a few exceptions, exhibit a constitutional tendency to try the experiment over again. There is a strong leaning in this direction even among the Baptist ministers of our own country, for Presbyterianism has a strange fascination for leaders. The pamphlet entitled "Independency weighed in the balances and found wanting" is but the thin edge of the wedge, which, when driven home, will be found to be metamorphosed into a screw. Economy of power is the object put forward. Monopoly of power is the end really sought. Doctrinal councils and cabals (not to be confounded with combinations for philanthropic objects) have always fought against liberty of thought, against the emancipation of the popular mind, against the true and honest interpretation of Scripture. In vain do they essay to fight against Rome with Rome's own darling weapons; and so long as they persist in adopting her tactics just so long will she have the mastery over them. In fact there is nothing which fills Romish churchmen with more glee than to hear of Protestant synods, for well they know that personal faith is most effectually shattered and quenched by synods. "Preach your convictions, not your doubts," says Thomas Carlyle; which is but the carrying out of the Apostle maxim, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." But whoever heard of a man being "fully persuaded" about anything by asking counsel of a synod except just this, that it was the easiest [illegible] pocket?

Now let the reader of the Rainbow take warning by this ominous and let them take consolation also. An open-hearted study of their principles cannot fail to convince them that Rome and Rome's imitators have no such deadly enemy as is to be found here. We call them "principles," which is only another form of speech for the privilege of once more really and accepting the Bible in its original language. Anyhow, the expositors of these principles among us, so far as I know, are all of them men totally untrammelled by synodical fetters, and long may they continue so. At the same time, the like independence is the birthright of all.

The latest information touching M. Byse is furnished by Mr. Frederick Freer, of Bristol, who has recently come from Brussels, and who testifies "that M. Byse is supported by a large proportion of the church, many of whom have come out of the Romish Communion; and several of them spoke to me, after the service, in the most affectionate terms of their pastor."—J. Wayne, in Rainbow.

Immortality.

For [illegible] ages of sin [illegible] but [illegible] of God to reveal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—2 Tim. i. 10.

Orthodox churches of good standing hold as one of their fundamental doctrines, that God created man an immortal being, and that being such he will live on forever in a state of happiness or misery. This they believe is established by the Mosaic account of the creation which is briefly told in Genesis—"God made man in his own image, and breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul." He gave him the garden of Eden to tend, with the injunction that he should not eat of the tree of knowledge, "for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Adam and Eve disobeyed, and from their judge came the awful sentence, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." To prevent them from eating of the tree of life and living forever, the Lord placed cherubims to guard the way.

Taking this, the Bible account of the creation and fall of man, what intelligent thinker, unbiased by theologies or creeds, would for one moment find in it proof of man's inherent immortality? The being which awoke into existence by the breath of God was a living soul without knowledge of good or ill. The penalty of disobedience was death, that from the day the sin was committed, corruption should commence and death should follow; of dust they were created, to dust they should return. And to prevent their becoming immortal in their sinful state, cherubims were placed to guard the way to the tree of life. Thus did death enter into the world. Paul wrote, "For as in Adam all die."

The old patriarchs died, and the Bible says "they slept with their fathers." No word was written of a conscious existence after death. Of Enoch, Moses and Elijah no definite account is given. "Enoch was not, for God took him." Moses died and God buried him, and Elijah was caught up into heaven, but all through the Bible death is spoken of as sleep. Job voiced the feeling of doubt and uncertainty about the future which filled the minds of men, as well as of the trust and confidence they had in God's word. "If a man die shall he live again?" "I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." He does not say I shall see him after I die, but in my flesh, after the resurrection.

David sang, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with his likeness." Awake from what sleep? The sleep of death, from which Paul says, "they that sleep in Christ shall rise first." Solomon urged men to "do with thy might whatsoever thy hand findeth to do; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." If man was immortal and had a conscious existence after death, would he have spoken thus? Are not wisdom and knowledge the possessions of the soul? Solomon also said, "then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to the God who gave it." The spirit was the breath of life which God breathed into man, at his creation and death was the yielding up of that breath.

Hezekiah, the king of Israel, being about to die, thus prayed, after God had added to his days fifteen years: "Thou hast in mercy to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption. For the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope in thy truth. The living, the living praise thee as I do this day. If death were the gate [illegible] those words? [illegible] say other book [illegible] not think that Hezekiah [illegible] death was oblivion or a sleep [illegible] he would be unable to learn of [illegible] praise him?

Orthodox churches sing:

"When in this poor feeble form we [illegible]
I live obedient to the grave,
To sing a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll use my power to serve."

The Bible says: "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" When Daniel, the man greatly beloved, had finished his work. God said, "Go thy way, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." If he passed to heaven from earth, why was he told to rest until the end? But, objects the theologian, such a belief is sacrilege; it dishonors God. The truth cannot dishonor the source of all truth, neither can it lessen the greatness of his creation. Immortality, whether given to man as his birthright or conferred upon him as the reward of well doing, is alike the gift of God. Said a noted minister: "It is not possible for the soul of man to die; it must live on forever."

Did not God create myth? Has he created what he cannot destroy? There is absolutely nothing in the Old Testament to prove man's immortality.

Upon this era of doubt and gloom arose the Star of Bethlehem, announcing the birth of him who came to bring life and immortality to light through the Gospel.—St. Paul Globe.

Communications.

The Wonders of Christian History.

The following thoughts were suggested by reading Mrs. Davis' letters, giving an account of Gen. Wallace's reception at Jerusalem, the minister and representative of the United States Government at Constantinople.

More than eighteen centuries from the time the wise men came to Jerusalem asking, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him;" and from the time that Pilate the Roman governor nailed to the cross the royal title, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," written in the three great spoken languages of the world.

And from the time Jerusalem, her city and sanctuary, were made a heap of ruins by the Roman armies, that Gen. Wallace, representing a land unknown to the nations for more than a thousand years after Jesus our Lord was crucified, met the escort coming from the Jaffa gate to welcome him to the holy city.

He was from a land where houses of worship were erected on hills and in valleys in every city and village from the wilds of Maine to the shores of the Pacific, in the name and to the honor of the crucified and risen Jesus.

A land that holds communication with the other nations across continents and under oceans in moments of time.

With railroads across the entire continent, branching in every direction. Mighty engines propelling palace cars whose magnificence outrivals the myths and fancies of Arabian romance.

Harvesting machines that gather the nation's harvests with a dispatch never dreamed of.

Printing presses with a power and capacity that is astonishing.

Telephones, electric lights, etc., etc. Leading thinking men to ask with the one in Daniel's prophecy on the bank of the river—How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? The answer comes back, "When he shall put an end to the dispersion, all these things shall be understood." (Thompson's translation of the Septuagint.) And again, "Unto twenty-three hundred days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

If Brother Miller was right (as I suppose he was) in cutting off the seventy weeks from that number, and the seventy weeks reach to the destruction of the city and the sanctuary, and that took place in the seventies, the remaining eighteen hundred and ten would carry us to the eighties of this century.

The movements of God's providence look like this being the solution of the great problem—"Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

[illegible] while threshold of a year [illegible]
Oh! let him wish us, for the day is hidden,
And we might wander were we left alone.

We [illegible] as fit as so many to labor,
And see [illegible] us, as our teacher [illegible]
So ready to [illegible] so firm, so faithful,
On whom we [illegible] at every time to depend.

We see the clouds, which once appeared [illegible]
Grow whiter and redder in thy glorious light;
Yet we confess before thy youngest [illegible]
And want [illegible] to walk by sight.

We see it all, and know it as thou [illegible]
Thine aim right way along the years gone by;
Then we will [illegible] for the future also.
And, dark or light, believe that then all ought [illegible] especially, who as we have journeyed

All [illegible] share with the present year.
All [illegible] faith will end, and [illegible]
Even;
For thou in all thy beauty may'st appear.

Grant this, O God! and keep us ever watching
For we may welcome then, if thou dost come;
Our [illegible] hour before that happy morning
Be just a step that leads to thee and home!

Tom's Gold Dust.

"That boy knows how to take care of his gold dust," said Tom's uncle, often to himself, and sometimes aloud.

Tom went to college, and every account they heard of him he was going ahead, laying a solid foundation for the future.

"Certainly," said his uncle, certainly; that boy, I tell you knows how to take care of his gold dust."

Gold dust. Where did Tom get his gold dust? He was a poor boy. He had not been to California. He never was a miner. When did he get gold dust? Ah! he has seconds and minutes, and these are the gold dust of time—specks and particles of time which boys and girls and grown-up people are apt to waste and throw away. Tom knew their value. His father, our minister had taught him that every speck and particle of time was worth its weight in gold dust.

Earth in Gloom and Glory.

The Scriptures not only plainly delineate the origin, nature and destiny of mankind, but the past, present and future of our habitable globe is as clearly defined. "We understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God." God inquired of Job, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof?" None of us were there at the wondrous birth of creation, but by faith or confidence in what God has said in regard to it, we believe that in obedience to the command of the Almighty, the Creator, it sprang into existence. "He spake, and it was done; he commanded and it stood fast." "God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." The infancy of our world was fraught with innocence, beauty, joy and blessing.

But while yet in the days of infancy a sad change came o'er the planet. Its visage once so fair and beautiful, is sadly marred. The echoes of the joyous shout of the angels at its birth, had scarcely died away ere a sad wail of sorrow came from guilty, sin-burdened hearts, and for near six thousand years earth has been plunged in a sea of sorrow. The blessing gave way to the curse; the beauteous flowers of Paradise to thorns and thistles; the mutterings thunders of God's wrath and the lightning stroke of his anger has caused the hearts of men to quail with fear, while tempest, earthquake, war, pestilence, famine and death have held high carnival over earth's doom. "We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." And shall it ever groan? Or shall a second Adam, born of God, regain the lost estate? While one brought sin and death into our world, and all our woe, shall not another, mightier far, remove alike the sin and curse? While human ken may not penetrate the darkness that envelopes the future, yet he that saeth the end from the beginning hath deigned to reveal to the children of men the destiny of the world. If God deigns to speak to such as we, truly we should bend the ear to listen, and apply our hearts to the understanding of his word. "O, earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord." "There shall be no more curse."

"Ah! weary mourning one, do ye not know
There is a land where [illegible] flowers grow,
Where [illegible] heard the mourner's bitter sigh,
And gathering tears shall never dim the eye?
There is a better land plainly revealed in the Scriptures, but it is none other than this with the curse removed, with a few additional touches of beauty and joy by the great Artist of the universe. The revelator in vision saw the "new earth," and saw "the new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven," upon it. But this new earth is the old torn firma with the curse removed, [illegible] primal goodness restored, [illegible]

"Earth, earth, thy woes, so long since past,
The creating shadows gather fast;
Beneath a dark and threatening frown,
The sun in gloom is gliding down;

"Long thou hast groaned 'neath sin and crime,
While Satan's powers have all combined
To make mankind to sin a slave
And send them guilty to their grave.

"Many the sorrows thou hast borne
Since thou wast of thy beauty shorn
And since thy God pronounced thee good,
Thou hast been crimsoned o'er with blood.

"Yet there's for thee a brighter day,
When all thy filth shall pass away;
Ah! not a taint on thee remain—
Thy God will make thee pure again."

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing such general inquiry, [illegible] Just out of press.

THE OPENING YEAR.

BY W. BYRNE.

The Old Year, with its record,
Is gone forever more;
The New Year, full of promise,
Stands waiting at the door.

Ah! could we live it over!
So night was of the past:
Live we the new, as we wish we now
That we had lived the past.

That past, its lessons teaching,
With guiding light should on me,
To warn from self-dependence,
And lead to grace divine.

With high resolve, and holy
With purpose, firm and true,
Let us go forth with meekness,
God's will and work to do.

Then, golden moments wasted,
And days all dark in vain,
Shall not to sadly color
The year we now begin.

THE COSMOS.

Ὁ κοσμος is the term by which the creation is distinguished in Genesis 2nd chapter, 1st and 2nd verses, the specific creation being defined to be that of the heavens and the earth. From that time on, through the length and breadth of the Scriptures, Old and New, the term in this general signification is one of frequent recurrence. I purpose to consider this term in its relation to the animate creation with man as the head, and I will therefore first define it. The word κοσμος is a verbal noun from the verb κοσμεω. This verb means primarily to arrange according to law or method, and finally, because such an arrangement necessarily results in, and in fact is, the law of beauty and harmony, comes derivatively or consequentially to mean to beautify or to harmonize. Then a κοσμος primarily means an arrangement of things according to law, and finally, as stated above, a thing of beauty, or a harmony, or a harmonic arrangement of things.

Therefore whether we consider God's creation here spoken of as merely an arrangement of things according to law or a harmonic arrangement of things, or as a result of such an arrangement namely, a thing of beauty, we shall be profited by an inquiry which leads us to investigate what factors enter into such a constitution of things. I will, therefore, institute and endeavor to answer the inquiry as to what the essential factors of such a harmonic whole are, and will name what I conceive to be these essential factors in the order of their importance, and first time, second number, third rythm. I give this order because there can be no human concept apart from the essential idea of time, and no relation concept without the idea of number entering into it, and no measure of a relation according to law existing between time and number without the idea of rythm. Our concept of God's creation therefore begins with an idea, however vague, of an order or arrangement of things of which time, number and rythm are essential factors, and we might say ends with this idea more or less amplified and elucidated. Now if I had spoken of harmony and predicated what I have said upon this as a subject, every musician at least would have readily understood and given assent to what I have claimed to be the essential factors of a κοσμος and would have said yes, if you apply those essential factors to matter according to law or according to certain laws, music or harmony will be the result.

But remember that harmony and beauty are but phenomena or results of an order or arrangement of things according to fixed laws, of intelligence or standard concepts into which time, number and rythm enter as constituent factors. When God speaks of himself therefore, as an ever-living God, the concept, to my natural mind, is a negative one, and I can only conceive of God as having lived before time began, or as I associate the idea of life with time. Take away also the idea of number and the idea of rythm which expresses the relation existing between time and number, and I can only conceive of a God who exists now. The concept is robbed of its past and future. Again if I undertake to view any order or harmonic plan without taking into the scope of my view its beginning and end, with at least the general relation which the one has to the other, I shall certainly fail to apprehend its significance as a harmonic plan. But to do this or to take this intelligent view, I must necessarily employ these three factors. I cannot conceive of a creation without a beginning and it would always be incomplete without an end. Neither can I conceive of anything occurring except in time, and when the fact of a creation which has a beginning and end is asserted [illegible] occurred in [illegible] occupied and was this time in unbroken continuity or not. Time, therefore, is an unbroken continuity or not. If not then the necessity of number even to determine this negative. If otherwise, then the necessity of number to determine how many times. If this continuity is broken according to some law relating to this creation of which we are speaking, then the idea of rythm asserts itself.

Let us, therefore, since God has not revealed to us anything anterior to his creation except himself and that which pertains to the spiritual, and as our first positive concept, however vague, is this creation of his, let us conceive of these constituent factors, time, number and rythm as beginning and ending with this, his creation. How important then, if we would understand God's creation or what he has revealed of his plan of creation, that we should obtain a clear conception, first of the fact that it is a harmonic order of things having a beginning and end and complete in all its related parts, according to its constituent factors of time, number and rythm, as expressed in law. The first two words of Genesis indeed very appropriately express this idea of law as related to God's creation—in space God made the heavens and the earth." "In sovreignty or rule," that is according to the law of his own will and intelligence. And then after we have obtained this general conception of his plan of creation, that we should endeavor, as we would in an attempt to grasp the harmonic thought of a great symphony to determine how the Master has expressed his creative thought in the use of these constituent factors, time, number and rythm.

Now number finds its complete expression in the nine digits. We would therefore expect that time in its relation to number would find its complete expression in the symbolic number nine, and this fact I think we find quite clearly asserted in the typical "day of atonement" being "the tenth day." The idea of atonement, when considered in its relation to God's plan or purpose being at variance with man's plan or purpose, the conception becomes the making of these two plans or purposes in some way one new plan or purpose. But God's plan or purpose as expressed by the symbolic nine is already complete and perfect, and whatever man's plan or purpose would or will add to it, is appropriately expressed by a cipher, and in making the two into a new one, we would appropriately begin where God began, as expressed by the symbolic number one. Then as God's plan or purpose was first expressed, we appropriately place the symbolic number one first and starting again in the new series, we place the expression of man's plan or purpose beside it next in order at the right hand and appropriately denote it by a cipher. But here again we find that time and number in their mutual relation to each other according to law give even a cipher a value which it does not have of and in itself; and this relative position of the cipher at the right hand of the one serves to multiply the one into ten, and so itself receive a value which it did not have of and in itself. Is not this man's part exactly in the work of atonement as taught in his word? Is it not all God's plan and purpose and is there any glory for man except in his new relation to God thus brought about? "Let him that boasteth, boast in the Lord."

Again let us see if we cannot learn something of value and importance in answer to this inquiry which I will institute. Why did God by the mouth of Moses direct the observance of every seventh day as a sabbath. Why every seventh instead of every sixth, or fifth, or eigth, or ninth? The answer which comes most readily and universally from the church is, because God is said to have completed his works in six days and rested on the seventh. "Therefore the Lord God sanctified and blessed the seventh day." If this answer be the correct one and there be no other answer besides this to be made, then the observance of the seventh day as a day of rest is certainly obligatory upon all to whom the commandment is addressed, and the only thing further to understand so as to intelligently carry out this obedience is to correctly determine what is intended to be understood by this word rest, and the word used by Moses in Genesis 2nd chapter 2nd verse is שבת which means to cease, an utter cessation from the works in which God had been engaged for six days. Moreover the author of Hebrews in the 4th chapter, in an argument running through the whole chapter, refers to this event and what God did on [illegible] in some way, consciously passed over [illegible] by so far as Gentile [illegible] concerned, the remaining [illegible] to be answered is, can we learn anything from the numerical symbolic teaching of this number eight in its relation to days of sabbatic rites, I think we can. Let us see.

We find in the 23d of Leviticus the מועדי or religious festivals of the year as enumerated in their order to be as follows: 1. The seventh day and each seventh following it. 2. The Passover and unleavened bread. 3. The "wave offering of first 'fruits" day. 4. The Pentecostal day of the bringing of first products. 5. "The reminder of trumpets" day. 6. "The day of atonement." 7. "The Feast of Tabernacles" ending with an Exodus day of service; the last three of these occurring in the seventh month. Now in their numerical relation to a seventh, the wave offering of first fruits, the Pentecostal bringing of leavened first fruits, and the first and last days of the "feast of tabernacles" were each and all of them eighth days. None of these days are specifically designated as days of שבתון, and the last two only as days of מקרא קדש. The rites by which they were to be celebrated, moreover, were all of them typical of fruits or results of salvation. "By their fruits shall ye know them" may be applied to the days as well as the observance of days by persons perhaps.

Now Christ says, while teaching how to observe the sabbath, "My Father worketh hitherto and I am working." Then the eighth day in its relation to a numerical seventh of God's employment is not a day of שבתון or cessation, although he had completed his works of creation in six days. Are we to reason then that such a day is to be a day of שבתון for man in his allotted period of employment? Is he expected to do otherwise than to bring first fruits of the spirit on such a day, or in other words is not the spirit and letter of an eighth day observance in the plan of salvation, the doing of works of beneficence in emulation of the works or rather of the employment of the Master? Is God honored in the light of the gospel of the New Covenant which is now shining by any more cessation from useful employments even? Does not any useful employment become sanctified into beneficence if the spirit and purpose of beneficence be in it? "Was not the Sabbath made for man and not man for the Sabbath?" And is not the Son of man lord also of the Sabbath? "Who art thou that judgest another one's servant?" To his own Lord he standeth or falleth. But he will stand. For the Lord is able to make him stand. For one regardeth a day above another, and another regardeth every day. Let each one be fully persuaded in his own mind. The one who observeth the day observeth it unto the Lord."

There is much more in regard to an eighth day and how it should be observed or brought out in the Psalms and much more to be said in regard to the numerical typical teaching of the Scriptures merely in the way of directing those who desire to follow it out in all its wonderful and manifold determinations of the harmony of God's Cosmos of creation as well as his Cosmos of salvation. But time, number and rythm forbid at this critical juncture.

PROGRESS OF THE TRUTH IN INDIA.

Travancore, where I live, is a province governed by a native sovereign and one of the protected States of India. More than 600,000 rs. are annually spent by this heathen government for the support of the numerous idol temples and for feeding the lazy Brahmins who devour the fat of the country. There are about 400,000 Christians, who belongs to the Syrian, the Roman Catholic, and the Protestant denominations. Many of these are mere nominal professors of Christianity. My family, my native place, where my ancestors first embraced the Protestant faith and formed the first church of that denomination in Travancore, lies seven miles close to Cape Comorin. It was eighty years ago, when Travancore was not subdued by the British, and when an opening for missionary labor seemed impossible, my grandfather was converted and became a Christian by hearing the preaching of a Protestant missionary at Tanjore, where he was on his return from his heathen pilgrimage to the celebrated idol temple of Chidambrum, a Hindu sacred place about 400 miles from here. On his arrival at Nylandy he openly declared the religion he had newly embraced, and formed the first Protestant Native church in Travancore with forty of his relatives, who having listened to his instructions, renounced their idol worship and joined him in his faith. For more than seven years previous to the conquest of Travancore by the British, he thus taught them, independently of any missionary or his agent. The Christian faith of this little infant flock was bitterly tried at the time by severe persecutions from this pure Hindu Government. At the arrival of the first missionary in Travancore my relatives had the privilege of being employed as the pioneering Evangelists, by whose labors were gathered some of the long existing large congregations.

When I was twelve years old, I entered the London Mission Seminary at Nagercoil, then under the superintendence of the Rev. J. O. Whitehouse, and received my English and Tamil education there. An accident which confined me to a painful sick bed for three months, from which I providentially escaped from the mouth of death, was the first divine means of grace to produce in me religious convictions. Since this time I resolved to reform myself by adopting early piety and to devote my life for the service of God. Four years after this ever memorable event I received the ordinance of baptism, and joined the church at Nagercoil. In January, 1852, I left the seminary, and was employed in a newly formed small congregation as a catechist and as a preacher among the heathen. Although I was more than two years a member of a Christian church, and a preacher to others, I did not then possess any true knowledge of Christ. All my religion and piety, up to the end of 1852, was to fear God, to observe his ten commandments, and to try to conform my conduct to the principles of morality. At this time a small book named "Christ all in all," fell into my hands, which I read over and over. The perusal of this remarkable book first brought me to the conviction of the salvation only by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Again, by listening to a native Plymouth Brother, who came here from North Tinivelly, I was strongly moved in the Spirit to search the Scriptures, and thereby to enable myself to teach the truth to others. My subsequent correspondence with this independent brother led me to adopt the millennial view of the personal second advent of our Lord, the literal first resurrection of the saints, and the reign of Christ in his literal kingdom on the earth. Some of the missionaries who were not believers in these truths, endeavored to turn me from this faith by their philosophical arguments. In 1855, having read the life and sermons of that extraordinary popular preacher, the Rev. George Whitefield, I was strengthened in my faith in Christ, and moved to become an itinerating preacher among the heathen. More than eight years I have labored in this capacity, and God has blessed it for the salvation of a few poor people who have renounced the idol-gods of their forefathers and become Christians. Since some of them were baptized, after giving evidences of their conversion to the Lord. These people, who were formerly most ignorant and degraded heathen slaves, are now the leading members of the Devuipuram Pastorate (Church), for the formation of which the Lord has employed me as a principal instrument. In 1866 I was ordained as the first pastor of this church. Besides my pastoral labors in the church, I preach the Gospel of Salvation to all classes of heathen in the neighborhood. As an author I have written some treatises in Tamil prose and poetry, for the spiritual benefit of both heathens and Christians. When my book on the Innovations and Errors of the Roman Catholic Church was published, the Papists have heaped upon me such abuses as "the little Calvin," "the child "of Luther," "the new heretic," etc. As a Secretary of the South Travancore Temperance Society for more than fifteen years, I published some metrical and prose tracts on that subject. Moreover I have received prizes from the Madras Tract and Book Society and South Travancore Tract Society for writing some prize handbills.

But all this time I was quite ignorant of the most precious Scriptural truth of life and immortality only in and through Christ. When the time of revealing to me this long hidden truth arrived, my Heavenly Father

HORATIUS BONAR.

Good night, ye gems of beauty,
Good night, thou gentle Dove!
Ye've sent me to my pillow,
And bid farewell to you.
Good night, ye wakeful woodlands,
Good night, ye sleeping flowers,
Amid whose smiles and odors
I've passed day's wayward hours.
Good night, ye star-girt mountains,
Ye friends, the tried and true;
Good night, ye wandering waters;
I wean, good night to you.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

Good night, dear faces round me;
Night's hours will swiftly run,
And we shall say good morning
At the ascending sun.
The farewell hour is coming,
The last good night is near,
When I shall part in silence
With those who loved me here.
Then, all my farewells over,
Just passing out of sight,
I'll sleep and untrembling,
I'll look my last good night.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

Yet not good night for ever;
For he who is my day,
Will wake me soon,—I see him
Already on his way.
No, not good night forever,
I shall but sleep in Him,
Who shall arouse me early,
While yet the dawn is dim.
He shall arouse me early,
And bid this flesh arise
In glorious resurrection,
To meet him in the skies.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

I see him—lo, he cometh!
Himself the morning light,
Prelude the dawn of gladness,
The dawn that knows no night.
O, bridegroom of the morning!
Bright bringer of the day,
For me no fair adorning,
Thy beautiful array.
Lo, Jesus, Star of Evening,
Ye, Star of Morning too,
Hath a decorated splendor,
Thine own for ever dawning view.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

PRACTICAL OBJECTIONS TO NATURAL IMMORTALITY.

The second sermon of the series on the doctrine of a future life was delivered at the First Christian Church, corner of Oakley avenue and Jackson street, by J. P. Wilcox.

He selected as his text: "And upon her forehead was a name written Mystery: Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." Rev. xvii. 5. Mr. Wilcox spoke as follows:

In my introductory sermon last Sunday evening I stated that I regard the doctrine of the immortality of the soul as the prolific mother of nearly all the errors which afflict mankind and the great enemy of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. This has raised such a storm of adverse criticism, not to say indignation, from its advocates, that I feel bound, before examining into the proofs of conditional immortality, to make good my statement. I shall therefore proceed this evening to make out my bill of indictment against this opinion and put it to shame before all mankind.

My first count in this bill is that the doctrine has a vile origin. It sprang from the father of lies himself. It was his master-piece, his trump card, which he played at the very beginning of the game. For, before Adam and Eve had acquired by experience any knowledge of his tricks, he threw down this card upon which was written the infamous lie which has been the ruin of mankind, "Ye shall not surely die." Let no one imagine I say this for effect. I regard my theme as too serious to be guilty of making any statement merely ad captandum vulgus. Let any one deny it if he dare venture to do so, that this is the first record of the doctrine that man is not subject to death.

And, pray, what is immortality? Take your lexicons of any and all languages, and trace out every shade of meaning to be attached to it, and you will fail to find any other than that of deathlessness—exemption from death. Theologians may split hairs and quibble over the meaning of the word "death," but it is using the fact stands out that it is the opposite of life, and as long as they admit that Adam received life at the hands of his Maker, the conclusion is irresistible that when God threatened death he designed to rob man of all he had bestowed upon him in giving him life. If in giving life he bestowed existence, the death threatened robbed him of that existence. But Satan, placing himself in direct antagonism to the declaration of God, taught silly man that, having once received life at the hands of his Maker, he should never be dispossessed of it; or, in other words, that he was possessed of natural or inherent immortality. Here, then, without further argument we submit that, if the [illegible] of the fall of man is [illegible] evil is the author of the doc[illegible]ine. I shall not [illegible] contradict[illegible]

Adam was threatened with death or annihilation in that very day in which he ate, and yet lived on for nearly 1,000 years. I leave that for subsequent discussion. Now, whatever be the doctrine being Satanic, it is not to be wondered at if its fruits have been Satanic also. And any close reader of the Bible or history cannot fail to discover this deadly trail of the slimy serpent all along the sad history of man from the fatal hour when this falsehood first found entrance into the world to the present moment, when it constitutes the vain hope of millions.

It is be argued that if the race were deceived by the lie of Satan they were soon undeceived by the actual presence of death, I answer that the immediate purpose of the devil was accomplished in seducing man into unbelief and disobedience, and in thus bringing death upon him. After this the race might be safely trusted to "seek out many inventions." And hence not only has the original lie undergone many transformations, but designing men have industriously built thereon an astonishing superstructure of falsehood by which they have been enabled to keep their fellows in leading strings and turn many an "honest penny," to their own account.

My next count in this indictment is that idolatry, and probably the first form of it, grew out of the doctrine that man survives the stroke of death. One of the earliest forms of idolatry, and probably the first, was the worship of the departed spirits of our ancestors. The gods of the Greeks and Romans were all deified heroes, who at death were taken to the abode of the gods as a reward for extraordinary virtue, courage, strength, or other qualities which their worshipers admired. Literal idol worship probably never was practiced except among the most stupid and debased tribes. The honors paid to the idol were really to the spirit supposed to animate it for the time being. An affectionate son would carve or paint an image of his father; and believing his spirit to be present, would converse with it, ask favors of it, and finally yield it divine honors.

The religion of the Chinese is to this day only the worship of their deceased ancestors. Deny the premises, and idolatry from the beginning of time would cease. Indeed, it is very hard to conceive how idolatry could in any age have arisen without some such origin in accepted truth. Men are not idiots in any age; but grant false premises and the more logical the reasoning the more surely false the conclusion. In like manner the horrible customs of the heathen have arisen. The Hindoo rite of suttee has its origin in the conceit that the spirit of the husband has survived his death, and in another world requires the presence of his wife, children, servants, dogs, and horses. Hence all must be offered in one grand funeral pyre. Generally, it is true, the devoted wife alone consents to the journey, but instances are not wanting where several wives, the younger children, a few devoted servants, and all the personal effects of the deceased were burned together in one horrid holocaust in honor of this dreadful delusion. Human sacrifices the world over have this inspiration. And even on American soil many a pioneer and his family have fallen beneath the tomahawk or been burned at the stake to appease the wrath of the spirit of the father or brother of some Indian brave who had fallen in battle with the pale-face.

The horribly debasing debaucheries of the Greek and Roman worship were only practiced in good fellowship with gods, who were once men and women, and still shared the lusts of their worshipers. The necromancy of the heathen, into which the Jew also ultimately fell, but which he was forbidden to practice under penalty of death, was nothing but ancient Spiritualism or conversation with the dead. It was a delusion which evil-minded persons turned to their own account, and by it led the people astray. Not that they actually did or could converse with the dead, but believing it, the evil results were just as real and just as great as though the communication was real. We say this without here having recourse to the theory adopted by some that the spirits were real, but were devils and not men.

Another count we offer in this indictment is that the delusions of Mohammed are also the legitimate offspring of this theory. His visions, by which he obtained and secured his authority over men, could only have been suggested by this doctrine. His fabled journey to heaven, in which the glorified spirits of patriarchs and prophets, Jesus alone excepted, did him reverence, would only have excited derision had not his followers implicitly believed that patriarchs and prophets had escaped death and were in heaven.

The sensual paradise, which excited the hopes, and the seven hells which alarmed the fears of his warriors, and made them invincible in battle, were but the gorgeous temple which an Oriental imagination erected upon the superstructure of the soul's immortality. Who can tell how many battles were won by the wild sons of the desert over the Christian (?) hosts of Europe by the single shout raised by some "spiritual minded" warrior and passed all along the line as it was taken up in the midst of the battle, "Remember the black-eyed houris of paradise." And, alas! how certain it is that myriads have poured out their blood like water, and other myriads mingled theirs with that of their conquerors, under the inspiration of this of all lies the most horrible.

But we now pass to consider the origin of another system of falsehood the most complicated, elaborate and polished of all the delusions that have afflicted mankind. A system so ingeniously arranged, with all the parts so interdependent and logical, and so adapted to the weak and corrupt constitution of man that nothing but Almighty wisdom and power can rid mankind of its domination—Roman Catholicism. If there is a devil and he is not the author of this masterpiece he lacks the shrewdness with which he is generally credited. But it did not spring up in a night—it is the growth of ages.

The minds of a multitude of acute and ambitious men, reasoning from the common basis of natural immortality, have been able, little by little, through long ages, to devise and perpetuate in the minds of their followers this system of imposture. It will be impossible in the time at our disposal to dissect the whole system and find the root of every vile stem of this fatal Upas tree. We shall therefore only select some of the most glaring of its many falsehoods. Let us begin with the worship of the Virgin Mary and prayers to the saints. Will any one be bold enough to say that this vain and sinful superstition which constitutes so large a part of the worship of the average Roman Catholic ever would have had a being but for the conceit that the Virgin and the saints are now in heaven? If Christians had always believed in the entire mortality of man, is it not perfectly manifest that this superstition, which Protestantism abhors, would not have existed, and that it will perish the moment men accept this truth? But from this pass to the doctrine of purgatory, which has from the time of its invention poured a million of money into the coffers of the priesthood. The immortal souls of the imperfect but not incorrigibly bad, are here undergoing a process of reformation. Their time can be shortened and the process hastened by the application to their case of the immense fund of merit which the glorified saints are constantly accumulating and placing in bank at the disposal of the regularly-appointed servants of the church. This business of banking in spiritual treasures cannot be carried on free. A check drawn on that bank in favor of your father's soul, writhing in purgatorial fires, will cost you a dollar or two, or ten, according to the avarice of the broker, or your pile of filthy lucre. Take the saints from glory and the souls from purgatory and place them where the Bible places them, in one common grave, awaiting a resurrection, and the fires of purgatory are extinguished—but so are the profits of the clergy. You may, therefore, be certain it will not be done in a hurry.

The particular abomination that fired the righteous soul of Luther and gave rise to the Protestant Reformation (?) was the sale of indulgences? What was its foundation? Why, as before, heaven has placed a bank of merit at my disposal; give me a sixpence and I will give you liberty to lie without sin, for this permit is a draft on the bank to your credit of equal amount. For a dollar you can rob, for a hundred you can commit adultery or rape, for five hundred you may murder, etc. No wonder it set him to thinking and thinking, until he was ready to say in the teeth of the whole system, "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his worshippers, such as—the soul is immortal, and all the rest of those monstrous doctrines to be found in the Roman dung-hill of Decretals."

But now, wishing to deal honestly with my brethren—I am not sure, that they are ready by this time to acknowledge the relationship—of the Protestant sects, I will only call special attention to one or two of the noisiest of their doctrines.

Of "infant damnation" I perhaps ought not to speak at all, except it may be with a hushed voice, as you speak in the presence of the dead. Of vicarious atonement it is cruel to say anything, since the logical sequence of the doctrine of eternal torment, judiciously incorporated with that of "substitution," is to place the "substitute" in an endless hell; which the most pernicious and pugnacious phraseology of Dr. Thomas would disclaim with equal horror and inconsistency. But upon the doctrine of a literal and eternal hell of fire, I suppose without serious offense I can hang away to my heart's content, since none can be found so poor as to do it reverence. However, as in years past, I have done my full share in heaping infamy upon it, I now beg to spare myself and you the trouble of doing more than pointing out the fact that nothing but the absurdity that Almighty wisdom had on its hands an immortal sinner which Almighty power could not dispose of over it, as a last resort, eternal fires to consume the unconsumable or torture with everlasting pangs that which, by virtue of its immortality, was superior to all pain.

But I may say that but for the enormous strain upon the believing faculty of the average man, for which this doctrine is responsible, even Pope Bob himself, with multitudes of brighter lights at whose fires he has lit his taper, and other multitudes who hang in rapture on his lips and cry "he is a god," would today be sitting in repentant tears at the feet of Jesus the Great Life-Giver, whom they now hold in derision as a useless excrescence in a world of immortals. I may add, too, that Universalism is but the protest of common sense and common justice, not to say benevolence, against a system which, dealing with immortal beings, could find no other use for the greater part of them than to furnish a brilliant example of how an infinitely wise and good God could exhibit his wisdom and mercy in inflicting eternal anguish upon the vast majority of his creatures in order that a small remnant of them might eternally flatter him for the exhibition. A pendulum oscillates to and fro, and Universalism is but the human heart and head at the end of the arc farthest from eternal torment. Granted the doctrine of inherent immortality and I am a Universalist—in heart; but an infidel in head—for the Bible cannot be made to teach it. Canon Farrar's doctrine of "eternal hope," now becoming so popular, even in unexpected quarters, becomes at once a vain and useless speculation when once the doctrine is believed that immortality is the reward of "patient continuance in well-doing." But whether for good or ill Universalism is the legitimate offspring of the doctrine of natural immortality.

Of modern Spiritualism it seems almost unnecessary to speak, its existence is so plainly and notoriously based upon the continued conscious existence of the dead or the natural immortality of man. I may, however, advert to the logic of their system when once you grant their premises. This superstition is such an agreeable and natural outcome of their premises that I am simply amazed that any one holding the one can avoid the other. And, indeed, they do not avoid it, for in all essentials every believer in the immortality of the soul is a spiritualist. Let us suppose a spiritualist to attempt the conversion of an orthodox clergyman. Says the S.: "You believe in the immortality of the soul?" "Yes." "You hold to its separate conscious existence after death?" "Yes." "You hold that the spirits of parents may become the guardian angels of their children and vice versa?" "Well, not exactly in that way, perhaps." "Well, I've heard you preach it. And you all talk that way at a funeral. Don't you believe that the dead have communicated with the living in the past?" "Well, yes; I must admit it." "If in the past why not now?" But Moses forbade it, and punished it with death." "So he did going out of your house or lighting a fire on the seventh day." "But this rapping business, and putting out the lights, and this free-love, and this——" "Hold on! stick to the text—that is no part of the system. Give the devil his due." How crushing would be the answer of a minister of God's Word to all this plausible and even logical reasoning from false premises to say in the language of Solomon! "The dead know not anything," or in that of David: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

But why need I go further and speak of Mormonism and the delusions of the Shakers, or of the thousands of quaint, foolish or hurtful "notions" of not sufficient importance to crystallize into "systems" of the infinite number of separate delusions which arise upon individuals from time to time, and fit them for the mad-house or hurry them into suicide? It were an impossible task to recount all the dreadful calamities which poor deceived and deceiving man has endured under the influence of this primitive lie of the Arch-deceiver, who, poisoning the fountain of life at its source, left mankind to drink of its baneful waters and strew the earth with their bones all through the long journey of the race. But for it all there is an antidote, a part certain and sure. And [illegible] you are able by this time to [illegible] see where it lies. God be praised that he has enlightened my understanding so that I am able to perceive its beauty and its truth. Hear it! all ye who wander in darkness. Hear it! all ye who halt, faltering, in doubt, by the way. Hear it! all ye who have given up the journey in despair and lie perishing by the wayside. Sweeping down upon us from the far-off hills of Judea, its music more ravishing than the harp of Æolus or the songs of the sirens, undiminished and unchanged through all the long ages of darkness, doubt and despair, come the precious words of the Prophet of Galilee: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life," "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live again, and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die."—Chicago Tribune.

STORIES FROM PYRAMIDS.

In the Gentleman's Magazine is an article on the Pyramids, furnishing some curious information in regard to the material, and inferences relating to the Scripture story of Pharaoh and his host.

There are remains of sixty-nine at Dashour and Sakkara of divers forms—one being built in five distinct terraces—and of every size; from the merest cairn of stones loosely heaped together, over the tomb of the poor; gradually advancing to the perfect structure, whether small or great, which marked where richer members of the community slept their last sleep.

The majority of these are built of the crude brick, baked in the sun, and are far more recent works than the giants at Gizeh. It is supposed that some of these may have been among the labors of the Israelites to which Josephus alluded when, speaking of their Egyptian task-masters, he says, "They put them to the draining of rivers into channels, walling of towns, casting up of dykes and banks to keep off inundations; nay, the erecting of fantastical pyramids." Scientific men are able in these old bricks to distinguish barley from wheat straw, or bean haulm from stubble. One pyramid at Dashour has been especially noted, its bricks being made almost without straw, just the merest indications thereof, as though made in time of some strange scarcity—like that when the Israelites gathered stubble instead of straw. An old wall of precisely similar bricks was found at Heliopolis, five miles below Cairo — each brick bearing the cartouche or royal mark of Thothmes III., who is generally supposed to be the Pharaoh of the Exodus; a supposition to which the monumental hieroglyphics bear strange testimony in utterly omitting his name from all sepulchral records, thereby corroborating the theory of his having shared, with his great army, their silent unmarked tomb beneath the waters of the Red Sea.

It is said that the Egyptians religiously avoided any allusion to whatever evil might befall their kings; and it is very remarkable that monuments should have been found to all the other Pharaohs, while the stones that chronicle this man's actions both end abruptly, without any mention of his death. Moreover, while all his royal brethren were succeeded each by his eldest son, it is expressly stated that he was succeeded by his second son—while the "death of the first-born" is altogether ignored.

WHEAT AND TARES, SHEEP AND GOATS.

"But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat and went his way." "And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." Matt. xiii. xxv. 33.

'Tis taught by some, who claim Scripture for the doctrine of personal and unconditional election, that some men are born tares and others wheat, or some goats and some sheep. Surely they do not mean that they are literally so, but these terms are used figuratively to mark a difference in them, either physical or moral. And as they can have no moral character at birth, the difference must be organic or physical; in which case none can be condemned for being tares (unless God condemn his own works) for he made them, and none can be pleased for being sheep. Christ did not say, "depart from me ye cursed," for my Father made you goats; nor, "come ye blessed" for ye were made sheep.

The doctrine that men are born goats or sheep, is backed by the saying that you can't make a goat into a sheep nor a sheep into a goat, which forever fixes their destiny, for the [illegible] tares cannot enter into the [illegible] but must be burned or "cast into the fire." How easy it is to [illegible] things, and yet how hard [illegible] saved. God has [illegible] all ye ends of the [illegible] And it is hard [illegible] that he would make any wholly incapable to be saved and then mock them by extending such an invitation. Let us have the "grace of God that brings salvation to all."

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a healthy belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Letter to My Cousin.

Dear Cousin:

You say there are some things hard to be understood, in the Scriptures, and refer to the place and condition of the dead, and the final condition of the righteous and the wicked, as being things hard to be understood.

It seems to me that those questions are as easy of solution as any part of the Scriptures. The great, and perhaps the only trouble is in looking at them through the serpent's spectacles, and trying to reconcile them to that lie the serpent told in the garden of Eden, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." Right here in the garden of Eden the doctrine of man's inherent (immortal) nature was first promulgated. "Ye shall be as gods," or like gods, as Dr. Adam Clarke says it should be translated. How completely the vanity of our first parents was inflated and they themselves ensnared by listening to the serpent, and giving heed to the doctrine that has taken such a firm hold upon the largest portion of mankind.

In a public discussion of the question of man's inherent immortality, a Presbyterian minister, pastor of a large and popular church, said in my hearing, "The soul is like God." Thus unwittingly reiterating the very doctrine of the serpent in his own words. I could not help thinking that this same doctrine was preached in a sermon on the same subject in the garden of Eden, and was the cause of the fall of man, and which "brought death in to our world and all our woe." This very doctrine of man's [illegible] immortality, is [illegible] the point [illegible] six thousand years. Upon this very doctrine hang all the sin and horror, pain and death, and famine, and pestilence, and war, and bloodshed from the time it was promulgated down to the present time. And as the tree of knowledge of good and evil was placed, for a "forbidden fruit," right in the midst of the garden, doubtless to try man's loyalty to his Creator; so this doctrine, the curse of those who believe it, may, for the same purpose have been suffered to follow on down through every land of life, through every generation, through every clime and every people, until the largest proportion of mankind are worshipers at its shrine. Even a professed Christian church will exclude a man its fellowship if he even doubt the truth of it. To this I can attest from experience. Why is it that men are so determined to fight for it, and dispute every inch of ground, and when driven from one point, the immortality of the soul, they take refuge behind another, the immortality of the spirit, and resolve to die rather than strike the colors painted and embla[illegible]zoned by the serpent in the garden of Eden? Why it is that men are so desperately in love with that lie, and are determined to fight for it, and die in the last ditch, rather than give it up, is certainly inexplicable. There is nothing to be gained by it, but much every way to be lost, and is lost to the cause of truth. By it the greatest discord, ambiguity, contradiction and absurdities are introduced into the Scriptures, whereas with a Scriptural view of man's nature there is complete harmony.

Thousands of volumes have been written and published to try to reconcile the Scriptures to this hateful and God-dishonoring doctrine, and yet the word of God is inflexible, and held to its denunciations against the entire progeny of the serpent, and constantly and persistently says to the sinner, "Dying thou shalt die."

It is, as has been aptly observed of profane swearing, "the devil's chief hook," and those who are led astray by it are biting at a hook without any bait. There is no good in it, and consequently no good can possibly come from it. The doctrine, in its church relationship, is Babylonish in its character, from Babel, a confusion of tongues. No two churches, nor scarcely two individuals think alike in regard to it. It is not a Bible doctrine, hence there is no standard by which to compare it. It is like a vessel full of mariners in mid ocean, without a compass, sail or rudder, each man pulling in his own individual direction—it bears the direct characteristics of Babel. Its great prototype, and it continues the grand pillar of Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and all her daughters, until the Savior shall come to make up his jewels; and it is patent to the whole Christian church that those who have believed it are deceived in every instance. Then will man be convinced of their fatal mistake. Then will be fulfilled the words of the angel in Rev. xviii 21, when he took up a stone like a great mill-stone and cast it into the sea, saying, "Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

The doctrine will then be given up as a Christian doctrine, never again to be reinstated. But will culminate in anti-Christian system, as it now has its adherents in every town and hamlet, and will lift its hydra head above all in its determination to trample under foot anything that shall oppose it; but this, too, shall be destroyed, and give place to the King and his kingdom.

But let us look at some of the inconsistencies and incongruities of this darling creature of the Orthodox church. You say that "the penitent thief was with Jesus in Paradise on the day of the crucifixion." In the first place, Paradise was not in existence on the day of the crucifixion, nor will it be until Christ shall come into his kingdom and remove the curse from the earth. Then will Paradise be restored. The removal of the curse, of course restores Paradise. Then will the penitent thief be remembered and be with Jesus. But if, as you say, the penitent thief was with Jesus when in a conscious state, then they were not [illegible] us did not die, he [illegible] the [illegible] says he died. See 1 Cor. xv. [illegible]ment, you will say his body died, but his soul or spirit did not die. Call it what you please. If the real man, the real entity, did not die, only the house in which the man lived. Then Christ was not resurrected—only the house in which he had lived. Paul says he died, according to the Scriptures, and rose again, according to the Scriptures. But if the real man Christ did not die, only his house, please tell me how such a death can be of any benefit to us. There has been no sacrifice made for us, no redemption, no atonement, only for the houses in which we live. By making man immortal, as the serpent said, the death of Christ is really denied, or at least rendered a nullity, there has been no resurrection of Christ from the dead; then, as Paul says, "they that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished."

As a solution of this oft-quoted expression of Jesus, please notice the request of the dying thief. "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Did Jesus come into his kingdom on the day of the crucifixion? Or did the Savior grant him something he did not ask for? Please notice the punctuation of the Savior's reply. If you change the comma from before, and place it after to-day, then all is clear and in harmony with other Scriptures. The translators, believing in the serpent's lie, placed the comma where it would favor that doctrine. The Savior was telling him that day, that he should be with him in Paradise, that is, when Paradise is restored. He has not come into his kingdom yet, but when he does, then Paradise will be restored and the thief remembered. The punctuation of the Bible is not inspired, but is the work of uninspired men, and was not known until some four hundred years after Christ.

Dear cousin, if you have never looked this subject square in the face, you cannot have the remotest idea of the absurdities, contradictions and difficulties attending it, and that are created by it. It is the sum and substance and point of departure of all the erroneous views that have ever obtained, or been entertained, on the character of God and on the plan of salvation.

The doctrine of the eternal burning of men and women, and even of innocent babes in hell, is a direct offspring of the serpent's lie; the doctrine of going to heaven and hell at death, and then, after ages of happiness on the one hand, or of misery on the other, the soul (or spirit must be reunited to the body at the resurrection, and arraigned before the Judge, to see if there had not been a mistake made in the first adjudication. Thus the doctrine necessitates two judgments upon every individual. These, and many more similar inconsistencies, are the legitimate offspring of that God-defying and heart-killing doctrine.

You may you are inclined to think the spirit goes to Abraham's bosom or some intermediate locality. There is some concession and improvement on the Orthodox teachings of only a few decades in the past. But why this concession? Evidently there has been too much plain Scriptural proof produced—that the soul dies, goes into the grave, and shall be redeemed from the grave, etc., so the spirit must be brought into temporation and considered immortal, and the church takes refuge behind that. But this absurdity is really, in its consequences, and in the end, no better than the other. It is still the serpent's lie, and is simply modern Spiritualism, an evil genius that is rending the Orthodox churches into a thousand fragments, and, as one has expressed it, "it is the doctrine of the immortality of the soul gone to seed." The church has nourished the doctrine of man's immortal nature until it has grown into the monster Spiritualism, which has devoured many of her best members; it has closed many of her brightest lights in darkness. The serpent's lie is producing its legitimate fruit.

If you would see that man goes into hades, or the grave, and there remains all unconscious until the resurrection, you would find that many of the things otherwise "hard to be understood" would become easy of solution.

The spirit of man is his actions, [illegible] animation, life, breath, etc. When he dies these cease to act, and he returns to the dust whence he was taken, just as God told Adam he should die and return to dust. His spirit has gone out, just like the flame of a lamp or candle when it is put out. See Job xviii. 6; xxi. 17; xxvii. 3; Prov. xx. 20, 27; xxiv. 20. In death man ceases to be. His candle has gone out and will remain out unless relighted by him who is the life-giver.

THE WORD WAS MADE FLESH.

"The Logos"—word—has been a charmed expression, and a prolific imagination has revelled in its possible import through thousands of years. But my present effort is designed D. V. to dispel this charm, and in my measure indicate its import here and its harmony with other, misapplied, portions of truth.

1. "The Logos," John i. 1–14, is from lego, I speak; and hence "Logos" is the "word spoken." It occurs in the New Testament over 200 times; and its correlative in the Old Testament swells the number to nearly 1,000, in its ordinary import. This fact tends strongly to dispel the charm and mystery with which the passage has been invested. It demonstrates that "the word (logos) is the truth," John xvii. 17. The truth in all cases consists in the harmony between the terms used and the facts to which they relate. Thus "the logos" sets forth realities for our faith and to be the matter of history, rather than mysteries for speculative minds to rave in, and wander away from "truth and grace and God."

Observe: There was no spiritual pre-existent earth between the creative "word" and the facts of light and life—of day and night—sun and moon—seed-time and harvest, and summer and winter. Nay there was no man (mystical) prior to Adam.

The facts fit the words, as the left hand fits the right, and this principle applies to man and earth in all time and all their relations.

2. We have "the logos" of Jesus, His word of wondrous power, to heal the hungry, heal the sick, raise the dead, and send the Holy Ghost in Pentecostal plenitude and power. Nay, it has availed to extend the life-giving Gospel through eighteen hundred years, to "take from the Gentiles a people for his name." Acts xv. 14–16; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. It is on this plane that St. Paul says: "Preach the word"—in our idiom it is heard the [illegible] logos." 2 Tim. iv. 2. St. Peter says: "We have a more sure word of prophecy (prophetic logos) to which ye do well to take heed." 2 Pet. i. 19.

3. "Abraham believed God who quickeneth the dead and calleth things that be not, as though they were." Rom. iv. 17, 18. Thus faith still says: It is not incredible that God should in the fullness of time have sent forth his son, made of a woman under law. [illegible] sacrificial death to be a propitiation for our sins and demonstrated the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead." John i. 29; Rom. i. 4; Gal. iv. 4.

Observe: One hundred times the [illegible] was thus honored by its [illegible] fulfilment as to Jesus in time and order of events. Were they all alike pre-existent? Nay, more, were not the greatest facts and realities then but in the abyss of mystery?

Again, if such notions apply to Jesus, why not to creation—to Israel's exode from Egypt—their grand temple, and their miraculous history? But no; we are not in a dream-land. "The logos" transmits the realities of creation—with Adam, Jesus—Jew and Gentile and the church of God—the first and the second coming—all with their attendant events and results.

4. The Christian church was chosen in Christ before the world. Eph. i. 4–11; Rom. viii. 28; 2 Thess. ii. 13, 2 Tim. i. 9. Was it then pre-existent? Has any Christian any such notion of it in his own case? Or shall we allow "wisdom to be justified of her children"? The brightest page in history, takes in the life of Jesus, and his Gospel of life everlasting to dying men.

5. The longest or last argument for the pre-existence of Jesus Christ seems to have been "born blind," and is sadly in need of his touch upon its eyes. [illegible] notice that Christ spoke the logos [illegible]—deuteros theos, second God," Bloomfield on Philip—notes, pp. 7, 8. This makes [illegible] and contradict "the logos" (word) of Moses, Isaiah, the Lord Jesus and Jehovah himself. Deut. vi. 4; Isa. xliv. 6; Mark xii. 29–32; 1 Cor. viii. 6; 1 Tim. ii. 5; Rev. iv. and v. There was then "no other God"!

Again, it seems to bury the record of the child born and the son given, as "too deep" in the abyss of mystery for inquiry! Thus it would undermine "the foundations," in the middle and at both ends.

6. How, then, was "the word made flesh"? Answer: It was by fulfilling the word as to Jesus' birth—the woman's seed—the virgin's son, but the begotten of God! Amen.

To illustrate: How do we understand that the worlds were made? Answer: "By faith"—by believing the word as it gives us the record of creation. Heb. xi. 3; Gen. i; Ps. xxxiii. 6–9. Thus "the word" as to our Lord Jesus, himself and his work, is addressed to our understanding, to nourish faith, hope and love. But to unbelief this is all "foolishness!"

7. What of the clause, "The word (logos) was God"? Faith accepts it. God was there. Nay, more; he spake and it was his word spoken. D. V., it may be as "Christ's body broken, his blood shed, in the holy supper. It reads: "This is my body—this is my blood" (before his death or resurrection). How? Such is their significance, such the spirit, import, in that blessed service. Mat. xxvi. 26–28; John vi. 48–63; 1 Cor. xi. 26–30.

"Thou art the head of gold." It stood for that. Dan. ii 38. The seven fat cows are seven years of plenty, the seven lean ones are seven years of famine that consumed the fat ones. Gen. xl. 25–32. This form of condensed speech is not uncommon. Napoleon at his levee in 1810 spoke a word that set all Europe quaking and led to a great war. This was Napoleon. So of Bismarck, and so of Gladstone, to their sphere. But so much may possibly aid some to apprehend more of "the deep things of God," by perceiving that they may believe God, and yet "not see." John xx. 27.

However, my faith here reverently to God's word, and waits for that which is perfect to come, when I hope "to know as I am known." 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

There are depths and heights beyond us and we cannot walk and work and overcome only by faith. To me "the word" is worthy of God, as it is, never-

It seems an arrogant spirit that argues through a large range of reading, and notes the ever varying opinions of error-mortals so as to becloud the record that God has given of his Son," and so far bewilder the [illegible] rending the "the glorious Gospel [illegible] blessed God." It is made [illegible] evidence the crown of revelation. Heb. ii. 1–4; x. 12–18.

There are three great facts in the make up of this Scripture: 1. God was there; 2. He spake the word of course it was himself revealed, so far; 3. "There was none—no other God—before him. Isa. xliv. 6–8; Mark xii. 29–32.

There are many texts that speak of God, as God, and do not distinguish between the Father, Son, or Spirit. And we need not assume to be wise above that which is written."

"The word" may be taken proleptically—anticipatively—and thus it unfolded through prophecy and promise till verified in Jesus. "For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

In closing (by outlining briefly) I exhort all to adhere to the word of God. It is consistent with itself, and as all-comprehending as the canopy of heaven. It must be accepted, however, in its own light, like the colors of the rainbow, or the rays of a sunbeam. An attempt to amend it is to mar it.

The notion of pre-existence involves an absurdity—an existence before itself? Nay, speculation has applied it to the earth itself, and the souls of men. It seems the subsoil of the world's abounding Gnostic Pre-existence, post-existence and non-existence may all have risen from the reeking fancy of an idolatrous world, prompted by the [illegible] church and state [illegible]

The central truth, the standard, is "the word of God." Of course the pre- and post-existence and corresponding fallacies "of the evil one." The standard alone will [illegible] judgment. [illegible]

A doctrine is known of a person is [illegible]—by his company. The apotheosis—deification—of "the word" as "a god," forbids faith in the birth and life of Jesus. It belongs with the idol-notion of the heathen Hindoo's Avatar of Vishnu. It should not be named except to be exposed, and seen in its proper character and company.

"The sum" of truth is that "the word" (logos, the creative word), must be taken in its own light. It required and caused creation. Ps. xxxiii. 6–9. It required and caused Christ to create again and head up humanity and creation. Eph. i. 10; (which Adam lost Gen. i. 26, 27; Rom. v. 12–23).

"The word" of creation became (ended up in) creation. So "the word" that required redemption was so far fulfilled in the birth of the child Jesus. Luke i. 31–35; Gal. iv. 4; Heb. ii. 5–9. We see not yet all things put under him; but we see Jesus, which assures it all.

From "the generation of the heavens and earth," on to "the regeneration—the new heavens and new earth"—we trace "his goings" by "the word" as accomplished, to the honor of the Almighty majesty of the Most High.

The word (logos) is the truth, to assure our faith that all it embraces is "yea and amen to the glory of God." We trace it in redemption on the line of the genealogies, that being the channel of all history. Matt. i.; Luke i. 1–4. Its one purpose is to gather again under one head—the Christ—all things. Eph. i. 10.

But the objector quotes Jesus' saying, "Before Abraham was I am," Jno. viii. 58. Yes, as he "was before John, being preferred before him;" yet in time he came after him. John i. 15, 26, 27, 30.

Thus Jesus was David's son, as his descendant. Luke i. 32; Matt. xxii. 41–46; Ps. cx. 1. Yet he was David's Lord. For as the only begotten of God he is above all (Abraham, David, Solomon, etc.) John iii. 16–31. "In all things he has the pre-eminence." Col. i. 18.

Was not the angel of the Lord of old "the logos that became flesh?" Answer, no; because the "angel of the Lord" appears as the herald and helper of Jesus (not of himself). Matt. i. Luke i. 11–35; ii. 9.

But was not Jesus on earth and in heaven at the same time? John iii. 13.

No, not from that text; for he had then been in heaven some sixty years—as now he has been there over 1800 years.

For the truth, J. B. COOK.

P. S.—We read of "the word of promise"—the logos epangelias, Rom. ix. 9. Thus, for thousands of years "the logos," as such, was recognized, and reached to the birth of Jesus—the "word made flesh."

Again, "the hope which is laid for you in heaven, whereof ye have heard in the word of the truth of the Gospel"—the logos of the reality of the Gospel. Col. i. 5–23. "The logos" was then not a mystical term, but a revelation of the realities of the Gospel.

Levi, in the priestly tribe of Israel, is spoken of as having "paid tithes through Abraham to Melchisedek." Heb. vii. 9–23. But no one dreams on that account, of Levi's mystical pre-existent personality.

Thus "the logos"—word—however confirmed by types and covenant promises, was the root of the realities seen in Jesus' birth and Gospel. J. B. C.

THE HAND-WRITING ON THE WALL.

New Year's morning was bright and as beautiful as when the sun shone on the doomed cities of the plains; all was life and gaiety. The President's mansion had undergone a thorough refitting in the most superb style. Never anything to surpass it, if to equal it. Everything for the reception was in perfect order, the callers had commenced pouring in and Mr. Arthur and family were in their place attired in their best style. Salutations, congratulations, and happy New Years were often and continuedly made. A Mr. Allen at the head of the diplomatic corps, a gentleman of distinction and standing, had finished his congratulations [illegible] the President well and [illegible] stepped into the cloak room for his overcoat, was smitten by the invisible hand of death and fell a corpse as sudden as the spark from smitten steel. The change was instantaneous; the reception stopped in a moment, changed from the height of hilarity to sobs and sighs and silent grief and moans. Did anybody ever before witness such a change? The Capitol of our nation has been the scene of many premature deaths, but none so sudden and unexpected as was experienced on New Year's day.

Wm. Henry Harrison, a true man and a noble patriot, in the vigor of manhood, beloved, honored and esteemed by the American people. General Zach. Taylor was the next to succumb to the old greedy tyrant whose greedy maw is never satisfied. The next is our lamented Abraham Lincoln, cut down by the assassin's bullet without a moment's notice. As a statesman, a man of honor, a noble patriot, he had but few equals, and no superiors. He stepped from the topmost round of the ladder of human greatness, down to the silent tomb. Last but not least, the lamented James Abraham Garfield, in the prime of life, in the midst of as brilliant a career as ever fell to the lot of mortal man. Are there any lessons of instruction from these special dealings or acts of divine providence? God is just and righteous altogether; he meets out strict justice to nations, their rulers and subjects with an even hand. He sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust; he never afflicts or chastises without a good sufficient cause. He changes his purpose when men heed the warning; with nations and individuals—Nineveh and Hezekiah.

Have not the American people been warned and admonished, had line upon line, yet they do not repent nor return to give glory to the God of heaven. Will our chief magistrate imitate the good example set him by the heathen king of Nineveh; will the churches heed the voice of God, put on sackcloth and ashes and sound the warning that the people may be prepared to meet the desolation that cometh from afar; for suddenly and in a moment will our tents be spoiled. God never forgets. If there is no repentance, then no forgiveness, no salvation. "A wise man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself, but the foolish pass on and are punished."

The American people have shared largely in God's choicest blessings: have they in return dealt justly by the Black man, the red man and the poor? The recording Angel has entered the charges correctly; they stand in God's book of remembrance unrepented and unatoned for. Crime and vice of every shade and hue are rapidly on the increase; I venture the assertion that on no New Year since the landing of our fore-fathers on Plymouth Rock has there been such a lavish of fearful crime of every kind and degree. How fearful the words of our blessed Lord, "As it was in the days of Noah and Lot, so shall it be when the Son of Man is revealed. They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not till the floods came and took them all away." The warnings are withheld from the people, they preach smooth things, the people love to have it so.

How painfully distressing to note the thousand and one discourses, their heading and argument. The gospel of the kingdom is never named; the coming of the Son of God in power and glory to set up his kingdom and rule the world in righteousness for the age of the ages, is never alluded to. If the preachers know it they dare not proclaim it, and thus the people are led blindfold to the brink of ruin. The end is nearing. We shall see greater things than these. God's special judgments are abroad in the land. Oh, will the people learn righteousness. To the beloved of my Father scattered abroad, we say a happy New Year, but with a deep sigh and a subdued voice, and ask who of us will see another New Year. We lift our voice in fervent prayer to the God of Israel, if it is his will, to send Jesus the Captain of the Lord's hosts, and lead his people over this Jordan safely into the promised land.

We have named a few of the great men of our nation. We have considered them as honorable, patriotic men; were they Christians? That question the Bible must settle. To be a Christian is to be like Christ, to believe his teaching and do as he did. Christ never gave us but one rule by which men could become his children, viz., hear the word of the kingdom, believe the message, repent, change, and reform our practice, obey the gospel by being baptized in water in the name of the holy ones for the remission of sins. When this is done with an intelligent faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus the Christ, we are then in the way of salvation. With this platform of faith and doctrine and practice we leave others to judge who are and who are not Christians. The end is nearing; who will join the writer and plight our vows to the God of heaven to renew and double our diligence that we make our election sure.

NEWELL BOND.

PALESTINE.

[illegible] ures of the common people of Greece and Rome were full of statutes of deities, there was not one in a Jewish house in Palestine. That there is a God, that he is one God, that he is a righteous God, and that he rewards the righteous and punishes the wicked, these beliefs were more than a part of the Jewish creed; they were part of the very fiber of the Jewish character. It is from the land thus educated through the long discipline of centuries that have gone forth the influences which have made all other lands theistic, which have successively banished the idols from the churches and the homes, the licentious gods and goddesses from the imagination, and godless philosophy from the intellect. The Grecian has given the world art, the Roman law, the Anglo-Saxon commerce, the Jew religion. Greece is sacred to the artist, Rome to the statesman, England to the worker. Palestine to man. Its hills and valleys, its lakes and river, and sea-coast, are indissolubly connected with the history which has exercised a more powerful influence on the destinies of the race than any other province of equal size.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 17, 1883.

HELD our meeting in Huntington county as appointed, but have not room in this number for any report.

THE request for some one to send the paper to India has been responded to. We want to send one to New Zealand, and to some other points clear round the world, so there yet is room for missionary enterprize.

WE have not the room left this week to detail the terrible disasters that have been caused by fire and flood. One hundred persons are supposed to have perished by the burning of a hotel in Milwaukee, and the report is that 300 persons perished at the burning of a circus at Berdichev, a city in Russian Poland. Floods have rendered thousands homeless in Germany, Austria, and Hungary.

WE have no letter yet directly from Mrs. Davis, though looking for one daily. We give extracts from a long one written to the Age-to-Come Herald in this number. In answer to queries we would say to No. 1, We do not know what it would cost to go to Jerusalem; and to No. 2. The flowers are natural flowers of beautiful color, made to firmly adhere to a card in a bouquet or wreath form in the nicest manner, by Mrs. Davis—the skilled artist, who arranges them. They are exceedingly beautiful to, frame. Note well, however, we have none on hand to part with.

THE SON OF GOD.

The character of our Lord Jesus Christ has not only been the admiration of all his true disciples and followers since he passed that wonderful life narrated by the evangelists, but it has often been the theme of wonder and approbation on the part of many who were never ranked among his devoted adherents. It is only our purpose in this brief article to quote some of these expressions of admiration and praise as they have been drawn from different ones in contemplating the divine nature and character of the Son of God.

The oft-quoted and well known eulogy of Rousseau, shows how he esteemed that perfect personage who is the subject of gospel narrative as well as what impressions those extraordinary narratives made upon his mind. He says:

"How petty are the books of the philosophers, with all their pomp compared with the Gospels! Can it be that writings at once so sublime and so simple are the work of men? Can he whose life they tell be himself no more than a man? Is there anything in his character, of the enthusiast or the ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in his ways, what touching grace in his teachings! What a loftiness in his maxims; what profound wisdom in his words! What presence of mind, what delicacy and aptness in his replies! What an empire over his passions! Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act, to suffer, and to die without weakness, and without display? My friends, men do not invent like this; and the facts respecting Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as those about Jesus Christ. These Jews could never have struck this tone, or thought of this morality, and the Gospel has characteristics of truthfulness so grand, so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that their inventors would be even more wonderful than he whom they portray."

Again he says: "Yes, if the death of Socrates be that of a sage, the life and death of Jesus are those of a God."

On one occasion Napoleon said: "From first to last Jesus is the same; always the same—majestic and simple, infinitely severe and infinitely gentle. Throughout a life passed under the public eye he never given occasion to find fault. The prudence of his conduct compels our admiration by its union of force and gentleness. Alike in speech and action, he is enlightened, consistent, and calm. Sublimity is said to be an attribute of divinity: what name, then, shall we give him in whom characters was united every element of the sublime? I know men, and I tell you Jesus was not a man. Everything in him amazes me. Comparison is impossible between him and any other being in the world. He is truly a being by himself. His ideas and his sentiments, the truth that he announces, his manner of convincing, are all beyond humanity and the natural order of things. His birth, and the story of his life; the profoundness of his doctrine, which overturns all difficulties, and is their most complete solution; his Gospel; the singularity of his mysterious being; his appearance; his empire, his progress through all centuries and kingdoms—all this is to me a prodigy, an unfathomable mystery. I see nothing here of man. Near as I may approach, closely as I may examine, all remains above my comprehension—great with a greatness that crushes me. It is in vain that I reflect—all remains unaccountable!

I defy you to cite another life like that of Christ."

These utterances from men, who were not followers of Christ, forcibly impress us with the profound truth of his own language respecting himself: —"No man knoweth the Son but the Father." While we believe with all our heart that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," we as heartily believe that in this divine relationship he is rightfully entitled to be called Immanuel—God with us.

Selections.

FROM JERUSALEM.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 3, 1882.

This is a clear Sunday morning in Jerusalem. I am glad to be able to write that all is well with us here today. The Age to Come Herald came yesterday and was very welcome; also a postal card. [For the information of those who may not understand, we will here say to the friends, that our government now furnishes foreign postal cards at two cents each, which can be sent to Mrs. Davis, if any choose. A common one-cent card can be sent the same, by the addition of a one-cent stamp.]

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd are as kind to me as ever; also dear Mrs. Brinton and her son. It is a pleasure to visit her. Through all her severe trials she is ever calm, trusting, and peaceful. The kindness of her son is a solace in her sufferings.

The very appearance of the Jews is encouragement to us. They are cheerful, progressive, and possess wonderful faith, still believing their Messiah is coming. For eighteen centuries, at least, they have looked, longed, and prayed for his appearing; and their faith is now increasing. When I think of what they have suffered for their faith, which is generally considered to be unbelief, I can distinctly understand that something more than mortal energy holds them steadfast to their purpose, like the needle to the pole. [illegible] the conversion of Paul was a type of the conversion of the Jews in a day, whensoever it shall take place, we may expect to see a portion of one of the two houses of Israel, born at once; and should this be so, I can readily see how God will save the tents of Judah first. How astonished the world would be to wake up some morning and learn by the telegrams that the Jews at Jerusalem have the scales all off their eyes, as they fell from Paul's eyes at Damascus; and the hardness all out of their hearts, praising God that they have found a Savior, who has, so contrary to their expectations, already opened a new and living way, of which they have no conception. Well, however it is to be done, it must surely be done. The Jews of today are a wonder, and the eyes of the world are turned upon them. Michael is about to stand up for Daniel's people Israel.

The weather is delightfully cool most of the time. The clouds which overspread the sky, are a great comfort, as they shield us from the glare and scorching rays of a hot sun. The simoon which has been common here in summer, has not been felt this year. In fact, I believe a summer was never known to pass without this hot wind. It may come yet before September is out.

People here say that if England conquers Egypt and turns it over into the hands of Turkey, the world will consume her. That is quite probable. And if they hold the rule themselves, it will be likely to cause jealousy. Whatever may be the result of this struggle in Egypt, it must be an opening wedge to further complications; and every movement, either for peace or war, will necessarily advance the interest in the restitution of this land and setting up the kingdom of God.

Today we learn that the Pasha has brought fifty-two prisoners to Jerusalem for making threats of violence against the Christians.

I have an idea that this country will come in possession of the rightful owners, without money. This faith increases with me daily. There can be no harm in buying land; but these too poor to purchase may yet come into possession of an inheritance without money and without price. Somebody will yet fight for the possession of Palestine; and somebody will be cut in pieces too. If this is true, the logical conclusion is inevitable, that somebody will be victorious. If the "Lord shall be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel," as the prophet says it is easily seen who will obtain victory.

Sep. 5.—We have no news to-day, either good or bad. Last night was celebrated the birthday of the Czar of Russia. The Russian buildings were brilliantly illuminated, and during the evening a handsome display of fireworks was exhibited. The Russian Consul gave a grand ball and the festivities were kept up till nearly morning. It seemed that all Jerusalem was out to witness the spectacle. The music was indeed, very fine. The readers of the Herald may understand that things are sometimes done on a grand scale even in Jerusalem.

The Jewish holidays commence tomorrow and great preparations are being made for the event.

A Jew and his family from California arrived here a few weeks ago. I think he will purchase a house and remain with us. We are glad to see Americans here, as they seem to be more progressive than emigrants from other nations.

The clouds, of which I have often spoken, still appear indicative of a more humid atmosphere than was ever known here before. The vines of rest-titution must have commenced

This is the reason for grapes. We pay about eight cents for six pounds of delicious grapes. The crop is abundant all through the country.

Rabbi Simon says the Perikelia predicted as agree most singularly with the prophecies of a Jewish astronomer who lived in the fourteenth century. He tells me also that this Jewish year, which commenced last Thursday, Sept. 14th, is the prophetic year of redemption. He does not expect Messiah to appear suddenly, but says there must be a gradual change, that Elijah will come from the heavens and do what the Scripture declare that he will do.

Sept. 27.—This is the week of the "Feast of Tabernacles." The poor Jews keep it strictly. The Jews all believe here that this is the year of Redemption. I have told you this before, but I am anxious that all the readers of the Herald should distinctly understand it, so they will please excuse the repetition.

The Mohammedans also believe this year will either give them great victories over Christians, or end their power. This year they call a hora. Every three hundred years it is born, I think they are right, I hope the Jews are right also.

I am told that Cook of London, the tourist, has sold ten thousand (10,000) tickets to travellers for the coming season. It is thought we shall have more visitors than ever before in any [illegible] increase of travel is a benefit [illegible] that them come. Travel to this land will increase until "all nations shall flow onto it." The term "flow," is indicative of vast multitudes. What does God say about this?

A. P. DAVIS.

The First Stage of Christ's Coming and How Long the Saints Shall Be in the Air, with Christ.

Now, we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit nor by word, nor by letter [as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.—2 Thes. ii. 1, 2.

It appears from this passage of Scripture that some persons going to Thessalonica, in the absence of the apostle had disturbed the minds of the believers there by representing that the day of Christ was then at hand or present. Professing to be inspired, or pretending to report the words of Paul, [illegible], or to have letters from him on the subject, they thus sought to invest their erroneous teaching with Divine authority, and induced some to neglect their business, and altogether occasioning great perplexity. There have not been wanting, in all ages, those who have perverted the truth, and dishonored the cause of Christ by their erroneous teaching and fanatical proceedings. But we might, with equal propriety, refuse to eat the food which God has appointed to sustain life, because some have become gluttons and contracted severe and fatal diseases by their excesses, as refuse or reject the doctrine of the Savior's coming as a means of edification and Christian holiness, because some have abused it to fanaticism. If we were to act in this way, we would have soon to discard the whole Bible and Christianity itself; for there is not a doctrine of revelation which has escaped altogether the withering blight of those who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction; and Christianity has been perverted by the apostacy of the Church to a system of ecclesiastical despotism and moral pollution.

In regard to the nearness of the Savior's advent, it must be evident to every reflecting mind that Paul's language does not apply to the present time, as it did to that in which he wrote. Then the day of Christ was not immediately at hand. There was to be an apostacy first, and the man of sin was to be revealed. But now, since that apostacy has taken place and the man of sin has been revealed, it is manifest that the day of Christ's coming is at hand, and little remains to be fulfilled of the prophetic word prior to that long-looked-for event.

And yet the doctrine of Christ's advent was designed to be of practical utility in that and every succeeding age, and believers were exhorted to look for and [illegible] or, as it were, overleap the intervening time and anticipate the coming of Christ as a strong motive to Christian watchfulness and prayer; forasmuch as this life is to each individual the only time in which he may secure, through grace, a meetness for that coming, and a right or title to the inheritance of the saints in light, which is then to be revealed. We are now probationers for the kingdom and glory of God. And to each of us the day of Christ is as near in effect as the time of our probation is short.

But we purpose now to present the order of Christ's coming in relation to the first stage of it, which is expressed by our gathering together unto him, and in the first epistle by our being caught up together with the raised saints to meet the Lord in the air. And we remark,

I. That the second coming of Christ will be characterized by two epochs of great interest, distinctly marked, and which I have denominated stages—events taking place at two different periods. This will appear from an examination of the Divine testimony relating to the coming of Christ.

1. There is to be a point of time when the saints of God are to be gathered together unto Christ. So Paul teaches, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." If this were the only passage in which this truth was taught, it would be sufficient, but we have many rays of Divine light converging to this point. Take Psalm l. 3-5. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth (that he may judge his people) "Gather my saints together unto me: those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." It is from above that he calls; and the call is for his blood-bought people. Bob says, speaking of the time appointed for his resurrection after a period of long waiting, "He shall call, and I will answer: [illegible] shall have respect unto the work of his hands." Every believer in [illegible] say the same. To accord is to respond to the call by rising from the dead. 1 Thess. xvi. 1-10. "Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord, because he cometh to judge the earth." And, "Say ye, Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together and deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name and glory in thy praise." This gathering may have a double reference, first, to the gathering of the saints unto Christ in the air; and, second, to the gathering of all Israel to the name of the Lord at Jerusalem, both of which events are to take place at the coming of the Lord to judge the earth. Only the gathering of saints to Christ in the air will be instantaneous and all at once, while the gathering of Israel will be by successive stages, the first of which commenced about forty years ago, and is now in rapid fulfillment. 1 Thes. iv. 13-17. "But I would not have you to be ignorant brethren concerning them which are asleep," etc. Here the apostle tells us that all the saints at Christ's coming are to be gathered together unto him. Not only the living but those who are dead: the latter being raised immortal and incorruptible, the former being changed from mortal to immortal, and from corruptible to incorruptible at the same time, and both caught up in the clouds and carried as in those wind-drawn chariots to meet the Lord in the air. It was in reference to this translation of the living saints that our Savior said, "Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be in one bed; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken and the other left. And they answered, and said unto him, 'Where, Lord?' Where shall they be taken to?' And he said unto them, 'Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.'" Luke xvii. 34-37. The saints are to be gathered together to Christ in the air.

2. This meeting or gathering of the saints is to be in the air or the atmosphere of this earth, somewhere in the expanse above, and in all probability above the land of Palestine. But Christ is now exalted on the right hand of God, and is seated on the Father's throne. He is in the holiest of all not made with hands: in the unapproachable light, which no man hath seen or can see. And to meet his saints according to the Scripture testimony adduced, he must come from that place to the air or atmosphere of this earth, which is the appointed place of meeting. It is this coming from the throne of the Father to the air which we call the first stage of his coming.

3. There is a point of time when Christ is to come to the earth, and when his saints are to come with him, and which must be another stage of his coming, different from that of his coming to the air, and subsequent thereto. Jude, 14-16. "And Enoch, also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Now, this coming must be to the earth, and it is to be attended by the myriads of his saints, and hence must take place subsequently to the meeting of the saints with him in the air, and is the descent from the air to the earth.

Zech. xiv. 5, "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." This coming is to be to the earth, as we find specifically stated in the context. For it is to be at that time when all nations shall be gathered against Jerusalem to battle, and after the city shall be taken and its inhabitants subjected to all the atrocities practiced by a victorious soldiery. For "then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle; and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east," etc. "And the Lord, my God shall come," etc. This is a coming to the earth; his feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives. And in the ninth verse it is said, "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one."

Col. iii. 4. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." This specifies an appearing or coming of Christ, and shows that his saints at the same time are to appear or be manifested with him; and relates to the same stage of his coming from the air to the earth. And it is at that time also when the hearts of all believers will be "established in holiness before God even the Father at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." 1 Thes. iii. 13.

4. Now, this latter coming of Christ with his saints from the air to the earth must be subsequent to that coming from the invisible glory to the air, where his saints shall meet him; for unless the saints be first gathered together unto him they cannot come with him. If some dear friend of yours was in Washington and should send you word that he would come to see you and abide with you, and should appoint a time for you to meet him at the depot on his way, and then speak of coming to your home with you, you would be at no loss to understand the nature of this arrangement. Just so Christ first meets his saints in the air, and subsequently comes with them to the earth. And though both events are comprised in his coming, yet each forms a distinct stage of it.

5. The first epoch or stage of his coming is that spoken of in 1 Thess. v. 1-4, "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them—and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." And in Rev. xvi. 15, "Behold, I come as a thief: blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." And Luke xxi. 35, "For as a snare shall it come upon all them that dwell upon the face of the earth." Now, here we are informed that there is to be a coming of the Lord, which will be in some respects similar to the coming of a thief. This cannot relate to the second stage of his coming, when he shall come to the earth in power and great glory and appear to all. But it must refer to the first stage of his coming, when he shall come to the air and his saints shall be caught up to meet him there. Let us see. A thief comes under cover of night, or in a secret and unobserved manner; so Christ's coming to the air will be unobserved by the world. His coming, then, will not be visible. Unseen he will spread his pavilion in the air, into which he will gather, and wherein he will hide, his people from the strife of tongues and keep them secret until the indignation be overpast. A thief comes to take something out of your house which he esteems sufficiently valuable to desire its possession. So Christ will come to take his saints out of the earth; [illegible] coming to meet his saints in the air is near, even at the doors, and our redemption draweth nigh; i. e., the redemption of our bodies by the resurrection and translation. And when the saints shall all be taken out of the earth, and Jewish nationality shall be restored, another dispensation will be instituted, having special bearing upon the future destiny of the seed of Abraham, who will be providentially indicated as the first or chief of the nations. And it is during this period that the Lord says of Israel, "According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto him marvelous things." Mic. vii. 15. And as those days were forty years, so the dispensation of their future restoration will be forty years, during which the saints will be in the air.

Again, the exode of Israel from Egypt to Canaan appears to typify the exodo of the Church from this dispensation to the age to come; and as Israel sojourned in the wilderness forty years preparatory to entering the promised land, so the Church may sojourn with Christ in the air forty years before entering into the redeemed earth.

Again, Jesus said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. And Jesus, after his resurrection, continued with his disciples forty days, instructing them concerning the Kingdom of God, before he sat down on his Father's throne, which may indicate that his saints shall, after their resurrection, continue forty years with Christ in the air before they shall sit down with him in his throne. A day in this case being designed to signify a year.

There is nothing capricious in the Divine plan. The forty years of Israel's sojourn in the wilderness was designed to prepare them for the possession of the land of Canaan. They were marshaled in the most perfect order, and disciplined under the most perfect laws and ordinances, until the iniquity of the Amorites was full. The forty years of the saints being in the air with Christ will be designed to prepare them to take the kingdom and govern the nations upon earth. And they will be marshaled in the order indicated by the New Jerusalem as the symbol of the [illegible] hereafter. [illegible] and the nations shall be gathered in the battle of the great day of God Almighty, to come with Christ and reign on the earth.

II. With the first stage of his coming we have now particularly to do, and we believe it to be now nigh at hand; because the signs of the restoration of the Jewish nationality are becoming more and more apparent. Jesus said that "Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles" from its desolation by the Romans in the year A. D. 70, "until the times of the Gentiles" or the gospel dispensation "should be completed." And so for more than 1800 years the holy city has been under the domination of Gentile powers. Some fifty years ago or more 900 Jews were allowed to dwell in Jerusalem, when they were confined to what was called the Jew's quarter, and insulted and pelted with all sorts of missiles if they intruded upon any other part. But they are freed from all former disabilities and oppressive laws, and have, for the last decade especially, risen to considerable importance in the Holy Land, and in Jerusalem and in the eyes of the nations of the earth. They now outnumber all other peoples in Jerusalem, and are constantly on the increase. They have equal rights with all others and purchase all houses and lands that are for sale, and have spread outside of the walls with buildings and improvements. They have schools, synagogues and hospitals, and are beginning to manifest great interest in the improvement of the country.

The colonizing with Jews different sections of the land has also been projected and arranged, and, as if to further this object, their persecution in Russia and Germany has been permitted, so that we expect extensive immigrations into the land, and more activity in this work in the future—for the time to favor Zion, yea, the set time, has evidently come. And their national autonomy may, in a very short time, be restored. Well, what then? What is that to us? We answer, then the times of the Gentiles will end. Then the number of God's elect Church will have been completed. Then a short period of trial will be given to those saints who shall be alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord. Then, says Jesus, when ye see these things begin to come to pass, lift up your heads with rejoicing, for your redemption draweth nigh—being the redemption of the body at the coming of the Lord. Louisville Times.

THE NEW CALENDAR.

With careless hand, by the mantel shelf,
Where many a gift from friend-ones lay,
The Pulpiteer new in its place I hung
One year ago—on New Year's day.
Mere blanks, as yet, were its pages twelve,
Enrolling the silent months unborn,
With checkered lines and figured squares
That told the days, as yet to dawn.

And the months have passed in rapid flight,
And as each attained its closing day,
Like a leaf grown sere on the tree of time,
A page has dropped, and fallen away.
And sitting alone with thoughts to-night
That rush and flow like a tidal wave,
I gather me to all together again,
These scattered leaves from the old year's grave.

And standing there o'er now one by one,
These sweet and sad days all past and flown,
I can but think how full of voice
These papers echo now all have grown.
How many pearls between the lines
A record sketched in teachings clear,
Which shall stand, forever sealed,
The chapter of life we call a year.

Though some I flee o'er once again
Bright summer hours, long sunny days,
While others tell of winter's chill,
And autumn's ills which blight and haze,
And thus on some bright joys are traced;
On others, heart-aches, deep and sore;
In all are mingled pain and peace,
And troubles met and struggled o'er.

And now once more, by the mantel shelf,
With trembling heart and hand I've placed Another book of pages twelve
With checkered lines close interlaced.
What may not be in for me inscribed
In Time's on a secret ciphers be,
To fill those numbered days to come,
And all those months, with memory's

With what sad heart or joyous touch
Shall I those leaves turn, to the last,
Leave from their fold, and watch them drift
Adown the current of the past.
And shall it be my hand that may
Pluck from the stem the twelfth, ground sere?
Ere then, perchance, I may sleep
Beneath the leaves, with this New Year.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 14.

Prelude—Had the Creator a Special Purpose in the Size of the Earth? Its Physical Structure? Its Land and Water Distribution? Its Meteorological Arrangements? and in its Fauna and Flora?—Egypt Under Turkey, from A. D. 1517 to A. D. 1840-5—Egypt Under the Khedives (Viceroys), A. D. 1845 to A. D. 1882.

Prelude—Had the Creator of the earth any special purpose in its magnitude and shape? If human actions are the results of purpose, how [illegible] the work[illegible] architect. The earth was created to be the abode of a countless variety of living organisms, filling its waters, its lands and its atmosphere? But why so large? Why such a huge sphere of lava, rock and earth? Why such a waste of space and material? Why such a variety of zones? Such extremes of heat and cold? such oceans, seas, lakes and rivers? such mountains and deserts? If man was formed to be it's resident viceroy, why such vast unoccupied regions? What purpose in elevating Africa above the ocean? Why elevate its mountains, construct its lakes, rivers and pestilential marshes? Why cover 1,600,000 square miles of its surface with a desert of torrid sands and burning rocks? Why cover its fertile districts with beasts of prey, venomous reptiles, and savage races, from whose moral natures the imprint of the Deity is quite indistinct or obliterated?

Follow the steps of Murray, Leydon, the Arabian Ibn Batuta, Leo Africanus, the German Rauwolf, the Englishmen Johnson and Thomson, Renouard, the Jesuit Lobo, Theronot, Ledyard and Lucas, the French Expedition; and in the 19th century, Mungo Park, Burchardt, Oudney, Clapperton, Denham and Lander; the missionaries Moffatt and Livingstone, and a host of others whose bones are whitening on its desert sands. Trace the progress of the American explorer H. M. Stanley from Zanzibar to the sources of the White Nile, across the watershed to the sources of the Congo and to its mouth (2600 miles), amid pestilential swamps, fighting cannibals clamoring to feast upon his flesh, down cataracts, and over snow-clad mountains, suffering the extremes of a malarial climate!

Why such a continent, such a climate, and such a people? Was it created to dishonor the wisdom and the love of its Creator for some thousand years, and then suddenly be burned as a failure in the calculations of the Almighty? Who can solve this African enigma, without a personal reign of the Messiah? It has often been said that Africa has had the Gospel, and has rejected the Gospel. What part of Africa had it? What was the nature of that Gospel? Egypt had a spurious Gospel. So had parts of Ethiopia; but when did the glad tidings ever reach the masses of that benighted continent? When did they ever hear of Messiah's fame or see his glory?

In the present construction of the globe the temperate zones furnish passable locations for human abodes; but the torrid and frigid belts are under the blighting effects of the curse. Its physical laws are not adapted to a sinless race.

Why so large? An earth one-fifth its size would have fully satisfied all past demands. If the earth in its present land and water distribution is soon to be burned, where is the wisdom in its immense magnitude and mighty wastes?

With a reign of subjugation continuing 1,000 years, or 360,000 years, when not only the creature, but the earth itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. The work of Messiah's personal official reign! how extended! how grand! how glorious! Who cannot most devoutly pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as in heaven"?

Egypt under Turkey, A. D. 1517 to A. D. 1840-5—323-8. During this period of about three centuries, Egypt continued to decline. Though she had, nominally, a new foreign master, the Mamelukes were her real masters. The 24 beys governed the provinces. But there was too great a variety of religious elements for sectional prosperity. The Greek Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan and the Ancient Egyptian. Views so dissimilar resulted in conflicting social and political interests. The stronger social tendency was towards the dominant religion, that of the Koran. The religion and the laws of that Mohammedan bible gave to Egypt a character which is peculiarly destructive to pure morals.

But there is a more important part of this period, extending from the temporary conquest of Egypt by the French under Napoleon, August 22d, 1798, to the rebellion of Mohammed Ali and his restrictions by the European power, A. D. 1841-5.

The design of Napoleon, in his invasion of Egypt, was to rob the English of their East India possessions, by having the control of the land of the Pharaohs. Had the French armies in Europe been successful, his designs would have been accomplished; but sad news from the continent soon recalled him. Kleber was left in possession of Egypt, which he held till 1801, when, by aid of the British, it was again restored to Turkey, who still nominally govern the country. Napoleon and Kleber attached the Egyptians to the French by doing everything in their power to [illegible] condition of [illegible]

There were [illegible] conflicts between the Turks and the Mamelukes, till that body that had really governed Egypt for four centuries were treacherously massacred by Mohammed Ali in 1811.

The rule of Mohammed Ali, was far superior to that of the Mamelukes in its order and humanity. He was nominally the Viceroy of the Turkish Sultan, though, in fact, quite independent of his power. He made great conquests, and in various battles with the Turkish forces, nearly overthrew the Ottoman Empire. His conquests were ended by a peace forced upon him by the European powers. In 1840 the Sultan having recovered from his former reverses, began hostilities again. His armies being annihilated, the European powers came to his rescue the second time, and by treaty, July 13th, 1841, stripped Mohammed of all his Asiatic conquests; made his government in Egypt tributary to Turkey and hereditary in his descendants. Ibrahim Pasha died Sept. 7, 1848, one year before Mohammed Ali, his father. Nubia became a province of Egypt in 1820. Abbas Pasha, Mohammed's grandson, succeeded him and was replaced by Said Pasha in 1854.

Mohammed Ali introduced many improvements into Egypt. He increased the security of its population, improved its irrigation, and introduced European manners and customs, preparatory to European civilization; yet he refused to grant the right to join by ship canal the Mediterranean and the Red seas. M. de Lesseps obtained the cooperation of the Egyptian government in his Suez canal enterprise under Said Pasha. In 1863 Said was succeeded to the Egyptian government by his nephew Ismail, who, by the Sultan's permission, took in 1866 the hereditary title of Khedive (from the Persian Khidiv—sovereign). The throne of Egypt was then made to descend in a direct line from father to son, and not to the eldest heir according to the Turkish law. The Khedive was also granted, in 1873, the right of maintaining armies, and of concluding treaties (withdrawn in 1879). By the co-operation of Sir Samuel Baker, and the governor of Soudan, Gordon Pasha, the Khedive made quite a successful effort to suppress the slave trade in his dominions.

In 1875 the Khedive sold to Great Britain 177,000 shares in the Suez canal (completed and opened in 1869) for £4,000,000. The condition of the Egyptian finances was almost hopelessly involved, when in 1875 the revenue was put under the management of European commissioners." Prince Hassan, third son of Ismail Pasha, with 10,000 men, fought for the Crescent in the Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78. The new financial system having proven unsuccessful, another commission of inquiry was appointed; and ere long it was announced that the Khedive had absolutely accepted the European system of constitutional government, and had made Nubar Pasha head of a reformed administration. The summary dismissal of this minister in April 1879, was followed by the interference of the European governments. The Khedive, who declined voluntarily to abdicate, was, at the instance of the western powers, deposed by his suzerain (Sultan) in June, and prince Tewfik (the present Khedive), Ismail's eldest son, was proclaimed viceroy of Egypt." Ismail retired to Rome, where he now resides, being paid an annuity of £1,000,000. Such was the political state of Egypt when the uprising of the native population, and the slaughter of the Europeans in Alexandria (June 11) took place.

The most noted enterprise of this period of Egyptian history is the completion of the Suez canal. The construction of that canal marks the commencement of a new era in the existence of that remarkable country; an event that bears directly on the future destinies of all nations. An enterprise of so great a bearing on the world's destinies, should (within itself) have sufficient interest to excite a desire, in every one, to learn more of its history. For the benefit of many of our readers we subjoin the following items.

Suez and its ship canal.—The Isthmus of Suez is a neck of land, in its narrowest portion, 72 miles wide from the gulf of Suez on the south, to the Mediterranean Sea on the north. It connects Africa with Asia. It has within its limits the Hebrew land of Goshen, once fertile, but now a wretched waste of sand, sandstone, and salt swamps, with scarcely any fresh water. In very ancient times, far back in the geological ages, the two seas were, probably, connected. But, by the gradual elevation of this part of the two continents, the seas retired, leaving salt lakes and salt marshes. This barren waste, has, in various ages of the world, suggested, for solution, this great problem: can a water passage be made so as to connect these seas? Such a canal was constructed many centuries ago.

According to Herodotus, one was first made by Pharaoh-Necho B. C. 600; completed, however, as some say, by the Ptolemies. It ran from one mile and a half below Bilsa, and in a northwest course to Bubastis, on the eastern, or Pelusiac branch of the Nile; thence this branch connected the canal with the Mediterranean Sea. Its entire length was 62 miles, 50 miles being dug by man. It was 108 to 165 feet wide, and 20 feet deep. This was choked up with sand; opened by Amron the Arabian conqueror of Egypt, who named it, "Canal of the Prince of the Faithful." After one century it was filled with the sands (A. D. 762). Thus it has remained to the present time.

Napoleon, when in Egypt, had the Isthmus surveyed; when it was reported that the surface of the Mediterranean Sea was 30 feet below the surface of the Red Sea. In 1847 France, England and Austria, sent a commission to measure accurately the levels of the two seas. Their report was, "The two seas have exactly the same mean level." Another survey was made in 1853, with the same results.

In 1856 M. de Lesseps obtained from the Pasha the right to construct a ship canal from Tyneh (near the ruins of the ancient Pelusium) to Suez. M. de Lesseps' plan was to make the canal in a right line from sea to sea. A joint stock company was formed, and £8,000,000 were subscribed with 400,000 shares. The Pasha took many shares. The canal was commenced, and was opened for ships Nov., 1869. It was a work equal to almost any other human achievement. The canal is 85 miles long. Its piers at both seas are immense. The piers extend into the Mediterranean Sea on the west side 7000 feet, on the east 6000 feet; at the shore 4,000 feet apart, at the outer ends only 2,300 feet. The western pier is extended in an arc 1100 yds., and with the eastern pier shelters the ships from the winds.

The stones of the northern piers are artificial, composed of sand and hydraulic lime, moulded into 20 ton blocks. There is another harbor within this outer harbor, which is 800x500 yds., and of a uniform depth of 30 ft. The light-house is 180 feet high, having an electric light. Port Said (a town of 10,500 inhabitants) is at the north end, and Suez (with 15,000 inhabitants) at the Red Sea extremity.

The canal, between those extremes runs through salt lakes, lagoons, swamps, deep sands, and rock elevations. Passing from Port Said to Suez it is divided into the following natural sections: 1. Menzaleh salt water lake, 20 miles; water from one foot to ten deep; 112 yards wide at the surface, 26 yards at the bottom and 26 feet deep, with stone banks on each side 15 feet high. 2. Land section from 15 feet to 30 feet deep and 11 miles long. 3. Abu Ballah lake; small lake, work lighter. 4. Land cut of 11 miles to Tomsah lake, cutting through ground from 30 to 70 or 80 feet deep. 5. Tomsah lake, 3 miles. 6. El Guisr; deepest cut in the line, being 85 feet below the surface; 112 yards wide at the water-level, and at the summit 173 yards. Ismailia, on Tomsah lake, the half-way point, is a town of 5,400 inhabitants. Railways run from Ismailia to Alexandria and Suez. A fresh water canal runs from the Nile to Tomsah lake. This supplies fresh water to the ship canal. 7. Toussoum and the Serapeum cutting, through a plateau 45 feet above the sea. This space is about 8 miles long and was dug from 30 to 62 feet deep. The quantity of sand removed was immense. 8. The Bitter lakes; much embanking. 9. From the Bitter lakes to Suez, 13 miles. Heavy cuttings through the stony plateau of Chalouf, from 30 to 50ft. The canal is 327 feet wide at the surface, 72 feet at the bottom and 26 feet deep. In Nov. 16, 1869 it was opened in form, with a procession of English and foreign steamers; the Khedive, the empress of the French, the emperor of Austria and others being present; also the crown-prince of Prussia.

"On Nov. 27 the Brazilian went through; a ship of 1869 tons, 380 feet long, 30 feet broad, and drawing from 17½ to 20½ feet of water. Since that the canal has continued in successful operation, and passages have been made almost daily, chiefly by British vessels. The cost of construction to Dec. 1869 was estimated at £11,627,000. In 1870, 491 ships of 436,618 tons, passed through; and in 1874, 1264 ships, of 2,424,000 tons. About 70 per cent. of the shipping and tonnage belongs to Great Britain."

The immense value of this canal, lies in its shortening distances between Europe and India. From [illegible] to Bombay by the Cape is 11,220 miles, by Suez canal, 6,332, shortening the voyage 24 days. The rate of passage through the canal is 6 6 knots an hour. Canal charge, 10 francs per ton, 10 francs per head for passengers. Receipts for 1870, £1,245,[illegible] steadily increasing. J. P. W[illegible]

Take Care.

AUTHOR UNKNOWN.

Little children, you must seek
Rather to be good than wise;
For the thoughts you do not speak
Follow out in your cheeks and eyes.

If you think that you can be
Cross and cruel, and look fair,
Let me tell you how to see
You are quite mistaken there.

Go and stand before the glass,
And some ugly thought contrive,
And my word will come to pass
Just as sure as you're alive.

What you have or what you lack,
All the same as what you wear,
You will see reflected back;
So, my little folks, take care!

And not only in the glass
Will your secrets come to view;
All beholders—they pass,
Will perceive and know them, too.

Goodness shows in blushes bright
Or in eyelids drooping down,
Like a violet from the light,
Hidden up in a cover of brown.

Cherish what is good, and drive
Evil thoughts and feelings fast;
For, as sure as you're alive,
You will show for what you are.

You often hear boys and girls say words when they are vexed that sound as if made up of a snarl, a whine, and a bark. Such a voice often expresses more than the heart feels. Often, even in mirth, one gets a voice or tone that is sharp, and it sticks to him through life. Such persons get a sharp voice for home use, and keep their best voice for those they meet elsewhere. I would say to all boys and girls, "Use your guest-voice at home." Watch it by day, as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you than the best pearl in the sea. A kind voice is a lark's song to a hearth and home. Train it to sweet tones now, and it will keep in tone through life.—Child's Guide.

To a Young Friend.

My Dear Boy:

It may seem that we who profess the name of Christ have no interest in you, that we never think of you, nor care for your welfare, but we do. We looked upon you when recovering from your recent illness, with strangely yearning thoughts. Your pale face and emaciated form told but too plainly how near you had been to the dark river of death.

Could you be brought to God? would we say or do anything that would lead you to think of the life that is to come?" were questions that troubled us by night and by day. You are still in our thoughts.

In tenderness and love we pray for you. We take your name and spread it out before our God, sure that he knows all your troubles and all your needs.

"Oh," we say, "we cannot look into this dear boy's heart. We do not know what is in the way of his coming to Christ, but all is open as an open book to thee. Take, oh take the stumbling stones from his path, the mountains of difficulty from his way. Let him feel that thy grace is sufficient for him, as it has been for all thy children in the days gone by. Let him know thee as thou art. Let him see thy love. Take all his self-righteousness away. Show him how poor and needy and blind and helpless he is without thee."

Oh, my dear boy, there is no hope without God! no hope!

No way is open to you whereby you can be saved, except that which God has opened. All other doors are closed.

You know this. You have felt your need. You want to be where the things that you do will be looked upon by the pure and holy eyes of God as good things. You want him to look upon you as good.

But you have done a great many things that are wrong. You cannot get rid of the stains of those sins yourself. You cannot wash them out. All the good things that you do, while you stand where you are, will not make God take your guilt away: will not save you.

You want still to do as you please. You want to have your own way. You want the great Creator to come down to your will; to save you, while still an alien and a foreigner. But he has never promised to do this; never given you one word of assurance while standing outside of Christ.

Is it not right that you should give up your will to his? He made you. He gives you all that you enjoy. You are the sinning one. You are the one that is "afar off" from God.

He wants you brought near. He wants you brought into relationship to him. Will you? Will you take the steps that will make him your Father? that will make you his son?

Would you not like to feel that you were really a member of his great family, a brother of Jesus, and of all the good of earth?

These are great realities, my dear boy. God is. He means just what he says. You can become his child, and heir by the law of adoption, just as easily as you can become the child and heir of some great man of earth. You would have to go through a process of law to become a member of Queen Victoria's family. You would have to comply with all the conditions that she had laid down for your acceptance, take the name of her family for your name, and be good and obedient always. She might promise you something for all this, that you would like very much to have, on condition that you take her name and do as she commanded you to do—a crown and an heirship with her son, it might be.

But what if you should treat her as you treat God? What if you should say to her, "I don't think there is any necessity of my complying with your law of adoption. It costs too much, and is too much trouble. I am your child anyhow. I can call you mother, and ask for just what I want. That will make it all right. I do not believe there is any such country as that you have promised to give me, or that you will ever give me a crown and throne like that which Prince Albert will have."

If it were possible for her to make you an equal heir with her son, and she should promise to do it if you would take her name, would she if you would not take her name, and would doubt her every word, be held to the promise she had made you?

Can you hold God to his promises to you, so long as you doubt his word and refuse to comply with his law for adoption?

God had to make some law whereby we could come to him, or we never should have known how to come. It was very kind of him to make such a law, and to make every step just as plain as our law makers make their statutes.

But you say, "What can I do to make God my father? How can I become his son? a member of his house, or family, and an heir with Christ to the promised inheritance?"

It is all very easy. You want first to believe God when he tells you what he is going to give you if you become his child.

He says, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." There it is. He is going to give you the kingdom. If you baptized, because you begin minding believe it and are baptized, he has said he will save you, and save you in that kingdom.

Well, you want to know where that kingdom is, that you and all the good are going to have; and then you want to believe God in this, just as you would believe your mother if she were to tell you she was going to give you a farm in St. Joseph county, Michigan. You would not say to her, "I believe you are going to give me a farm, but it is not where you say it is; it is in China, and I am going there to get it."

God says, "The meek shall inherit the earth." Then if you become one of his meek ones, you will inherit the earth.

This is the kingdom that God means. This is the kingdom that was given to Adam in the beginning. He had "dominion over all the earth." Gen. i. 26. But Adam did not mind God. He did not keep the law of the garden, and lost his estate, or kingdom. He could not be the great ruler of all lands and all people. He, by his disobedience, lost the chance of living forever, as well as of reigning forever.

There must be another Adam (1 Cor. xv. 45), one who can quicken, or make alive forever, the heaven-like ones.

The sin of Adam brought them into death; through Christ they are all to be made alive.

Somewhere in the Bible you will find the dominion of earth promised to the second Adam. You may read the book of Genesis through carefully, and then Gal. iii. and Rom. iv., and I think you will begin to see how this is.

God called Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, to show him the land that was to be his forever. Gen. xv. 7; xvii. 8; xxii. 17. He deeded this land to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance. Paul says, in Rom. iv., that God gave Abraham "the world:" Abraham has never had that land, (Acts xii. 5), has never had the joint rulership of this earth. Then, how is he going to have it when he has been dead so many years? Ah! God means that he shall live again, because he promised that he would be his God, and that promise is a promise of a resurrection from the dead. Gen. xvii. 7; Luke xx. 37.

You may now read Gal. iii. again. There you will see that whatever was promised to Abraham was promised to Christ; that when God deeded the land to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance, he deeded it to Christ for an everlasting inheritance, because Christ is the seed to whom the promises were made. Gal. iii. 16. God gave the inheritance to Abraham, by promise—"the seed has come to whom the promise was made," Gal. iii. 18, 19. This Christ is the one who is to sometime "possess the gates of his enemies"—that is, he is to take their power away and rule where they now rule.

The gates of Christ's enemies are here. They rule here. The land of Canaan is here on earth, so Christ is to rule here. His inheritance is here, for his Father has covenanted to give him a kingdom—the kingdom and throne of his father David; Luke i. 32, 33; 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13, 16; Ps. lxxxix. 3, 4, 26, 27, 28, 29; and in Revelation, after the Lord comes, it is said that "the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord." David's throne was in Jerusalem, his kingdom was the kingdom of Judah, in Palestine, and we know that the kingdoms spoken of in Revelation are the kingdoms of which we read, and that we all talk about—Britain, France and Russia, etc. Well, believing this much, you have taken the first step toward becoming one of God's children. You believe God, because you believe what he says. You believe the Gospel, because you believe what is said about the kingdom, but God wants you to believe that he has sent you a Savior, Jesus, to take away your sins, and with your sins the condemnation to the second death that hangs over you if you refuse the great gift of eternal life that he offers to you.

He wants you to believe that this Savior died for you, that he arose from the dead, and that he is coming again, and that you, through faith in and obedience to him, may rise from the dead and live forever.

Then he wants you to repent, to be sorry for all the wrong things you have done, and to turn away from sin and begin doing right. When you are convinced that you are in the wrong, and that it is your duty to begin serving him, then he says, "Be baptized for the remission of your sins," "for as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise." That is, "If you have been baptized you have become one of the seed or children who are to have the land. You have Christ's name. You are adopted into the family."

You begin [illegible] God when you are him. You picture your faith. You confess Jesus. You say, when you go under the water, "I die to show that Jesus died;" when you rise, "I rise to show that Jesus rose, and that I shall live in the resurrection."

Having done this, you are to be faithful unto death, and a crown that fadeth not away will be yours.

Mr. Charles Gardner:

Dear Sir:—I have read in The Restitution with great interest, and, I hope, with profit, many of your expository articles. I am satisfied that you are a Greek scholar and will give only what you know to be the correct rendering original. I would be glad to know the true rendering of the word that is translated "come" in 2 John 7th verse. The same Greek word being used in Matt. xvi. 28; xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64; Mark xiii. 26; xiv. 62; Luke xxi. 27. Is there good reason for changing the tense? I will be glad to have you answer through The Restitution, if you are so minded; otherwise a simple line by mail will be thankfully received. Yours in the hope of eternal life in the kingdom, S. T. Blessing.

Dear Brother:

Yours of Dec. 26 came duly to hand and I take this early opportunity to reply to your quorry. The tense of the participle is present, and as rendered in King James version, has been changed for some purpose to past. The verse correctly translated reads, "Because many deceivers have come into the Cosmos who do not confess a Jesus Christ who cometh in flesh. This is the deceiver and the antichrist." Also the 9th verse, "Every one who erradeth and abideth not in the teaching of 'the Christ' hath not God. The one who abideth in the teaching of 'the Christ' this one hath both the Father and the Son." Yours in the faith,

Chas. Gardner.

Editor Restitution:

According to previous arrangements Bro. John Foore commenced a series of meetings here Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December, and continuing till the Wednesday following, preaching in all eight discourses, in which he ably and convincingly set forth the doctrine of the Bible. The faithful little band of brethren and sisters here was greatly encouraged and comforted. Ten years ago my husband and I were the only members of the Church of God here for many miles around but now, thanks be to God, we have an intelligent congregation of men and women principally heads of families, eighteen in number, who meet regularly twice a month in the capacity of a prayer and social meeting.

The earnest preaching and Christian deportment of our worthy old Brother Foore won for him many friends and made a good impression on many of our best citizens. On Wednesday before bidding us adieu he baptized six believers into Christ. One from the Lutherans, one from the United Brethren and four from the world, and we believe several more were nearly persuaded to become Christians. We would just say to the brethren who want an earnest and faithful laborer for the truth you would do well to give Bro. Foore a call to preach. His address is Galesburg, Kansas. He contemplates visiting Indiana again next spring or summer. From your sister in the One Faith,

Louisa Stewart.

OPPORTUNITY.

Boy, who art thou with more than mortal air,
Endowed by heaven with gifts and graces rare,
Whom restless winged feet forever onward bear?

I am Occasion! known to few, at best;
And since one foot upon a wheel I rest,
Constant my movements are; they cannot be arrested.

Not the swift eagle in his swiftest flight
Can equal me in speed; my wings are bright,
And man who sees them waved is dazzled by the sight.

My thick and flowing locks, before me thrown,
Conceal my form, nor face nor breast is shown,
That thou, as I approach, my coming be not known.

Behind my head no single lock of hair
Invites the hand that fain would grasp it there;
Lest he who lets me pass, to seize me may despair.

Whom, then, so close behind thee do I tread?
Her name is Penitence, and heaven's decree
Hath made all those her prey who profit not by me.

And thou, O mortal, who dost rashly fly
These curious questions, thou dost not descry
That now thy time is lost, for I am passing by!

DEITY—THE HUMAN SIDE.

God exists. Only "the fool hath said in his heart," He does not. Our physical senses satisfy us of the existence of material things. None the less convincingly do our mental faculties assure us of the existence of a supreme, intelligent First Cause. Universally, men believe in the existence of a God. "There is a highest," is the voice of both reason and philosophy; hence, there is no necessity for a demonstration of his existence. It is accepted as a fact by the masses of mankind.

But, as to the kind of Being he is, there is (of necessity must have been), and will continue to be, a great diversity of opinion. Men fashion their conceptions of God and the attributes they ascribe to him after their own ideas, sentiments and character. This must be so. The mind can attribute to God no quality of which it has no conception, and will attribute to him such qualities as predominate in itself. This accounts for the otherwise astounding fact that men have such conflicting ideas of God and his attributes. They build up their ideas of him out of ideas previously existing in their own minds. Hence the vast differences in the character of Deity as conceived by the lowest savage, by the civilized pagan, and by the cultured Christian philosopher. How contemptible and grovelling the gods of the African and Asiatic tribes! The sensual but more enlightened nations ascribe to their gods a controlling passion for sensuality, and look forward to a paradise of immortality beauty, where the passions are to be forever gratified. The Greeks, being admirers of beauty, ascribed to their gods a passion for mathetics. The Romans, being haughty and war-like, ascribed to their deities a passion for supremacy and conquest. How different must be the god of which selfish man conceives, from that which the benevolent man conceives. The man of forty years can never go back and take up with deity of which he conceived when a child. Just as his mind has expanded, so have his ideas of God been revolutionized. How different the God of which the intelligent astronomer conceives, from that of the Rev. John Jasper, with his celebrated declaration, "the Sun, he do move," conceives. How different is the geologist's idea of God, from the idea of him who believes that only six thousand years ago, this earth, with all its vast stores of mineral wealth, was created out of nothing by the Almighty fiat in six literal days.

Now out of this difference in the human opinions formed of the character and attributes of God, have sprung the many different religious beliefs—Pagan, Mohammedan, Brahmin, Jew, Christian and the different Christian sects into which the world is divided. Men tenaciously cling to the God of which they conceive, and from their conception of his character originates a new sect.

But of this one fact all may rest assured, viz., No man ever had, no man in this life ever can have, a completely correct idea of the one living and true God. It is impossible. As well might feeble man attempt to clasp his arms around immensity and look them on the farther side; as to attempt to condense within the nut-shell capacity of his finite intellect a correct and completely comprehensive idea of the Eternal, Omnipotent, Omniscient Being. Quite as possible would it be for feeble man to take up in his arms this mundane sphere on which we dwell, and walk off with, as to fully understand the Being and attributes of the All-holy, Everlasting Jehovah. Much as men may differ in their ideas respecting God's character, yet the very extremes of those opinions are not a thousandth part as far from each other as must the most perfect human conception ever formed of his character fall short of what that character really is. The finite mind cannot comprehend the infinite; and the part of him which we do comprehend is as nothing, compared to the almost infinite part of him we do not comprehend. No more can his infinite knowledge of himself be imparted to us than his infinite power can be incorporated in our feeble arms, or his omniscient wisdom be watched by our dim faculties. This thought should impress us with feelings of humility and reverence, as well as with due respect for the religious opinions of others. If some of the self sectarians of Christendom could for a moment see how almost infinitely slight is the difference between their idea of God's character and attributes and the idea of the same as entertained by the sects they oppose, when compared with the difference between what they all believe him to be and what he really is, would they not hide their faces for very shame? The distance between the creeds and sects is almost infinitely less than the distance of all of them from the real facts in the case. And suppose those who condemn and doom to everlasting woe those of their fellowmen who cannot believe exactly as they do respecting God's character and attributes, were to be dealt with in the same manner because the conceptions they have formed of his attributes are far from being correct? Would not the result be terribly crushing to all sectarian bigots? How would such be startled at their own errors, if they could get a glimpse of the true character of Deity.

But, says one, do not the Scriptures reveal to man a correct knowledge of the character of God? Yes, in all things essential to human salvation, they do; but on many minor matters their declarations are so indefinite that, in our present state of knowledge, the wisest and most pious of men are at variance as to what their literal meaning is. This should teach us to treat with deference the opinions of others, and to bid a hearty God-speed to all who practically fear God and work righteousness, even if they do not subscribe to our particular dogmas.

But, with all the great diversity of human conceptions respecting the Deity, there is one point—the essential point—of agreement among all true worshippers. Their ideas respecting his character and attributes may conflict, but in love they are the same. The love for God which treasures in the heart of the sincere but benighted, humble worshipper, and from that honest heart reaches out toward the infinite Savior in aspirations of affection, trust and adoration, are as pure and of the same heaven-begotten quality, as are those that ascend from the devout heart of the most gigantic intellect in Christendom. All the hearts of all those who truly love God, whether on earth or in heaven, are ever in sweet accord; and when one of them is touched with an aspiration of praise, it thrills through the whole train of worshipping intelligences in all the universe of God. Here, then, is the point of similarity between all true worshippers of Deity, despite their many differences of belief—they all love God, and love is the same in all hearts and throughout all worlds.

But if men personally construct their beliefs respecting God's character out of their own resources of knowledge out of the ideas they have acquired, what additional importance does this fact attach to the development and training of each moral and intellectual faculty? All true knowledge acquired, whether of physics or metaphysics, whether of a social or moral character, only provides the mind with additional materials out of which to construct a more beautiful and more perfect conception of the true character of Deity. The geologist, the botanist, the chemist, the mineralogist, the astronomer, the logician, the metaphysician, the moral scientist, the philosopher, how infinitely grand his conception of the character and the attributes of the living and true God—the Author of all things,—when compared with the idea of that Being entertained by the rude savage who "sees him in the stars and hears him in the wind!" And, then things being so, how amazingly does it magnify the importance of the work performed by every correct instructor and true disciplinator and stimulator of public and individual thought. The true teacher, the brave, able journalist, who exposes false theories and brings to light the moral and scientific truth of God, is really lifting humanity up to nobler conceptions of Deity and accomplishing a work that can only be matured by the length of eternity itself. Every lesson of sound science which the teacher imparts or the student acquires, and every intellectual energy which the student arouses or the teacher elicits, supplies material and means out of which to construct a nobler idea of the God of the universe. How essential, then, is knowledge to the true idea of a Christian; so essential that the highest type of a Christian cannot exist without it. Paul said: "The invisible things of him (Deity) are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head."—I. N. Kephart, A. M., in Wilford's Microcosm.

A Palace of the Popes.

The commencement of the residence of the popes at Avignon, in France, "frequently called by the Romans the seventy years' captivity in Babylon," was about the year 1305. Canon Trevor, M. A., says:

"The sojourn of the popes filled it with so many churches and religious houses, that it received the name of the 'tinkling town.' Petrarch, who often resided there, . . . speaks of the inhabitants as the most notorious sinners under the sun; but the outward symptoms were those of supereminent holiness. Seven patriarchs, seven colleges, seven monasteries, seven female convents, seven hospitals, seven palaces, and seven gates, gave the city a mystic sanctity in the eyes of the superstitious, and though the Romans thought the See in captivity, the popes were far from despising their exile."—Rome, p. 230.

One of our exchanges copies from the Evangelist Dr. Henry M. Fields' account of his recent visit there. It gives us a little idea of the deadly doings of the Papal Hierarchy when in its power and glory; whose coming was "after the working of Satan" as delineated on the pages of prophecy. He says:

"The popes are gone from Avignon, but their ancient palace remains, the monument at once of their glory and shame, their power and their cruelty. If one would learn the spirit of the Church of Rome in the Middle Ages, let him spend a day in the palace of the popes at Avignon. It is an enormous pile, not unworthily compared with the Vatican, extending, I should think, over several acres, and with its massive walls and lofty towers looks more like a fortress than the peaceful abode of the vicar of Christ. Indeed, it is not at all unlikely that it was built with the view that it might some day have to stand a siege. For the same purpose Avignon was surrounded with a wall, like the fortified cities of the Middle Ages. In the palace, the consistory—the place of meeting of the cardinals, or college of cardinals—is (or was) a magnificent hall, more than a hundred feet long, spanned by great arches supported by columns like those in a cathedral. The effect of this is lost since the palace was turned into barracks, and even this stately and sacred apartment has been cut into dormitories, and soldiers now sleep on their camp bedsteads or burnish their arms where once cardinals deliberated on the interests of the Catholic church. But the eye still traces the portions of the massive columns, and the exquisite finish of their capitals, and other signs of former magnificence and splendor.

"All this is very grand, but there are other parts of this ancient and sacred edifice in which the beauty of the architecture cannot hide the terrible purpose of their construction. The residence of the popes, like that of the doges in Venice, was both a palace and a prison. At one end of the great architectural pile stands a tower seven stories high, which was devoted to the Inquisition. Here sat that ghostly tribunal, in silence and secrecy, hearing before it those accused of heresy, extorting confessions by torture, and hurrying its victims to execution. There was the chamber of inquisition and the chamber of torture, which was so constructed that no sound could escape through its thick walls, and no one without could hear the shrieks of the wretched victims, or imagine the work of hell that was going on within. There one may still see the chamber of the holy office, in which the accused made their last confessions before going to punishment. This, strange to say, adjoins the banquet hall, for in those 'good old times' popes and cardinals feasted while the victims of their cruelty were dying so near them. There was a hall in which those condemned to suffer by fire were burned. The stone vault is still blackened with the flames. And there it is as significant as the lion's mouth in the doges' palace at Venice; for it opens into the Dubliette, and through this the condemned were pushed to fall to a tremendous depth, to be received on the points of spears and pikes turned upward from below."—Messiah's Herald.

James Turlyle.

But greatly his most important culture he had gathered—and this, too, by his own endeavors from the better part of the district, the religious men to whom, as the most excellent, his own native gradually attached and attracted him. He was religious with the consent of his whole faculties. Without religion he would have been nothing. Indeed, his habit of intellect was thoroughly free, and even incredulous. And strongly enough did the daily example of this afterward work on me. "Putting out the natural eye of his mind to see better with a telescope"—this was no scheme for him. But he was in Annandale, and it was above fifty years ago, and a Gospel was still preached there to the heart of a man in the tones of a man. Religion was the pole-star of my father. Rude and uncultivated as he otherwise was, it made him and kept him in all points a man."—Thomas Carlyle's Reminiscences.

THE LAW OF THE SABBATH.

Since this question has been sprung in your columns, I suppose it will not be improper for me to tell what I know about it.

I presume it will not be doubted that the Old Covenant was abolished when the New Covenant was instituted: 2 Cor. iii. 13, 14, that Christ was fully authorized to confirm the New Covenant: Matt. xxviii. 18, that he conferred full powers on his apostles to teach what he commanded: Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, that they declared that no addition is to be made to what they taught: Gal. iii. 15, and that they declare that the Mosaic law is no longer binding: Gal. v. 4.

I shall begin at the beginning: "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." Gen. ii. 1–3. The seventh day is not again mentioned until in Ex. xvi. 22–30, but periods of seven days are mentioned in Gen. iv. 3, viii. 4–10, viii. 10–12. And from this it is inferred that the Sabbath was kept from the creation. But I submit that there is no record of any command from the day of creation up to Ex. xvi. Without a commandment from God, its being kept would amount to nothing, for God declares "what thing soever I command you, observe and do it: Thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it. Deut. iv. 2, xii. 32.

I pass over the covenant made with Noah and with Abraham, and remark that there is no word here concerning a Sabbath. It is a well known rule of law that parol evidence shall not be admitted to alter or vary the terms of a written contract. If this maxim be founded in reason, it is naked reason for it be in accordance with sound reason to alter or vary a covenant between man and his God on mere supposition?

The next covenant we hear of is when God communed with Moses at the bush. Ex. viii. 18. No mention of a Sabbath here.

Read from Ex. viii. 18, until the Israelites leave Egypt. There is no evidence that they kept a Sabbath. It is even doubtful whether they knew that God was the maker of all things. Certainly, they had never asked leave to go and sacrifice to their God before Ex. v. 8–17, and they had offered no sacrifice while they staid in Egypt. Ex. viii. 26, 27. The nature of the Covenant God intends to make with Israel is foreshadowed in Ex. vi. 7, 8.

It is distinctly stated in Ex. xv. 25, that the Lord made at Marah a statute for them, and an ordinance, and there he proved them. In Ex. xvi. 4, 5, reference is evidently made to the statute given them at Marah, and the conclusion is irresistible that this statute was given in connection with the raining of the bread from heaven.

So far, then, as the Scriptures show, we have a most satisfactory proof that the Sabbath was instituted at Marah, and that it was kept between Elim and Sinai, in the wilderness of sin.

Having thus traced the historical record, we will now see what was required in order to keep the Sabbath day according to the law.

"In it, thou shalt not do any work: Thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gate. Ex. xx. 10. Ye shall kindle no fire in your habitation upon the Sabbath day, Ex. xxxv. 3.

The reason for requiring them to keep the Sabbath day is given in Deut. v. 15. Because the Lord brought them out from Egypt with a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commandeth thee to keep the Sabbath day.

But, if it is asked, why did God choose this day rather than some other, God himself gives the answer: "Because God himself rested on this day, and hallowed it." Ex. xx. 11.

If it is asked for what purpose it was given, the answer may be found in Holy Writ: It is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ex. xxxi. 13.

The penalty for defiling the Sabbath was death; and the criminal should also be cut off from his people. Ex. xxxi. 14, 15.

I ask attention to these points. 1. The Day (7th). 2. The Manner. 3. The Purpose. 4. The Promise. 5. The Penalty.

A few moments reflection will convince any one that the Sabbath has never been kept by Christians according to the terms of the Jewish Law. I again refer to Deut. iv. 2, xii. 32, and also repeat the words of Christ: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

There are three notable instances in the New Testament, where, if Christ or his apostles had intended to reenact the law of the Sabbath, they would scarcely have failed to make mention of it. 1. When the young man asked Christ: "What good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" Matt. xix. 16. Christ enumerates six of the commandments, but omits any mention of the Sabbath. 2. Paul takes occasion to repeat several of the commandments in Rom. xiii. 9, and then, in summing up says: "And if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Making no mention of the Sabbath. 3. There was a council held at Jerusalem, composed of apostles and elders, Acts xv. 6–29, for the express purpose of advising the Gentiles concerning their conduct. Strange to say, in the letters which they wrote, there is not one word about keeping the Sabbath.

Fourthly, there is no commandment in any part of the New Testament for keeping the Sabbath or any other day holy—no reward promised—no penalty threatened.

How can there be any obligation resting on Christians under this state of things?

I maintain that the silence of Christ and his apostles on this point are to be respected.

But the evidence is not altogether negative. Christ declares that he is Lord of the Sabbath-Day. Hence, he could abolish the day altogether, or he could appoint some other day. He did not appoint any other day. He did not reenact the old law. Therefore the day was abolished. In entire consonance with this deduction is the injunctions of Paul—"Let no man judge you concerning the Sabbath days." Col. ii. 18.

I freely admit, however, that it is our privilege to esteem one day above another, Rom. xiv. 5, and certainly no day has more claim to distinction than that in which Christ brought life and immortality to light. Ecclesiastical historians say that the early Christians spent the morning of the first day of the week in religious exercises and the afternoon as a festival.

T. B. Macaulay, in his History of England uses this language in regard to the Puritans: "In defiance of the express and reiterated declarations of Luther and Calvin, they turned the weekly festival by which the Church had, from the primitive times, commemorated the resurrection of her Lord, into a Jewish Sabbath." Vol. I. Index-Puritans. J. C. T.

A few Plain Declarations of Scripture Against Propositions and Conclusions.

Have ye not asked them that go by the way and do ye not know their tokens? that the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction. They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath. Come my people, enter into thy chambers, shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, the earth also shall disclose her blood and no more cover her slain. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Woe unto thee Chorazin, woe unto thee Bethsaida, for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for you. And thou Capernaum which are exalted into heaven shall be brought down to hell, for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom it would have remained unto this day. But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee. And whosoever shall not receive you nor hear your words when you depart out of that house or city shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation and condemn it because they repented at the preaching of Jonah and behold a greater than Jonah is here.

The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation and condemn it, for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and behold a greater than Solomon is here. If thine eye offend thee pluck it out; it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire. For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them even so the Son quickeneth whomsoever he will. Verily I say unto you the hour is coming when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and they that hear shall live, for as the Father hath life in himself so hath he given the Son to have life in himself. Marvel not at this for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice and come forth; they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation. But this I confess unto thee that after the way which they call heresy so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God which they themselves also allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust.

Women received their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured not accepting deliverance that they might attain a better resurrection. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment; and spared not the old world but saved Noah, the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly, and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example unto those that after should live ungodly, and delivered just Lot vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. And I saw thrones and they sat upon them and judgment was given unto them, and I saw the [illegible] them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands, and they lived and reign with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years are finished; this is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell gave up the dead which were in them and they were judged every man according to his works. And I saw the dead small and great stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works.

Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, but foolish and unlearned questions avoid knowing they do gender strifes. I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom preach the word. You let God be true, etc. T. FINN.

And the Works that are Therein shall be Burned Up.

The Apostle Peter refers us to the beloved brother Paul's writings on the same subject he is writing about, and says there are some things hard to be understood, and cautions his readers not to be ignorant about a thousand years, etc.

The beloved Paul writes: Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire. And the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall have a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire.

Will Brother Chaplin, or some other of our leading brethren, enlarge upon this thought, and show the relation of the writings of the beloved Paul to those of the beloved Peter. Generally, Peter is expounded independent of Paul's writings.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 15.

*Prelude—Two questions examined—*1. *What does the drying up of the Euphrates symbolize?—*2. Is it necessary that the Ottoman empire be totally annihilated before the coming of Christ for his people?—Egypt of 1889.—Her uprising—Its results and its bearings on the future.

Prelude.—1. What does the drying up of the Euphrates symbolize? This question, with the one following it, was recently sent me by our faithful and beloved brother, Newell Bond, of Washington City. These questions were suggested by the article, on that subject, by J. Cameron, in Rainbow, published in THE RESTITUTION.

We cannot, in these preludes, or introductions, give anything more than sketches, reserving their full investigation to their proper heads, when investigating the Turkish phase of the Eastern Question, should we be spared to reach that subject.

Euphrates of Rev. xvi. 12. What is it? This question must first be answered. Is the Euphrates, in the passage above quoted, a symbolic, or literal river? It is usually said to be symbolic. If symbolic, what does it symbolize? Two answers are given to this question: 1. That it symbolizes the Turkish empire. 2. That it represents those Latin nations of Europe that upheld the Papacy. 3. A third answer makes it a literal river.

The Euphrates is used in the Bible 21 times. In the Old Testament 19 times; viz: Gen. ii. 14, xv. 18; Deut. i. 7, xi. 24; Josh. i. 4; 2 Sam. viii. 3; 2 Kings xxiii. 29, xxiv. 7; 1 Chr. v. 9; xviii. 3, 8; Isa. xxvii. 12; Jer. ii. 18, xiii. 5, 7, xlvi. 2, 6, 10, li. 63. In the 19 passages, the literal river is always intended. In the New Testament, the Euphrates is twice named; both being found in the Apocalypse. In Rev. ix. 14, are these words, "Loose the four angels, (messengers or agents) which are bound in (at) the great river Euphrates." The distinguished Commentator, Woodhouse says, "The great river Euphrates, a famous river, which had its rise in Paradise, (Gen. ii. 14) and runs through the frontiers of Cappadocia, Syria, Arabia Deserta, Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, and falls into the Persian Gulf." — Calmet. All our learned expositors agree in calling the Euphrates, in this passage, the literal river of that name. The Ottoman empire is here a living acting agent, divided into four Sultanics, bound by some other agencies, at the Euphrates as an axis. The mystic (?) Euphrates bound at the literal Euphrates! With such an interpretation we do not agree. In 20 passages the term Euphrates is the name of the literal river. There remains but one other passage, Rev. xvi. 12. Is this the name of a symbolic river? From this we have dissented for many years. We have not been able to reconcile that interpretation with the laws of symbols. One principle is evidently violated: When a word or object departs from the literal meaning, that departure is somewhere explained, if not it would be no part of God's revealed system. If, then, the word Euphrates is here a symbol, where is that symbol interpreted?

If the term Euphrates be the name of the literal river, it requires no explanation since it is distinctly defined in 20 passages; but if, in this 21st passage it has a figurative (symbolic) meaning, where is that figure interpreted? For, to be a part of revelation, it must be explained somewhere. For an illustration of our meaning read Rev. i. 20. "The mystery (symbol) of the seven stars, which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks," explained,—"The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven candlesticks, which thou sawest, are the seven churches." Look at the visions of Daniel and their divine interpretations. These explanations are necessary to make them elements of God's revealed purposes. We have, then, this rule, "where a term is used out of its ordinary sense, it must be explained somewhere;" but Euphrates in Rev. xvi. 12, is used out of its ordinary sense; therefore it must be explained or defined somewhere. Where, then, is its interpretation? If that interpretation is found anywhere in the Bible, it must be in Rev. xvii. 15. "The waters which thou sawest, where the whore (mystic Babylon) sitteth, are people, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." But mystic Babylon was sustained by the Latin and German or Gothic kingdoms, and, therefore, those kingdoms (mystic waters) have the same relationship to mystic Babylon, that the literal Euphrates had to the literal Babylon. No one pretends that mystic Babylon is the Mohammedan hierarchy; and yet the usual interpretation of Euphrates (Rev. xvi. 12), forces upon us such an interpretation. Since the Euphrates is not named, as the meaning of the waters in Rev. xvii. 15, we are obliged to say, that Euphrates of Rev. xvi. 12, is the name of the literal river, which is spoken of in the 20 passages above quoted. What, then, is its drying up? And who are the kings of the east? These will be explained in future Nos.

Second question.—Is it necessary that the Ottoman empire should be totally annihilated before the coming of Christ for his people? The Ottoman, or Turkish empire is, simply, the present or reigning dynasty of the Mohammedan empire of the false prophet, Mohammed. That empire was equally powerful under its first or Arabian dynasty; so it might be again. The empire of the Koran is the empire of the false prophet. If Mohammed Ali, viceroy of Egypt, had been allowed to overthrow the Ottoman dynasty, would the dominion of the false prophet have then terminated, or would it only have added a third dynasty to that empire? Was not Mohammed Ali as sincere a Mohammedan as the Sultan? The idea as we see it, is this: "The empire of the false prophet is not dependent for its existence upon the Turk. He may be driven from Constantinople, out of Anatolia, and beyond there, and yet, the dominion of the false prophet by means of the Koran might number its 180,000,000, and, under another dynasty or some pretender, an ol Mohdi muster warriors by the millions. The future great conflict is not simply with the Turk, but with Mohammedanism—it will be a religious war: the cross against the crescent, the wild beast and the Pagan world, or the dragon—Christ is personally present in that conflict and his bride is with him. Read its history in Rev. xix.

Egypt in 1889.—Its present state—The inhabitants of any country stamp their peculiar characteristics upon its physical aspects. What a sad contrast between the land in its era of monuments, and Egypt of to-day! How fallen, since the time that Joseph sat on its throne next to Pharaoh. What shadows have cast their gloom on the land since that time! Perpetually under the domination of foreigners: the Assyrian, the Persian, the Macedonian, the Roman, the Arabian, the Georgian and Tartar Slaves, and the indolent Turk. What is its present condition?

Of the land itself we have but few notes to append. The hand of Jehovah is upon still, pouring its fertilizing waters into the many tributaries of the White and the Blue rivers to be wafted down and deposited by the Nile in Lower Egypt. The once fertile valley of the Pharaohs, with its 4,000 towns and cities, can yet produce as perfect a flora when properly irrigated. It is still the Eden of flowers. An author remarks, "As a commercial country, it possesses incalculable facilities. Rice are now carefully reared, honey forming an important article of trade. The verdure of Upper Egypt generally withers at the end of four or five months, and commences earlier than in Lower Egypt. In consequence of this, the Lower Egyptians collect the bees of several villages, in large boats; each hive having a mark by which the owner can recognize it. The men having charge of them, they commence the gradual ascent of the Nile, stopping whenever they come to a region of herbage and flowers.

At break of day the bees issue from their cells in thousands; and busily collect the sweets of the flowers, which are spread in luxuriant profusion around them, returning to their hives laden with honey, and issuing forth again in quest of more, several times during the course of a day. Thus for four or five months, they travel in a land of flowers, and are brought back to the place whence they started, with the delicious product of the sweet orange-flowers, which perfume the Said, the roses of Fajoum, and the jessamines of Arabia." Nature still has its charms in the valley of Egypt.

The defects are in her people; their habits, their religion, their government, and their rulers. The inhabitants are a mixture of the descendant of Ham, Shem, and Japheth. During her protracted history, the valley of the Nile has been the great magnet of the human race, as the land of natural resources. Such a mixture of races, religions and of laws, has been productive of endless discord. These strifes have produced constant wars, terminating in subjugations and changes of dynasties. These endless wars have exhausted the resources of the country, and debased the people. The inhabitants are under the bondage of rapacious rulers. The poor of Egypt are under a deplorable servitude. Their officers rob them of the fruits of their severe labor. Their food and clothing are reduced to a scanty pittance. They are not allowed to make use of corn and rice for food, since all that they can raise is demanded by their masters. Indian millet, forming a coarse bread, water, raw onions, sometimes a little honey, cheese, dates, and sour milk, form their constant, and only food.

Their clothing is still worse. "A shirt of coarse linen dyed blue, and a black cloak, a cloth bonnet, with a long red woollen handkerchief rolled around it, form their costume." Such a population, dwelling in miserable hovels, moving among the monuments of ancient grandeur, awakens in the mind of the stranger a painful interest. This is the land of the haughty Pharaohs. These are their proud structures erected to perpetuate their memory through all ages. This land is the Hebrew house of bondage; the valley claimed by Jehovah as his own, the land of the plagues, visited upon a wicked ruler, for the oppression of his own people. The land of foreign rulers, continued twenty-two centuries. The world's ancient seminary—the bridge of three continents.

The present of Egypt is known and read of all; but few remarks are, therefore, required of us to enable the reader to take in her present position. Let us make a brief summary preparatory to glancing at her future.

1. Egypt has a population composed of a heterogeneous mass, attracted to her soil from all nations. They form (to use a chemical term) a mechanical mixture. No durable union exists among its elements. Each race partial to the members of its own family, forms a community by itself. Their interests are selfish and exclusive. Their laws are neither understood nor respected by the people at large, and, consequently, not readily obeyed. Their officers are tyrannical and exacting. They associate as masters and slaves; no sympathy existing between them. Egypt is at this time, not wisely governed, for the reason that it is not suited to the national prejudices. A national parliament in Egypt is like parlor refinement among savages. It may suit the European population, but totally unsuited to the natives. Nations, like individuals, change their constitutions, only by the dissolution of the old organic bodies; such will be the fate of Egypt. Her foreign European population can never fuse into a nation with Oriental ideas.

The religious elements of modern Egypt are still more difficult to fuse into a homogeneous mass. By what power, human or divine, can there be a union between Mohammedanism and Christianity? The Christian system allows no compromise, neither does the religion of the Koran. The Koran and the Bible can have no fellowship.

European aggression caused the recent rebellion. That rebellion had a national and a religious phase. The British interests have now triumphed in Egypt. She is there to remain till the time of the future northern invasion.

VICTORIA, B. C., January 14.—The beautiful weather continues. The fields are green, the trees budding, and the flowers blooming. Five ships, with cargoes of British Columbia salmon, valued at $1,000,000, are on their way to England. The Baptists have withdrawn from the province, and have sold their church in the city.

TIME, NUMBER AND RHYTHM.

I purpose to further consider the typical relation of these three essential factors in God's cosmos according to Adam the first and according to Adam the last or the Christ, and see if we cannot determine in what sense the Scriptures of the Old and New Covenant teach that Christ is the creator of the, or a cosmos. In my last paper I showed the relation which time, number and rhythm sustained as essential factors of God's cosmos of the heavens and the earth; and also that these same essential factors enter into even the vaguest conception of much more, the creation of any cosmos. I also showed by the use of these factors that God's cosmos of the heavens and the earth was complete and perfect when he ceased from its creation. I also showed that because God did not take all time, which would be numerically represented by nine, to complete his own specific individual works of creation, that not therefore was he not busy nor employed, and quoted Christ's own words to prove that such a presumption would be untrue. The question naturally arises then, what has been the nature and character of God's employment since he ceased from his own specific works of creation, and what light does the numerical (typical) teaching of the Scriptures throw upon this subject?

Let us see. If the works of God's cosmos have been complete from the founding of it, there was nothing for man to add to it, and neither the race nor the Messianic man could add to it. Then what cosmos is God speaking of when he addresses the Messianic man in this language, "And thou, O Lord, hast founded the earth authority after authority; and the heavens are the works of thy hands. These shall perish, but thou remainest: and they all shall have waxed old as a garment and as it were an outer garment thou shalt change them and they will have been changed, but thou art the same and thy years will not fail." There seems to be here an antithesis distinctly drawn between "these" heavens and "this" earth and "the" heavens and "the" earth. There seems to be a reference to a cosmos within a cosmos, and there seems to be an assumption that the cosmos within is going to abide, while the cosmos without will not. Let us see if we find anything to support this assumption elsewhere.

In the 103d Psalm (Septua) from which another statement in this same chapter is quoted, namely, "He (Christ) is the one who maketh winds his messengers and a flame of fire his servants," we find this statement immediately following it, "the one who founded the earth upon its sure foundation. It will not have declined in the age of the age." Again in the 8th Psalm, David says, "Because I shall see the heavens the works of thy fingers, a moon and stars which thou hast founded." Surely David cannot be speaking of these heavens over our heads, and this moon and those stars we all see now, or he would not have used the future tense. The whole psalm is an ascription of praise addressed to the Messiah and is so applied by the author of Hebrews in the 2nd chapter by a quotation from it. Moreover Christ quotes from it in Matthew, where he says, "Have ye not read that out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast restored praise?" What then is this cosmos within a cosmos of which Christ is in some sense the founder and creator? And how does he create or found it? I understand it to be the cosmos of faith, and sustaining the same relation to the cosmos of works that faith does to works, and that he founds it "authority by authority," "overturning and overturning until he whose right it is to rule shall have come."

Now James points out the inseparable connection and nature existing between faith and works, and this is the way in which he puts it, "Likewise faith also if it have not works is dead by itself." And the author of Hebrews as we have already seen calls attention to the fact that "the works were complete from the founding of the (this) cosmos." In this inseparable and vital relation existing between faith and works, faith being man's distinctive province in a relation of time [illegible] typical (mystical) teaching as well as which G.d's distinctive province is works, do we not see the only way in which God and man, the Creator and the creature, can become partners and co-workers? Do we not see in this compact of the finite with the infinite will, according to the laws of harmony as above stated, the only possible way in which the finite can become infinite, the mortal put on immortality?

Now if this compact of God's will with man's will occurs according to the harmonic laws of time, number and rhythm in their relation to a cosmos to the extent of the finite being swallowed up in the infinite, there must necessarily be a coincidence of the cosmos of faith with the cosmos of works in all its parts, and number as an essential factor of both will determine this coincidence, and we should expect to find this somewhere indicated in the typical numerical teaching of the Scriptures. Let us examine and see. In the vision of trumpets in John's apocalypse we find after the sixth angel had sounded, another angel announcing that time will end with the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and that in the days of the sound of the seventh trumpet the mystery of God will also have been consummated even as he hath announced the good tidings unto his bondservants, the prophets."

And when the seventh angel had sounded we find this statement, "And there were great voices in the heavens saying, the kingdom of the cosmos of our Lord and his Christ hath come to pass, and he will reign as King for the ages of the ages." We find therefore that the coming to pass "of the kingdom of the cosmos of our Lord and his Christ," is coincident with the numerical six of the old creation. Has it been coming to pass from one to six numerically and in the relation also of time and rhythm? We have shown that time ends only with the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and if we can show that there is a coincidence of number, rhythm must follow in any harmony.

We see first that what occurs before the coming to pass of "the kingdom of this cosmos" occurs in time, not eternity, and that the future of the occurrence is six cumulative judgments in this old cosmos heralded by six angels with trumpets arranged in a series from one to six, the seventh heralding a cessation of time. Now let us go back to the Levitical type and see what we learn from that. In the 23d chap. of Leviticus 24th verse, we learn first that the feast "of a reminder of trumpets" is an memorial not a memorial thus teaching the idea of a regularly recurring rest in a series not a cessation. God that it was to be celebrated on the first of the seventh month, thus teaching that the trumpet series was to begin with a one, and we have already found in John that this series, beginning with one in its numerical relation to time ends with six.

Therefore we have found that the six typical periods of the new cosmos is their relation to the constituent symbolic factors of the old are coincident and if these factors are coincident then all the parts are coincident, and we have as we have asserted a cosmos of faith within a cosmos of works, both belonging in time so far as their creation is concerned, and the one vitalized by its inseparable connection with the other, to the glory of the infinite and the blessed perpetuity of the finite. That some one may say naturally what about the balance of the whole integral time, as denoted and expressed by its essential co-ordinate factor number? Only that part of the whole integer time in its relation to number has been accounted for, which is expressed by one to six, so far as the creation of these two cosmoi is concerned. In other words what relation existing between God and man and these two cosmoi is denoted by the seven, eight and nine. This I will endeavor to show and this query I will endeavor to answer.

The seventh in its relation to the first cosmos we have already shown so far as the creative relation is concerned is a memorial or a cessation from a work that is completed, and we have also shown that the Messianic man Christ Jesus ceased from life on this day as well as from his works, the historical fact being coincident with the typical Levitical teaching as well as that of Genesis. Then I quoted Christ's own words on this point, or in answer to the query what has God been doing since he completed his six day's work of creation, and we will now add the rest of the query, and what will he do for the rest of time, so covering the whole of the seven, eight and nine portions of integral time.

Christ's statement covers that portion of the whole period ending with the moment when he made the statement, and is as follows, "My Father worketh (operates) hitherto, and I am working (operating)." Does this kind of work mean creative work? No. It means employment. Now the general as well as specific teaching of the Scriptures makes it clear what God's employment is and has been ever since his distinctive work of creation, and it is that he as an almighty, despotic, but in the highest sense beneficent ruler, has been presiding over and directing the affairs of his cosmos even to the remotest and most infinitesimal detail. "Not a sparrow falleth to the ground without him." "Are not five sparrows sold for two assarii, and not one of them is disregarded in the sight of God." His work of providence care and rulership past, present and future in the light of the Scriptures I will therefore assume to be indisputable, and this is my answer to the query so far as God is concerned. Now as to the Messianic man Christ Jesus the record is just as specific, first up to the point of his ascension. By self abnegation and a subordination of his human will absolutely and without reserve to God's will in a life of obedient faith, which finds its expression in perfect works of beneficence, as well as sacrifice, he becomes in his mutual relation to God and his works as well as to man and his works, the author of a cosmos of life or living works in which the divine and human will are co-incident and the result therefore a co-ordinant, result, such a result as is well illustrated in the octave chord in music. And the first octave of this new harmonic cosmogony is struck by the Master hand when this Messianic man rises from the entrance rest of death and this mortal puts on immortality on an actual eighth day of his employment as a ruler of all that belongs to his distinctive cosmos of faith: while time shall last and until he shall have surrendered "the kingdom of his cosmos" to God the Father, that he may be all and in all. But this he will not do until every enemy has been put under his feet, and the last enemy thus made subject is death, and the reign of death seems to be coincident with time, and since we have learned is coincident with the empire. Most of American fruits and vegetables grow in Japan. They have small but delicious oranges, great rich red and yellow persimmons, thousands of acres of tea, and millions on millions of acres of rice.

Prof Francis Bowen of Harvard brings to notice an almost forgotten translation of the Bible by Charles Thomson, who was secretary of the Continental Congress, and published his work in 1808. Thomson was a distinguished teacher of Latin and Greek in Philadelphia, and he spent the better part of twenty-eight years on his version of the Scriptures. Prof. Bowen has been examining the book, and it is his deliberate judgment that, in many respects, it is better than the revision of 1881. Thomson anticipated some of the changes recently made. He printed the texts in paragraphs, and the songs and poetical citations as poetry in lines of unequal length. He also omits the passage in the first epistle of John, concerning the "three that bear record in heaven," and he prints in brackets the doxology at the close of the Lord's Prayer, mentioning in a foot note that in "many ancient manuscripts" it is not found.

THE DOORSTEP OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR. The London Daily News says: "In the Egyptian and Assyrian gallery at the British Museum, and in close contiguity to the Hittite monuments and the bronze gates of Shalmaneser, there has just been placed an object of considerable interest—a bronze doorstep from the great temple of E-Saggil at Borsippi, a suburb or division of Babylon. The doorstep not only has inscribed on it the name of Nebuchadnezzar, but also mentions his health or restoration to health. The doorstep may thus have been a votive offering. The thought may present itself whether the inscription on the doorstep has any relation to the madness of Nebuchadnezzar spoken of in the well-known words of the fourth chapter of Daniel which record how the renowned monarch, after looking with pride on the great Babylon which he had built, was in the "same hour driven from among men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws." It would not, however, be easy to make such an identification. The temple of E-Saggil, to which the doorstep pertained, was a famous seat of Babylonian idolatry, and remain such till the time of Nabonidus, the last Babylonian king."

Sir Henry Rawlinson is now a very old man, and he seldom addresses a word to the public, especially in the line of his Oriental studies, where he is such a master, except in connection with some discovery which has special importance. We, therefore, read with interest his letter in the last Athenæum, received on an important and new inscription found on a cylinder of Nabonidus, the last native King of Babylon. Nabonidus was very much of an antiquary, and, when repairing the temples of the gods, he never failed to search for the old foundation-stone, that he might find with it the inscribed name and date of the original builder. In his work at the temple of Sippara, well known to be one of the oldest in Babylonia, he excavated, he says, to a depth of 32 feet below the surface, and there he found the memorial tablet of Naram-sin, son of Sargina, which had not, he says, been read by mortal eye for 3,200 years. That is a long step backward, but Sir Henry Rawlinson is inclined to accept the figures as correct. There were at Babylon the means of computing to a very high antiquity, and similar references to royal predecessors, with the interval since their reign (in one case as many as 1600 years) occur on the monuments and have received full credit. Sargina, the first of the name of Sargon, though afterward deified and connected with the story of the Flood, was a real historic king and an inscription by his son known. The Babylonians certainly made use of the Flood as an accepted historic epoch, and made Sargina, whose birth had strange circumstance of exposure, like that of Moses, one of the first kings after it. But scholars will hesitate to put full faith in the extreme chronology of Nabonidus, though it agrees as well with that of Egypt. Which of the two countries had the older civilization we do not yet know.

Festivities.

The climate of Japan is mild and pleasant, resembling that of the Atlantic States of America from New Jersey to Florida. It is a land of fruit and flowers. Among the latter is the chrysanthemum, with its scarlet and pink blossoms, and the lotus, with its crown-like head; the first the national and the second the sacred flower of the empire. Most of American fruits and vegetables grow in Japan. They have small but delicious oranges, great rich

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 24, 1883.

As TERMS are five Wednesdays in the present month, and as our finances will not admit of more than four issues a month, our next paper will bear date of February 7.

OWING to exceedingly cold weather and to snow obstructing railroads, there is a very noticeable falling off in our receipts of letters for some days past. We hope this will only be of temporary duration.

"OUR REST" for Jan., comes in an enlarged form and in an entirely new dress with several illustrations. Wilford's Microcosm, for January, and the Phrenological Journal, have also duly come to hand—both popular and ably managed periodicals.

SOME little time ago we received a bound volume of the Youth's Examiner from its Editor and Publisher C. H. Jones. We placed it in the hands of a true friend of the periodical, and an active canvasser, to aid in soliciting subscriptions.

THUS far the year has been remarkable for shipwrecks, destructive fires, explosions, storms, railroad disasters, land slides, and earthquakes. The burning of the Newhall House, with a holocaust of nearly a hundred victims, is scarcely narrated, till news comes that an Ocean Steamer, the Cimbria, is sunk by a collision, and over 300 lives lost. Then comes news that in a Railroad wreck a dozen or more persons are roasted to death, in addition to those who are horribly mangled, or killed outright. Magazines blow up and scatter death and ruin in all directions. The news of a political character from Soudan, Egypt, and France, is ominous. To write out all the news of disaster for January would be to fill a scroll like Ezekiel's—a scroll of "lamentation and mourning and wo."

DEATH AT THE CAPITOL.

"For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces. Jer. ix. 21.

"Pale death with equal foot strikes wide the door,
Of royal halls and hovels of the poor."

Death is no respecter of persons. He stalks into the magnificence of the palace, and the splendor of the princely parlor or drawing-room, with the same grim relentless air, as when he invades the humble cottage of the poor, or the wretched hovel of the menial slave. The cradle that rocks infancy today, may oscillate fearfully near the margin of a tiny grave. The youth, exulting in all the robust activities of incipient manhood, may carelessly scan the dark-plumed hearse bearing its pale cold freight to the house prepared for all living, without foreboding that he is the next passenger to be borne to the same long home by the same mournful conveyance. Blushing beauty may look down upon a pallid countenance from which peerless loveliness has faded out, reckless that in the next casket per own death-blossomed shrouds may warn survivors that youth and beauty may be laid in dust. We append a part of a letter written for the New York Independent, by its talented correspondent, Mary Clemmer, detailing the death of the Hon. Elisha H. Allen at the President's reception on New Year's day at the White House in Washington City, and the circumstances connected with the gloomy event. She writes under the heading:

NEW YEARS AT THE CAPITOL.

Dark across the pitiless space, across the near waiting stars listen to chimes. It is midnight, and the chimes of the Metropolitan Church in a joyful anthem are ringing in the New Year, answered back from the Navy Yard by the deep bass of wide-throated guns. Lights flicker in many windows. Many passing yet solitary feet strike the uncovered street. No human voice penetrates the silence of the midnight air, yet all the hushed spaces thrill with the magnetism of mortal life, with the fullness of the presence of human consciousness. How many tonight pray and "watch" the old year out, the new year in who are not counted in Christian sanctuaries?

New Year's morning. A perfect morning. It is not often, even in this latitude, that such dry, clean streets, such floods of caressing sunshine inspires the masculine being on his round of yearly visits. It is as if the kindly elements had all combined to make his path pleasant and his greetings warm with the reflected glow of the day. The regularised White House is, as it is not always up, in any weather, the centre of New Year's attraction. The twilight dies in the splendor of the sunshine that streams through the windows of rainbow-tinted glass. The glass partition of the corridor glows with all gorgeous hues, softened and harmonized by the towering plants that bloom beside it. In the Red Room, on a small table, before a full-length portrait of President Arthur, stands a vase of milk-white lilies. The corners of the Green Room are filled with lofty palms and plume-like ferns, in vivid contrast with the soft-toned greens which line the ceiling and walls while in the great East Room, on the mantels, stand masses of ferns in jars of silver wicker work.

At 11 o'clock the Marine band struck up its old-time paean of "Hail to the Chief," and the President, in black morning suit, with a single carnation on his lappel and gray gloves on his hands, descended the private stairway and entered the Blue Parlor; while Marshal McMichael stationed himself at the President's left, near the door of the Red Room. In a moment he was surrounded by his Cabinet officers and their wives, the ladies who were to assist the President in the reception of guests. These ladies were, first, the wife of the Secretary of State, Mrs. Frelinghuysen; the wife of the Secretary of the Navy, Mrs. Chandler; the wife of the Attorney-General, Mrs. Brewster; the wife of the Secretary of the Interior, Mrs. Teller; with the wives of several senators.

The most scenic sight of New Year's morning at the White House is always the presentation of the Diplomatic Corps. In their varied and multiform decorations the ends of the earth and the conflict of all races seem to meet, if they do not mingle. With the departure of Sir Edward Thornton, of the British legation, the deanship of the Corps fell to the minister from the Sandwich Islands. He entered this morning at the head of the gorgeous cavalcade, the Hon. Elisha H. Allen, wearing the broad crimson badge of King Kamehameha III; a tall, slight, white-haired man, apparently a little past sixty years of age, accompanied by his son, who is his secretary of legation. He was followed by Minister Aristarchi Bey, of Turkey, and his secretary, Rustem Effendi, each dressed in European costume, barring his scarlet fez. Spain presented the largest embassy and the most gorgeous display of blue and gold and jewelled decorations, in splendor it vied with China, that was brave in mandarin costume of pale blue and yellow silk, red buttons, and peacock feathers. This legation, with its smiling minister, many secretaries, and resplendent costume, led by its Asiatic secretary, Mr. Bartlett, is a very picturesque sight indeed. The English minister, Hon. Sackville West, had on his arm his lovely young daughter, dressed in deep blue velvet, embroidered in gold.

Altogether it was a picture full of the pomp and glory of the world; full, also, of simple beauty and good-will, full of youth and happiness—far fuller of these, any one would say, than of heartaches or of heart-burnings, of heartlessness or ill-will, or of impending ill. All the Furies seemed laid. All the graces of Life were ascendant, as they should have been, facing as they did, the splendor of that matchless morning. Who could have believed that, with that gay cavalcade, came Death? That just before that fair young English girl, though all unseen, stalked the King of Terrors? To be sure, he struck one who had lived past the number of man's allotted days; but the significant fact is that Death was there at all.

As the dean of the Corps, it was the duty of Mr. Allen to present every member of it to the President. This he did, apparently with perfect ease, and he was noted by some of his friends as looking remarkably well. The diplomatic reception by the President was over, and its various members scattered about the drawing-rooms, in animated conversation, when Mr. Allen, complaining of being somewhat tired, proceeded with his son to the cloak-room. As he stooped to take up his coat, to fall suddenly forward, with a low cry of pain, became instantly unconscious, and within ten minutes was dead. Dr. Morris, who had been called, after unavailing efforts to restore life, folded the pulseless hands across the red ribbon and jeweled star he wore upon his breast, and whispered to the weeping youth, kneeling at his side, "It is all over with your father, my lad."

The boy, who was holding a glass of brandy for his father to drink, could not believe it, and when, at last, he realized it he had himself to be supported.

Meanwhile, in the drawing-room, the President had just began to receive the delegation of the "oldest inhabitants" of the District, when Secretary Frelinghuysen whispered in his ear of the event in the cloak-room. The oldest inhabitants were still filing in, when the doors closed. The President turned to the cloak-room, where, finding it all over, he hurried along up the stairs to his private apartments. The gay tumult of conversation ceased, the gorgeous throng hastened away; the doors were shut on the splendor, on the flowers, on the silence, and a little past noonday the glad reception of the White House had been stopped by death.

Even the splendor went out of the sky. The tides of sunshine rolled back. The day, that began a paean of balm and of brightness, grew heavy with snow and faded, at last, away under a film of gray and creeping mist.

Do you say my letter is too sad? Then you must blame life, not cheer, not your friend. It all came to pass within the twenty-four hours of New Year's night and day in Washington.

An Error Corrected.

We have just received a letter from Geneva, Switzerland, of date Jan. 6, 1883, from E. Petavel D. D., in which he thus alludes to a statement copied into THE RESTITUTION from the New York Independent. It is in relation to the case of Rev. Charles Byse of Brussells, whose course in regard to conditional Immortality is exciting so much interest in Europe. Mr. Petavel says:—"While grateful for your fraternal upholding of his cause, my friend, in a note received this day, wishes me to call your attention to a misstatement which originated with M. de Pressensé, as reported by the New York Independent, and ultimately by THE RESTITUTION. M. de Pressensé warmly took the defense of Mr. Byse in the Belgian Synod, but he was mistaken when he wrote that Mr. Byse had promised to be prudent in expressing himself on conditional Immortality. I beg to send you with these lines a copy of Mr. Byse's Memoir just published. You will find—page 35—Mr. Byse's rejoinder, that he had made no promise of the kind, neither by writing nor by word of mouth."

The book has not yet come to hand. When received we hope to present our readers with something from its pages illustrating the progress truth is making in Europe, as well as making us better acquainted with its devoted advocates.

Letter from Jerusalem.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 20, 1882.

Dear Brother:

I want to tell you something of our brethren from Illinois, whom God sent so providentially to this city. It is evident that they are overturning Orthodoxy here. They work very quietly, are doing good to some one continually, in fact people see that they practice what others preach. They are kind, patient and cheerful, the young people are leaving the churches and go there, they however do not make any effort to bring them. Of course the churches are alarmed and are beginning to cry out against them, but they seem not to be disturbed in the least. What the result will be no one can now see.

Judgement has commenced at the house of God. The Jews are all split up into sects and bitterly opposed to each other. They have taken their children from the schools, and the missions find their occupation nearly gone. We see changes everywhere.

There is a decided change in the climate. We have frequent showers and the atmosphere is more humid. All the money sent to my agent has been received and appropriated. It has done much good.

I mailed you a letter some seven weeks ago, headed "The Jews waiting place" which I hope has reached you, also several since. Did you receive the embroidery sent by the Jowers?

I am very busy and just now cannot stop to read what I have written, after Christmas I shall try by the help of God, to do better.

My correspondence is increasing, also my work at dressmaking.

Come to Jerusalem. I sent package of bouquets also two large cards to your care, one for you, another for your printer.

The interest is increasing also light.

Yours in hope,

A. P. DAVIS.

[Embroidery, bouquets, and letters received. Two or more papers will be sent to your address. One is sent by my daughter, Mrs. S. B. Wines for the Jowers who sent the embroidery if she reads English, and chooses to receive it.—ED. RESTITUTION.]

Whatever may be the opinions of men regarding the final destiny of the race of mankind, there can be no question of doubt according to the Scriptures but that death is the penalty left to the race by father Adam. That the race of mankind was on trial by representation, that Adam stood for, or represented the race and through his disobedience all were brought under the same condemnation — death — or same sentence[illegible] were it not in God's purpose [illegible] to redeem from under that sentence—after the sentence of the law is carried out—all would have remained in death or under the law. Hence under the Mosaic law a near relative had the right of redemption. Jesus came to redeem from under the law, and he being our elder brother, has the right to redeem, and his Father has given all power to redeem into his hands. He has paid the price of redemption and the race stands in the position as being bought; hence we are not our own. We are bought with a price. The blood of Jesus was paid as a ransom and he tasted death for every man, although the race of Adam must satisfy the law, for Jesus came not to destroy the law but to fulfil, to let the law take its course; and after the law has been satisfied—the sinner paid the penalty for sin, death—then Jesus destroys death and him that had the power of death. For sin shall not rise up the second time, for Jesus is to make an end of sin. He is to reign until he shall have put all his enemies under his feet; and the last enemy which is death, is to be destroyed. Then if Jesus destroys death, life will reign instead of death. Now death reigns, and we are in the land of the dying; but when Jesus reigns and death is destroyed, we will be in the land of the living; for there will be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain; for the former things are passed away. Let us pray thy kingdom come, thy will be done in the earth as it is done in heaven. No pain there, no sin there; for Jesus the lamb of God, will take away the sin of the world. JASPER A. CADDUS.

WATCHMAN'S WARNING.

"Watchman, ower is your sentinel, Blow the trumpet long and loud?"

Warn the people of the world's approaching doom. Show them that the day of God's wrath, day of awful retribution, to those who are alive, is found turning their backs upon the cross of heaven's spotless victim, is rolling on with lightning speed; and that very soon, according to God's immutable decree, they will be compelled to wail because of the coming of him, who once in Gethsemane, sweat blood from every pore, was arraigned before Pilate, and crowned with thorns, nailed to the rugged cross, where he hung for three long hours, whilst all nature around that hallowed spot was [illegible] clad. And to make his sufferings more complete, Deity stepped aside. The disciples forsook him. The world was arrayed against him. Nothing to sustain him, save the joy which God had set before him, "The restitution of all things which he hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began." And when the last item of prophecy, relative to his sufferings, was fulfilled, he died. Yes the friend of sinners died. But now he comes in the glory of his Father, surrounded by legions of angels!

"Prayer and its Answer" is the title of a neat volume. This is thus addressed to its recipients:—"To the Subscribers of—The New York Observer—with the compliments of the Publisher and Senior Editor S. Irenæus Prime." As we have always, in our religious experience, loved to regard our Heavenly Father as a prayer hearing and a prayer answering God, we can ex animo return our sincere thanks to the kind senders for this little book.

"BOOK CLOSED."

Editor Intelligencer:

SIR,—Having heard Mr. Rolph's lecture on "Books Closed," last Sunday evening, I hope you will allow me space to address a few lines to your readers in relation to his discourse. Mr. R. stated (and illustrated by chart) that there is to be a space of time called "the day of vengeance" between the "dispensation of grace" and what he calls the millenium. I believe in a day of vengeance but am not aware that it represents a "dispensation" covering a period of time immediately after the dispensation of grace and before the commencement of the "millennium," as the lecturer stated. Mr. R. gave us no proof of these statements, consequently I, for one, decline to receive that theory. "Millennium" not being a Scripture phrase, would it not be better to say instead, the "Kingdom of God" or "Kingdom of Heaven," as the Bible puts it? The Kingdom of God is to be on earth in place of Mr. Rolph's millennium, and instead of its lasting only a thousand years, it is to stand for ever and have no end. In proof of this I refer to the Bible as follows:—Dan. ii. 44; vii. 13, 14, 18–27. Zech. xiv. 9. Rev. xi. 15; xx. 9; v. 9, 10. Isa xxiv, 23. Acts xv. 16, 17. It will also be seen from these portions of Scripture that the Kingdom of God is to be a subjugating Kingdom, and it will finally have dominion over all the earth—"under the whole Heaven."

The gospel preached by Jesus and his apostles was the "good news" of this "kingdom of God." Proof, Mark i. 14; Matt. iv. 17–23; Luke iv. 43; Acts viii. 12–25; and xix. 8–10. Mr. Rolph asserted that the saints would be taken from this earth to heaven, but he gave no satisfactory proof to that effect. The Bible plainly teaches that they shall inherit and dwell on the earth for ever. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," Matt. v. 5; see also Prov. xi. 31; Psa. xxxvii. 11, 22, 29, 34; Rom. iv. 13; Heb. xi. 8; Luke xiii. 29; Isaiah lx. 21; Psalm cxv. 16. This also agrees with my first references as to the kingdom of God being on the earth forever. We pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Paul says, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" 2 Tim. iv. 8. It will be seen, then, that in order to receive the "crown," we must love the appearing of Jesus. "I charge thee therefore" (says Paul) "before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead [who?] at his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word." 2 Tim. iv. 1. We do not then go to heaven to be judged and rewarded, as is popularly taught. "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth (not in heaven) much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. ii. 31. If I understood Mr. R. correctly, he intimated that the Jews only would be on the earth during what he calls the millennium, and that may account for his saying that the devil would be "loosed" instead of which the Bible says that "satan shall go out of his prison to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, and they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about." Rev. xx. 8, 9. This passage plainly shows that there will be nations as well as the saints on the earth at the time satan goes out to deceive. The Jews, then, will not monopolize the blessings of God's kingdom on earth—there will also be Gentile nations as well as the saints. I hope Mr. R. will find a place in that kingdom and that he may dwell there forever and be a co-ruler of the nations for at least a thousand years. Rev. xx. 7, 10; Dan. vii. 14; Rev. ii. 26. The saints shall be "kings and priests" and shall "reign on the earth," Rev. v. 10. We had better teach the Bible or else leave the "book closed." For the sake of truth.—J. Robinson, in Dolly Intelligencer.

Arabi in Exile Where Spice Breezes Blow Soft O'er Ceylon's Isle.

CEYLON, Jan. 10.—Arabi Pasha and his fellow exiles here arrived here. As Arabi Pasha has been credited with an overpowering love of the land where in he was born among the fellaheen, it is tolerable easy to imagine the kind of feelings which would surge in his breast when the steamer dropped anchor yesterday in the roadstead of Colombo, and within the gigantic breakwater which British enterprise has, within the last few years, constructed to keep back the ponderous surf which beats against the shores of Ceylon. The dense groves of palm trees running down to the water's edge, partially hiding the rain battered old square-roofed Dutch houses that form the fort and business quarter of Colombo; the crowds of persistent Cingulese and Moormen, hawkers of precious stones, rubies, sapphires, pearls—some of them genuine productions of the island, but the majority skillful Birmingham imitations; the elephants pulling at the logs on the wharves and setting them in order with a care and intelligence almost human—all these strange scenes and customs would tend to force upon the mind of the poor exile from Egypt the fact that he was indeed the tool of a whimsical fortune, a stranger in a strange land, and no longer the presumptuous arbiter of the affairs of the country of the Nile. Outside of the old-fashioned quarter of Ceylon there is a very charming suburb called the Colpetty, which lies in the vicinity of the famous cinnamon gardens that at times send over Colombo the richest spicy breezes.

In the Colpetty the officials and well-to-do merchants of Colombo reside during the cold season or during the rainy five months of the southwest monsoon, where the air is often deliciously fresh and cool. The bungalows are large, surrounded by deep verandahs, and are generally shaded from the fierce glare of the sun by thickly planted cocoanut trees. The Government generally has several of these bungalows at its disposal, and Arabi will doubtless be installed temporarily in one of these, either near the cinnamon gardens or within earshot of the surf of the Indian Ocean. A short distance from Colombo there is a promontory jutting into the sea called Mount Lavinia. On this there stands a handsome building which was at one time a Gubernatorial residence, but has latterly been rented as a hotel. The vast, lofty halls in this luxurious abode are filled with marble pillars, the floors are paved with marble, and altogether it is a palace worthy of an Oriental Prince. In certain seasons of the year the Government officials proceed either to Kandey or Nouer Ellyes plains, which are 6,200 feet above the sea level, and Arabi will certainly be invited to those places along with the "swells" of the island. But both Colombo and Galle are charming spots in their way. Throughout Ceylon there is plenty of good shooting and a not uninteresting colonial society. On the whole, therefore, if Arabi and his brethren in exile are as sensible and philosophical as Mohammedans usually are they will find Ceylon not such a bad place to stay in after all.—*N. Y. ### THREATENED RISING OF MUSSULMANS.

SOFIA, Jan. 14.—The reports that preparations are making for an early rising of the Mussulmans in the mountain districts of eastern Roumelia have been confirmed. The authorities have seized several cases of Martini rifles, sent by the "Young Turkey Committee" at Constantinople to a committee in Philippopolis. Turkish troops have been clandestinely massed on the eastern Roumelian frontier.

A SPANISH TOWN SHAKEN BY EARTHQUAKES.

MADRID, Jan. 16.—Eleven shocks of earthquake were felt to-day in the town of Archena, causing the greatest consternation among the inhabitants. Mass was said in the open fields, as it was considered dangerous to occupy the church.

MADRID, Jan. 17.—There were 22 shocks of earthquake in Murcia yesterday, and several houses were destroyed.

CAIRO, Jan. 17.—A fight occurred between a body of 500 Egyptian troops and the forces of the False Prophet. Two hundred and forty of the former were killed. The remainder were taken prisoners.

GENEVA, Jan. 18.—A great landslip has occurred in the valley of the Fouery. The village of the Mara is completely destroyed by an enormous mass of earth. Many rocks and trees were dislodged by the recent snowstorm. The movement upon Mark was gradual, and the inhabitants were able to effect a hasty escape. The movement of the mountain still continues.

THE SOUDAN IMBROGLIO.

ALEXANDRIA, Jan. 23.—Great apathy is felt at Suakim respecting the position of affairs in Soudan. The insurgents have formed a depot at Kartoum. They cross the White Nile daily opposite Cama.

January 20. — Following the great floods in Europe has come a series of earthquakes, and now we hear of the complete destruction of a village in the valley of Faroges by an Alpine land slide. The earthquake shocks in Spain were renewed yesterday, and as shocks have also been felt within a few days in central Europe it is possible that there may be some connection between these seismic disturbances and the land slide. It is known that avalanches are sometimes started by a very slight jar.

What a surprising list could be made of villages, cities, and lands that have been overwhelmed by avalanches, land slides, and lava, inundated by tidal waves and torrents, and overthrown by earthquakes and tornadoes! This sort of destruction of human life and property has been going on for centuries, and yet it is as common now as it ever was.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

THE HOPE.

W. J. CHOCKLEY.

"For we are saved by the hope."

O Beacon shining forth afar,
O light serene, O guiding star,
To that eternal harbor where
Is rest unchangeable and fair,
We hail thee, bless the, steer by thee,
Unmindful of the stormy sea.

By no dark passing cloud obscured
Ne'er by the sinful winds allured,
Unshaken by the shocks of time,
Steadfast, immovable, sublime—
Thy glory floods the Port of Life
And lifts us from the billow's strife.

For us, for those in ages gone,
Thy radiant beams have ever shone:
In the Almighty's gorgeous blest,
Illumining the promised rest,
Until the tempests are no more
And we have greeted the wondrous shore.

SPEAKING AND HEARING.

"Go thou and preach the Kingdom of God." Luke ix. 60. "Take heed then how ye hear." Luke viii. 18.

These words from the lips of the Master himself, are the germs of much profitable reflection. Let us therefore, guided by the light of Scripture, dwell somewhat upon the duties of speaking and hearing.

1. We should speak with a view to please God and promote his glory "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. x. 31. "As we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts." 1 Thess. ii. 14.

2. We should speak with a view also to the saving of ourselves and of our hearers. "Take heed to thyself and to thy teaching. Continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee." 1 Tim. iv. 16, R. V. "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. v. 20. "He that winneth souls is wise. . . . And they that be wise shall shine as the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Prov. xi. 30; Dan. xii. 3.

3. We should speak faithfully, keeping back nothing that is profitable. "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." Jer. xxiii. 28. "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. iv. 2. "I have kept back nothing that was profitable unto you. . . . I have not shunned to declare unto you all the whole, R. V.) counsel of God." Acts xx. 20, 27.

4. We are to preach the SAME doctrine which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached eighteen centuries ago. What he preached in Palestine was "The gospel of the kingdom." Matt. ix. 35; iv. 23; Luke viii. 1. What they afterwards preached in the world at large was "This gospel of the kingdom," Matt. xxiv. 14; Col. i. 6, 23; Rom. x. 18. And one of them, writing to some who had heard it, says, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal. i. 8, 9. "Speak thou the things that become sound doctrine." Titus ii. 18.

5. Avoiding all human doctrines and traditions we are to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. "Ye have made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition. . . . But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. xv. 6, 9. "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." Jer. vi. 16. "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once (once for all, R. V.) delivered unto the saints." Jude 3.

6. The word of the Lord is to be spoken wisely. "Walking in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." Col. iv. 5, 6. "Warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom." Col. i. 28. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. ii. 15. "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Matt. x. 16.

7. The word of the Lord must also be spoken plainly. "Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken, for ye shall speak into the air." 1 Cor. xiv. 9. "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit, and of power." 1 Cor. ii. 4. "We use great plainness of speech." 2 Cor. iii 12.

8. We should speak his word with patience and gentleness toward all, for though many like the Cretians, need to be rebuked sharply," yet even to them our language must be tempered and sweetened by a good intention, namely, "that they may be sound in faith." Titus i. 13; iii. 2. "Be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

9. The word of the Lord is to be spoken boldly. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke ix. 26. "Praying.... for me, that utterance may be given unto me that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds: that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak." Ephes. vi. 19, 20. See also Jer. i. 7, 8; Prov. xxviii. 1.

10. His word is to be spoken with uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. "Not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." 2 Cor. iv. 2. "In doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity." Titus ii. 7.

11. His word must be spoken zealously. "Bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." Acts xx. 23, 24. "With many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, save yourselves from this untoward generation." Acts ii. 40. "It was needful for me to write unto you and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend (Greek, epagonizesthai, in which we may recognize the word agonize,) for the faith once delivered unto the saints." Jude 3. The Savior "gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." Titus ii. 14.

12. It must also be spoken affectionately. "When he was come near he beheld the city and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Luke xix. 41, 42. "I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." Acts xx. 31. "Speaking the truth in love." Ephes. iv. 15. See Jer. ix. 1; xiii. 17.

13. The word of the Lord must be spoken diligently, in season and out of season. "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you." 1 Peter iii. 15. "Being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord." Acts xviii. 25. "Preach the word: be instant in season, out of season." 2 Tim. iv. 2. We have examples of speaking while seated in the house (Matt. xiii. 36), in the synagogue (Luke iv. 20, 21), in the temple (John viii. 2), in a ship (Matt. xiii. 2), at the table (Luke xiv. 15 etc.), at a well (John iv. 6 etc.). Of speaking while walking along the road (Luke xxiv. 32), riding on a journey (Acts viii. 31, 35), arraigned before a civil magistrate (Acts xxvi. 2), and while visiting from house to house night and day (Acts xx. 20, 31). Of speaking to one hearer (Acts viii. 35), to a household (Acts xvi. 32), and to a public assembly (Acts ii. 22).

"The field is the world," and this affords such a vast area and scope for sowing "the word of the kingdom" that every believer whose heart abounds with that word may somewhere find opportunities of communicating it to others in an orderly manner, if not in public at least in private circles. "Let him that heareth say come." Rev. xxii. 17. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Matt. xii. 34. Wherever dim your light may be, do not make this an excuse for putting it under a bushel. Matt. v. 15. See what a short message was Jonah's, and yet how great the results! (Jonah iii. 4). Now the message with which we are entrusted—the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts viii. 12)—though somewhat longer than Jonah's, is very plain, and easily told. When a great persecution arose against the church in Jerusalem, "they were all scattered abroad, except the apostles." Hence it seems more than probable that the dispersed were what certain moderns would style "the laity," and yet they "went everywhere preaching the word." And see how, at Antioch for example, the ministry of some of them was blessed,—"the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." Acts viii. 1, 4; xi. 19-21.

As a general rule in preaching the gospel of the kingdom aim to prove, picture, and persuade. 1. To prove by it these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. i. 5-11.

THE STAR.

S. DONNA BEECH.

Phillip and Effie began with the year,
Reading the Testament over again.
And it seemed to their fancy that angels were near,
When wise words were followed o'er mountain and plain.

And swift in their thought, the lone beaming star
Was lighting with brightness the dusk of their room,
And pointing before them in path stretching far,
Where life's journey led, in its darkness and gloom.

"Oh how I wish," said the bright earnest boy,
"That Bethlehem's star were but daily my own,
That I, like those men of the East, might enjoy,
What they, in the coming to Jesus, have known?"

"I want my own self, by the star, to be led,
'Till I come to stand safely beside the dear King;
—Frankincense and gold, they brought him, 'tis said,
—For his service and glory, myself would I bring."

"The star you may have, it is ready for you,"
Said the mother, who stood in the dusk of the door.
"And Phillip may come, and our dear Effie too,
By the light that it throws on the pathway before."

"And if you to Jesus, your homage would pay
You must climb clear apast the dark mountains of pride,
And find in humility's valley the way,
Where only and ever the savior abides.

"No mist-wet it was that you saw in your room,
The glory flashed out from the book in your hands,
It was the star that enlightened the gloom,
And ushered ahead the delectable lands."

Can't Rub It Out.

"Don't write there," said a father to a son, who was writing with a diamond on the window.

"Why not?"

"Because you can't rub it out."

Did it ever occur to you, my child, that you are daily writing that which you can't rub out?

You made a cruel speech to your mother the other day. It wrote itself on her loving heart, and gave her great pain. It is there now, and hurts her every time she thinks of it. You can't rub it out.

You wished a wicked thought one day in the ear of your playmate. It wrote itself on his mind, and led him to do a wicked act. It is there now; you can't rub it out.

All your thoughts, all your words, all your acts are written in the Book of God. The record is a very sad one. You can't rub it out.

The Old Home.

How you long to get your feet once more on that old path between the gray stone walls and the brambles! It seems as if you could put back the hand of time and forget all the sad lessons of life, if you could once more see the places, tread the ways, pick the flowers, so well known, so dearly remembered! But would you? You could not bring back the bright eyes, the smooth skin, the firm muscles, the unworn nerves of youth. Those passed are impossible to restore. And neither could you bring back the hopes, the trust, the ideal, the faith by which the past was crowned and the future illuminated. Nature is the same, but you, to whom she speaks, are changed, and her voice, which once sang to you those sweet songs which cradle the hopes and kindle the aspirations of youth, would now croon to you only dirges and the sad monotone of the funeral bell. Still, you strain your eyes forward the wall by which you have to climb walked and then you turn to look over the long, green slope of hills, and the "happy valley," that outspreads like a cloth of the great master, roaring up their bulk on each side. You see the tower of the old church and mark the houses familiar to you as friends, and encircled with a thousand associations of long ago. You reach the old roof-tree. Kind faces welcome you; kind hands are held out to greet you. They are generous and and good and dear; but they belong to the new order, not the old. It is not the father with his queer mixture of genuine affection and sarcastic humor; not the fair young sister whose golden curls were like the tendrils of a vine about her wild-rose face; nor yet that older sister, the independent owner of that dear house which stood at a convenient angle with the old home. No one who was once your playmates now among the mountains, and many sleep at their feet. All [illegible] which always eludes [illegible] for the sweet light [illegible] the years [illegible] when [illegible]

[illegible] future who receives us in her arms when all the rest are gone.

Down by the lakeside the wavelets run in and out as they did centuries on centuries before you saw them, and as they will still go on during centuries on centuries after you have ceased to see them. The blue sky reflects itself in the limpid mirror below; the mountains rise up to the clouds and the clouds come down to meet them; the flowers bloom; the leaves of the trees rustle in the wind; the birds sing; the shadows fall—all the same as of yore when they meant so much to you. These are the same; but these only. For the rest—it is a triple plait of death, and loss and age, and the snows of winter, instead of the golden glory of the blooming spring! And yet something lives which will die only when life itself dies out. Memory and love piece together the broken vase, fill up the empty cup, repeople once more the deserted haunts. The ghosts of the dead past look over the shoulders of the living present, and the old love knits itself on to the new life there at the parsonage, where the best man and woman ever consecrated to good works comfort the afflicted and lead the erring back to righteousness of life. Old faces meet you at the door—old voices call you by your name on the terrace—old memories swarm like bees about the ivy and the woodbine on the wall—come to your heart in the odor of the jasmine planted in the angle by your girl friend when time was young—whisper from the lime-trees where boy-lovers carved their initials on the bark—stand beside you at the broken wall which was as your tower of observation whence you looked down on the passers by and laughed your welcome to the home-comers. Old memories! Ah what a heart-break lies in those words! And yet not so—not so. Life is always young, always progressive, always full of hope and energy and power. Good greeting then to those who are in the place of the old, and may their hands be strengthened for the work laid on them to do!—Home Journal.

GOD'S FAITHFULNESS WORTH FOR THE NEW YEAR.

At the beginning of a new year it seems most appropriate to fix our thoughts for a little on the faithfulness of God. Through the year now sped his mercies have followed us; to him we are indebted for our comfortable surroundings, our troops of friends, and all the pleasures attending this life. He has led us on our way; and, if our path has not been so smooth as that of others, he has strengthened us. If more joy and sunshine have come to us than to many of our fellows, let us "be thankful unto him and bless his name, for the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations."

But we know that, not only during the past year, but during all the years of our life, we have been supplied out of his fulness. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." He openeth his hand liberally and supplieth all our returning wants. "Goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life." "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not; they are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness. The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in him."

And this goodness and faithfulness of God in bestowing upon us whatever he sees necessary, begets in us that trust and dependence which ought to be manifested by the creature to the Creator; for we should be recognizing more and more clearly that it is not in ourselves or by our own ability that we obtain so many blessings and privileges, but that all come from our "heavenly Father." But in spite of the danger of ingratitude for favors so regularly and constantly bestowed, and receive with humility and thankfulness the offerings from on high, acknowledging the source of all our comforts and living in entire dependence upon Him. He has been with us in the past, and that gives us confidence in the continuance of his care. Only we require to be faithful to him, walking in the way of his commandments, learning more and more of his purposes to comply more perfectly with the requirements. To learn of his purposes, his Word must be our study—that Word by which the mysteries of the past, the present, and the future are unveiled, and by the help of which we can resolve the discords caused by sin and sorrow, suffering and death. Truth and certainty are written on its every page; no vain imaginings, no [illegible] which always eludes [illegible] for the sweet light [illegible] the years [illegible] when [illegible] eyes; but, on the contrary, we are in the company of those who know what they believe, and are assured of the stability of the foundation of their hope. And this Word of God on which we build has stood, and can stand, the test of thorough investigation; but the evil is that the theories of its interpreters are accepted as the very teaching of God, and when such theories are disproved, as a consequence the Scriptures are discredited. All knowledge is of God; he cannot contradict himself; neither can science and revelation, for science is knowledge. All truth comes from him, and his Word is saving truth, because it leads us to him who taketh away our sins and the sins of the world. Showing us the nature and awful penalty of sin, it draws us to the Redeemer from sin and death, appealing to that strong desire for life common to the whole creation of God. Believing in him, trusting in him, we have the sure promise that when he appears we shall appear with him in glory. But to be manifested with him then, we must be faithful to him now; for it is not every one who says, "Lord, Lord," that shall be accepted, but they who do his will.

If God be not our hope, and his faithfulness the basis of ours, to whom can we go, and on what can we rely? We find confusion and anarchy all around; the ties of civil order snapping asunder by the power and at the instigation of unprincipled agitators who, call them what you will—Nihilists, Internationalists, Socialists—have the same end in view—the overthrow of existing institutions; all nations armed to the teeth, waiting for something, they know not what, afraid of everything, and chiefly of the future. And what of that blessed time of righteousness and peace which was to dawn on this troubled earth through the spread of education and science, and of which our poets have sung, our philanthropists dreamed, and for which our toiling statesmen have yearned? As far away as ever!

In spiritual affairs is there less confusion? We see scepticism rampant, avowed by our leading litterateurs, and our foremost scientists, while religion, or at least reference to religious subjects, is tabooed in society. This prohibition, however, is readily withdrawn to allow anyone to cast a ludicrous light on some quotation from Scripture, and if this be done by a Christian, who can resist the sparkling witticism? It is also a very significant sign of our day that believers in nothing make no secret of their ideas, and are allowed to ventilate opinions which, twenty or thirty years ago, would probably have ruined their worldly prospects, and would certainly have exposed them to pitiless and irritating persecution. But now the press and the pulpit, the platform and the publisher, are at their service to scatter far and wide the precious seeds of negation. Truly, there is not much in all this to encourage us; not much to make us optimists; not much to brighten our hope, giving us fresh impulses to work on trusting that somewhere and somehow in the illimitable future good and happiness shall be evolved from evil and misery. The dread realities of the present are against such a regeneration. And yet we believe it will come; God will accomplish it, for he has promised to do so, and we have his faithfulness in the past as a guarantee for the time to come. "I am the Lord, I change not." "The Father of lights, with whom is no variableness nor shadow of turning."

"Firm as a rock his truth shall stand,
When rolling years shall cease to move."

From this thought the perplexed and troubled derive enduring comfort; it is a solace and help to the mourner, strength to the weak, living sunshine to the poor in spirit, and rest to the weary and heavy laden. "Oh, rest in the Lord, wait patiently for him, and he shall give thee thy heart's desire."

Still, how often in the turmoil of business, the worrying cares of life, with its ceaseless bustle and toil, do we forget our position as dependents on the bounty of God, and how unthankful and dispirited do we feel if our little sky grows dark with clouds. We too often compare our lot with that of others and our grumbling increases, for we forget that we cannot see the inward pangs of outward prosperity—that skeleton of the house which every inmate is desirous of concealing from the visitor's gaze. In other words, we entirely forget the unnumbered mercies we have received, and because our path seems rough when discontent distorts our mental vision, we murmur, we become unthankful and unholy, our faith is dimmed, and every bounty showered upon us is looked at askance, merely because something on which our heart was set has been denied us. Of course this is not reasonable, we all admit that; but it is so natural, and we are very human, finding it very easy to trust God in prosperity. But in seasons of adversity [illegible] faith is tried, when [illegible] future seems dark. Then is the time to show the sincerity of our trustfulness and be drawn nearer and nearer to him who alone can uphold and direct us, the God of all mercy, who will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear. Under the shadow of his wings, and feeling securely calm, protected by his mighty power, all our fretting and all our base ingratitude will vanish like the morning mists, and then we shall realize that, wherever we are, we are with him and he with us; that he is the Ever-near; his is the world with its flowers and thorns, and his is man with his joys and sorrows—not the slightest thing can happen to us but by the will of God.

May it be our desire and resolve in the year which has dawned, to cleave unto him who is able and willing to supply all our needs, and to give us that peace which the world can neither give nor take away.—J. Hill, in the Messenger.

The Hindu ladies of Bombay are having a new and strange sensation. A fair widow, aged scarcely twenty-five, who has attained quite a reputation as a learned Sanskrit scholar and who has devoted her life to the labor of educating her countrywomen, has been delivering a course of lectures in a hall crowded to excess with the Hindu and Parsi ladies of Bombay. This lady, called the Pandita Ramabia (Pandita being the feminine of Pandit or Pandit, a learned man), spoke with perfect fluency and self-possession, and argued the importance of education for women, that they might be real companions to their husbands and receive their share of the benefits of the age. It has been like an electric shock to those who heard her, stirring them up to an ambition to gain such culture as they saw that the Pandita had. After she had finished, the ladies present were asked to volunteer to express their own views; and it is said that a number did so, with a force and propriety that was surprising to themselves and to the audience. A native newspaper says that "even the most hopeful of women's advocates among us were hardly prepared for this singular but most delightful spectacle." This is not a Christian movement; but it is, like the whole system of Hindu education and the Brahmo Somaj movement in religion, only what Christianity and missionary labors in India have made possible there.—Independent.

THE JEWS.

JOHN L. WINCH.

The wonder of the ages past!
A standing miracle today!
Their sky with darkness overcast—
And countless pitfalls 'long their way,
Both may exist, apart and lone,
The doomed and wand'ring outcast race,
That treads the soil of every zone,
Without a home, without a place.

Their city, old Jerusalem,
Neath heap on heap in ruin lies;
Though once she sparkled like a gem,
Beneath the blue of Orient skies;
But desolation must complete
Near this emblazoned on Zion's Hill;
Her soil is pressed by alien feet—
The voice of sacred praise is still.

To David's son upon the throne
Is bowed no more the subject head;
No offering on the altar stone,
Where once the countless victims bled;
Not willing tribes seek Jacob's God,
To pour their praise in holy strains
The spot where mitered Levite trod,
By Moslem feet is made profane.

Opposing forces all combined—
The pestilence, and fire, and sword,
The cruelty of heathen mind—
Have wrought the vengeance of the Lord.
The cup of curses they have drained;
The Lion drags their necks in prostrate;
Their sinful pride the Lord has stained,
—Their wounds feel have found no rest

For years and years they've borne their shame
Beneath the proud oppressor's rod;
In lands adorned with freedom's name,
Their blood has also stained the sod.
And yet beneath this deep disgrace,
As once the favored race of old,
Exists the unconquered pride of race:
Remains the gem which is not for gold.

Amid the changes of all time,
All fleeting empires rose and fell;
As nations filled their cup of crime,
And sunk into a nation's hell;
Throughout the whole mysterious race's trial
The Jew in spite of all survive;
Though as a nation counted dead;
Yet as a race, they live and thrive.

Their enemies have tried in vain
To blot or break their lofty will;
To wear as slaves the restless chain.
To fail like beasts that turn the mills.
Mid changes wrought by time and place:
Against the march of all events,
Remains intact the ancient race,
A monument of Providence.

What people could endure so long
So much of spite and fiendish hate,
Through eighteen hundred years of wrong,
And still outlive the dreadful fate?
But soon the darkness will be gone;
The last faint rays of light appear,
The herald of the coming dawn,
That ushers in the brighter years.

When guided by an unseen hand,
They expatriated sons once more
On Palestine, (now sacred land)
Shall bend their steps toward thy shore.
Jerusalem shall rise and shine,
Queen city of the New-born East,
And temple service then divine
Will consecrate the solemn feast.

Then rivers of blessings shall come down:
Refreshing rain and dew divine,
And wealth of wonders then shall crown
The desert, vale and barren hill.
The Prince of David's house shall reign,
The rightful heir to David's throne.
The manger-cradled babe, once slain,
Will sway a sceptre all must own.

A LETTER TO MY COUSIN.

Again, you say, that Paradise is the blessed condition in hades. Where did you learn that there are two conditions in hades? Not in the Bible, certainly. The Bible says, Eccl. iii. 20, speaking of the sons of men and of beasts, "All go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Here, it seems, that in the matter of death, man and beasts are alike, "So that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast." No two conditions in hades taught here. Again, Eccl. ix. 10, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom in (hades, translated) grave, whither thou goest." This looks like unconsciousness in hades.

You refer me also to the expression of Christ, "great is your reward in heaven." I answer, the reward as well as the treasure are laid up in heaven, but the Savior says, Rev. xxii. 12, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be."

"Hath everlasting life." This is only in promise, but the true Christian is confident that it is a sure promise. He knows in whom he has believed and trusted his all.

"Shall not see life." But you say "the unbeliever will see life, that is existence nevertheless." But that assertion lacks proof. I understand the inspired writer meant just what he said. "Shall never see life." Shall have no part in the resurrection. That when a man dies, whose whole life or soul, as it were, has been given up to earth and sensuality, and has not sought by patient continuance in well-doing, a life beyond the present state of existence, but has lived in opposition to the plain injunctions and admonitions of the gospel; that such an one will never be brought from hades. His candle has gone out, never to be relighted. God will have no use for such persons in the economy of his incoming government, and therefore he will not reorganize them. But I believe there will be two classes raised from the dead, denominated, perhaps, the just and the unjust, but where the distinction will be made, I cannot say. The one class will be raised at the [illegible] thousand years [illegible] and will be kings and priests, and reign with Christ over the nations; and the other class will be raised at the close of the millennial reign.

The one class, represented as the 144,000, Rev. xiv., stand in relation to Christ as a virgin to a betrothed husband. "These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins," that is, they are not defiled with that abominable doctrine so characteristic of "Babylon, the mother of harlots." "These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and the Lamb." The song that they sing may be found in Rev. v. 9, 10. When the number 144,000 (figurative number probably) is complete, the door into that class will be forever closed. The complement of kings and priests is made up, and full, hence no others can learn that song. For a description of the other class that will be raised at the close of the thousand years, and the song that they sing, see Rev. vii. 9–17. These are quite another class of saints from those denominated virgins, in that their robes were defiled and needed cleansing. The washing of their robes may take place in the resurrection state for aught I can say. This defilement may and I think does have reference to that doctrine so characteristic of the Roman Catholic church, and which contaminates the garments of all her daughters.

You quote again, "In the day thou eatest thereof," etc., and say "death does not always mean a cessation of existence,' and cite me as a proof to Eph. ii. 5. We admit that death here means a state of sin, or alienation from God, but the death here brought to view is not penal in its nature, like that death threatened Adam. It is a state of sin, a death that the sinner loves above all things else. The death pronounced upon Adam was a penalty for sin, and not the sin itself, like the death brought to view here. Can't you see a difference between the sin of a murderer and the penalty for that sin, which is being hanged? Guiteau, the assassin, rejoiced in the murder of Mr. Garfield, and boasted that he had killed the President, but when he comes to the gallows and faces the penalty for that murder, he recoils. He could see a difference very plainly between being dead to the law and zealous while murdering the President, and death the penalty for that murder, if you can't.

Please look at the margin of Gen. ii. 17, and you will see "dying thou shalt die," or in other words, from the moment you partake of the forbidden fruit you will be in a dying condition until you die. But God has not left us to conjecture what kind of a death it was. In describing the penalty he told Adam plainly, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This is the kind of death that entered into the world in consequence of that one disobedience, and where can be no reason why the teachers of the Orthodox school should imagine the death pronounced upon Adam to be a spiritual death, only to bolster up that lie of the serpent, "Ye shall not surely die."

Again you say, "death is a separation." Please tell me where you find such a definition of death. You may find it in commentaries, but not in the Bible. We acknowledge no such a definition of death. A death which is penal in its nature, can only be a cessation of life. The ancients so regarded death. When king Hezekiah was told that he should die and not live, Isa. xxxviii., he turned his face to the wall and prayed, beseeching God to remember "that he had done that which was right in his sight." "And Hezekiah wept sore." But why did he weep? Did he not know most really that he was going to that happy place in hades where the good always go at death? Nay, verily. He knew nothing of a happy place in hades. In answer to his prayer God added fifteen years to his days. Then came the rejoicing. In "the writing of Hezekiah when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness," he said, "Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter: I did mourn as a dove; mine eyes fail with looking upward. O Lord I am oppressed: undertake for me." Hezekiah knew well that "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into hades," (translated silence). Ps. cxv. 17. Again he says, "They that go down into hades (translated, the pit) cannot hope for thy truth." In verse 17, he says, "but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption." Please read Hezekiah's prayer and song, and I think you will not fail to see that he had not been indoctrinated into the modern Orthodox school, but understood death to be a cessation of life.

But you say in conclusion, "But where is to be the final abode of the believer, I have not settled it, nor do I particularly [illegible] you seem to think it is on the [illegible] year[illegible]

And is it indeed not clearly revealed? Is it true God has left us in doubt and uncertainty as to where is to be our abode and what our occupation in the ages to come? Is that vast array of Scripture describing the kingdom of heaven and associating it with earthly things, things that cannot possibly obtain in heaven, all to go for naught, simply because they come athwart our favorite theory, and which the church has believed and taught so long and so ardently? Shall we count it a matter of uncertainty where the kingdom is to be, and what the reward of the righteous, when Daniel says, "And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," that when the Son of man shall come with the clouds of heaven, there shall be given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages shall serve him? Here you will discover that there are people, nations and languages associated with the kingdom. You will notice also, that it is when the Son of man comes with the clouds of heaven. Now compare this description of his coming with that of Jesus himself, Matt. xxiv. 30, "And there shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

Compare also Matt. xxv. 31; and xix. 28, and I think you cannot fail to see that the kingdom of heaven, when set up, will be on the earth, among men. See, also, Rev. ii. 26, "And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." Are there any nations in heaven that are refractory, and need ruling with a rod of iron? If not then we may know that promise cannot have its fulfillment there. But there are nations on earth that need correcting and bringing under restraint. Then is it not plain that the kingdom will be set up where there exists a need for it? Put two ideas together, using a little common sense and it will be found to be very plainly revealed where the "final abode of the believer is to be," and what his occupation. It seems to me that there is an abundance of Scripture, plain and distinct, and right to the point, so that he who runs may read and understand if his mind is not warped by commentaries and church creeds.

And now, dear cousin, in conclusion allow me to entreat you to examine this subject with more than ordinary diligence and earnestness. The importance of having correct views on the subject of the kingdom, may be greater than it might at first thought appear. Jesus came to preach the gospel, or good news of the kingdom. He says he was sent for this purpose. We observe, also, that the description of the kingdom occupied a very prominent position in his preaching to his disciples, nearly all his parables were illustrations and descriptions of it, and even after his resurrection, he was there forty days, speaking of things pertaining to the kingdom of God. The Savior was very careful to post them thoroughly on the subject of their future position and occupation in his kingdom.

When the chief magistrate of our nation appoints his subordinate officers, he appoints such as are supposed to be qualified for the positions that they are expected to fill. Farmers, mechanics and common laborers are not supposed to understand the wants of the nation as well as those who have made this subject a life-time study. Exactly so is it with the King of kings. He will want those to judge or rule over the nations, who have prepared themselves to occupy such positions. The man who expects to obtain his inheritance in heaven, cannot tell you what he expects to do there, except in a general way, he is going to sing and shout and wear crowns of victory. Slothful occupation indeed, in comparison to that grand and noble position of judging the nations, reigning over kings and princes, "Binding their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron, to execute upon them the judgment written." See Psa. cxlix. 8, 9, bringing the heathen and the rebellious inhabitants of earth under the mild sceptre of King Immanuel, and teaching them obedience to just and righteous laws. Yours in hope of eternal life when our King is enthroned in Majesty.

From your Cousin,
D. HOWARD.

Editor Restitution:

Suffer me to write an open letter to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, that are anxious to hear about my trip to Indiana and Illinois. I left home on the [illegible] and children standing on the p[illegible]m at Parsons, Kan., and took the train for St. Louis, arriving in the morning of Oct. 25.

After taking some refreshments I left my daughter Allee seated in the train for Columbus, Ind., where her parents reside; while my brother and self took the train for Peru, thence to Macy, where our nephew met us and conveyed us to our mother's house where we had a happy meeting.

Saturday evening as agreed upon, I spoke at Rabbit Glory schoolhouse to a large congregation.

On the 5th Sunday we held a family reunion—a happy time, but for one thing, my dear old father was not there, his place was vacant, he is resting in old Mt. Zion graveyard. It seemed lonesome to me, as I saw him two years ago. But he has fallen asleep, and we will meet no more till we meet in the world to come.

On the 1st Sunday in November I went to Antioch, Marshall Co., where I met some of my old friends, brother Barnhill, Hugh Railsback and wife, I. O. Roberts and wife, Israel Taylor, and old sister Taylor, and others whom I need to meet; but some have fallen asleep, and others moved away to other places.

Next I went to Plymouth to Conference, where I met brethren from all parts—brother Chaplin, our dear old Editor, who is so faithfully serving the church, brethren Underwood, Thompson, Horah, Tuttle, Cordill, and all the sisters; brother and sister Wiuce, bro. and sister Dwiggins, S. Wilson, Wm. Devorell, D. T. Halstead, Oppy, Drew, and a host of others, which made us rejoice to be there. I spoke four times for the friends at Plymouth. At this conference meeting five persons were immersed by brother Chaplin.

The 3d Sunday I went to Argos, and met with the brethren at that place; had quite a lively meeting.

Next went to Macy, where I met my old friend J. P. Wagoner. Together we held meeting over Sunday. On Monday night we moved our meeting to Rabbit Glory schoolhouse, and there immersed nine souls into Christ.

Took our leave of the brethren and went to Delta, O. Spoke over the 1st Sunday in December. Met at brother Thomas Elton's on Sunday to break bread. The little church here is, I think, The Model Church. Bade them farewell on Wednesday and went to Napoleon, where I met my brother. I spoke twice at his schoolhouse, and on Friday took the train for Renaselaer, where I met brother and sister Dwiggins at their comfortable home. Held meetings over Sunday till Tuesday, and had a good time with the brethren. They have brother Halstead to preach regularly for them.

Bidding the friends good by, I started for Macy again. At Peru I met my daughter-in-law and we both went on to see mother once more. Spoke at the schoolhouse over the 3d Sunday to a large audience; interest good, but no more additions. Will not brother Wagoner or some one else go there and feed that little flock, they need the sincere milk of the word.

On Wednesday we said good by to relatives and started to Columbus, and spent a few days visiting my daughter-in-law's people, A. D. C. Glick and family. They wanted me to stay and preach for them over the 4th Sunday, but I had an appointment at Shoals, so bade them farewell with the promise that if I ever come to Indiana again I will give them a call.

At Shoals I met brother and sister Stewart, whom I claim as my children in the gospel. Here is a little band of thirteen, built up by brother and sister Stewart. On Saturday night we commenced meeting in the U. B. Church, and Sunday morning preached the funeral sermon of brother Stewart's little boy, who died some time ago. In the evening we had a social meeting, in which all spoke to the point. On the following Wednesday I journeyed six into Christ. Should any preaching brother go their way they will be happy to have him call.

Went to Washington where I met my daughter-in-law, and we started home to Kansas. Where we arrived safely and found all well.

Will say in conclusion, the brethren everywhere remembered my wants, well knowing the iron horse must be fed in order to travel. Brethren and sisters let us live for the future, doing all the good we can both by precept and example; all have work to do. Some have means but cannot preach, to those I say Preach with your money. I have seen some brethren while on my trip who could keep one speaker in the field all the time, and still have plenty left to live on. Are we doing all we can? I have secured five new subscribers for THE RESTITUTION on my [illegible] that I may prove thanks to the kind senders for the little book.

FROM JERUSALEM.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 27, 1882.

We are expecting a man to arrive here in a few weeks with a steam flour mill, from Philadelphia, U. S. A. When I told our good consul of this he was very much pleased. God has sent this man here in the right time.

The soup kitchen is still kept open and much good has it done.

I am very busy. There are urgent calls for something all the time. Three poor Jews are now waiting for me to do something for them. One wants this, another that, and third something else. There is an open door to do good at Jerusalem; and of all places upon earth, Jerusalem is the place to labor. Whoever wishes to see it made a praise in the earth cannot withhold their means. If we pray for the peace of Jerusalem, and do really feel that we will give the Lord no rest till he establish, and makes it a praise in the earth, should we not show our faith by our works!

Oct. 4.—There is an increasing interest throughout the world in the restoration of Israel and the Holy Land. I receive interesting letters from the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts of America, from Texas, the Western and Middle States and Canada; asking for information and full of sympathy. I have a large correspondence which occupies most of my time. My hands are full and I am anxious to do more. The friends I know will be patient with me while I am endeavoring to do all and the best I can.

I will mention two incidents which may give the reader some idea of the poverty and depressed feelings of one class of Jerusalem's inhabitants. Walking down Poor Jew Street the other day, I saw a poor half-blind Jew asking mutely for charity. As I passed him he looked at me with a sigh but said nothing. I returned and put a bishlik (about twelve cents) into his nearly empty cap. He thanked me and looked at the coin, half doubting if it was real. He then arose and walked away with the air of a rich man. A friend standing by remarked—"He never had so much money before in his life." I have passed the place several times since but he was not there. If he had been begging for gain, I think he would have been found again where he obtained, in his own estimation, a treasure. Twelve cents stopped his begging for the present.

To-day I was in the same street with a friend and came upon another poor Jew asking alms. He was so quiet and unostentatious that he attracted my attention and I put a bishlik in his cap also. He stood and turned it over and over, seemingly astonished that such a fortune should fall to him. My friend said: "You have made him rich for life." But with all their satisfaction and the gratitude which they express, I am much happier in giving than they possibly can be in receiving. I know the friends who minister to the necessities of these poor Jews at Jerusalem will be abundantly rewarded. God be praised for what is done. He hears and answers prayer. God is good.

Oct. 10.—I am learning much of the peculiar characteristics of the Jews as a nation and find them quite different from what I had been led to believe. Christians might, if they felt so disposed, learn many useful lessons from the Jews.

Mr. Marcus, a prominent Jew in Boston, is doing much for the relief of the persecuted Jews in Jerusalem. He has an agent here. I hope many others in America will do likewise.

Oct. 18.—I will relate a strange dream I had last night. I thought that a man came to my door and asked for admittance. I opened the door, and as soon as I saw the man I knew that he was a representative of the Turkish government. After he had entered the house I tried to force him out. I then discovered that there were many people with me, who were also endeavoring to thrust the man out. But all our combined power could not eject him. I now saw that he was heavily armed: and he said that he had come to destroy us.

I then thought, as he had really entered the house and I had no power to put him out, nor in any way to get rid of him, that I would try the art of flattery, which I did. The bait took and he seemed to diminish, both in size and power. He laid aside his arms; but I observed they were still within his reach. I knew that a false move on my part would be disastrous and prove our ruin, and I trembled knowing my weakness, as I saw that he was really contemplating our destruction, and was about to take his weapons again. My suspense and agony were terrible. As I sat trembling, not knowing how to act, I saw Mr. Towne and Mr. Cummings, from Boston, coming up behind him.

I saw in Mr. Towne's hand a common steel wire, tipped with something which I could not understand, something with which I was not acquainted. As I was wondering what all this could mean, he came near the strong armed man, and to my surprise, put the wire to his ear, which immediately began to smoke, and emit flames of fire. I saw that our enemy was conquered. He became powerless and began to faint. I looked on, still trembling and fearing that one false move would prove our ruin. At length, to my infinite relief, I saw that our enemy was completely in the power of his victors, and they immediately dispatched him. Then I felt a freedom that I never before realized.

The scene then changed; and I saw myself in a room where there was confined six or seven Turkish ladies. They were very beautiful, but languishing for the want of sunshine and air. I told them I had come to deliver them from their bondage. At first they could not believe me, but as I assured them the time had come for their deliverance, they sprang to their feet and commenced singing songs of deliverance with great joy.

The dream is a strange one to me; and very impressive. It was on the 17th of Oct., just one year from the death of my darling Bertie.

Oct. 22.—I am told, but do not know certainly that it is true, that the Sultan has lately granted to Americans the right to import all kinds of machinery into this country exempt from duty. The Jews are highly pleased at this.

I must mention a visit to moslem ladies, last week. I went in company with several other ladies, having an interpreter with us. We were very cordially received. As we entered each lady met with the salutation—Merhabar, which means Welcome. We were seated in a row upon a divan, and soon were enjoying a real social chat. They wanted us to tell them all about our homes in America, which we did, not forgetting the social relations between the sexes. This, they thought was delightful. "But," said they with a sigh, "you know that we cannot converse with gentlemen, although we wish it in our hearts; but you understand our custom." They asked us to tell them about our ships, railroads, forests, cities, and how the ladies dress in America. They were much interested in what we told them about the education of females and many other subjects. They seemed to feel bad that they could not be educated, travel, and see something of the world, and enjoy a social life.

The life of these lovely women seems to be perpetual childhood. They are allowed to feel no interest in the world around them. Their lovely eyes light up to no enthusiasm, save to those self-willed and haughty kings who call themselves husbands and lords, and for whose wills and pleasures the women are taught to believe they were created. I cannot forget these lovely women, who are possessed of women's natural abilities, softness, grace, radiance and beauty. Life to them must be a dull and uninteresting stream. It is fearful to contemplate the condition of a Mohammedan woman's life. We all tried to cheer our sisters in their bondage, and regretted that we could not make them as free as ourselves.

Mrs. Spofford invited them to come and dine at her house. They replied that they should be happy to do so, but they could not eat with Kawadgers—men. Mrs. Spofford told them the Kawadgers would all shut themselves up at the top of the house. This pleased them and they promised to come. We then took our leave of these new made friends, after promising to renew our visit.

Oct. 29.—The condition of refugees is improving; but in my are still unprovided for. I trust our God will inspire upon the hearts of his people to do their duty in respect to giving, and especially for Jerusalem. I believe it is a safe bank of deposit; Jesus really giving; is to invest properly lending to the Lord. It is laying up treasure in heaven. I can see that every dollar devoted to relieving the suffering poor in Jerusalem, in connection with right influence and right instruction is preparing the way for the coming kingdom. I am more and more convinced of this every day. Assisting these energetic, industrious refugees to get a foot-hold in Jerusalem, is not like giving to indolent persons, nor to superannuated persons; (which may often be a duty) for many of the refugees will become factors of strength in due time. They are neither beggars nor paupers. All they need is help to start; and when they once get a foot-hold they keep it.

Nov. 5.—I have now been in Jerusalem more than one year; but it seems but a few short months. Time flies rapidly with us here. Perhaps there are many reasons, but I can easily assign two—busy hands and minds, and a love for the place.

A Jewish Rabbi came to see me today and we had a long discussion upon Christianity. I asked him if he had ever fully investigated the principles of the Christian faith? He admitted that he had not. "But," said he "I have investigated it far enough to know that Christians claim Jesus Christ came to bring peace to the world." "Yes," I replied "Christians say so; but they are mistaken. Jesus himself said he had not come to bring peace, but a sword. He was astonished to hear me say this and asked me to find the passage that taught it. I turned and read:—'Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law: and a man's foes shall be they of his own household.' Matt. x. 34–36.

He seemed greatly perplexed and would not be satisfied until he had examined the passage himself. I asked him if Jesus had not proved himself to be a true prophet, and he admitted that he had. But he would listen no further. He really appeared afraid to investigate the subject, fest he might see that the very same Jesus who died on the cross was the Jews' Messiah and King.

I did not think best to press the subject further; but still I was not satisfied to let such a fine opportunity pass without fastening the conviction that it seemed to me the truth has made, more deeply upon his heart. I then quoted this cutting passage, which others besides Jews would do well to consider: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him," Prov. xviii. 13. It is a wonderful thing, yet true, and for a wonderful purpose, that God had to cast a veil over the eyes of this people, lest they should see with their eyes, hear with their ears, understand with their hearts and be converted and healed. This proves that at the right time the veil will be removed, and they will turn to the Lord by understanding what the veil prevented them from understanding—the truth—and by the truth they will be converted and healed. The truth will make them free. Thank God for the truth! It is the Spirit of truth, of course, that will lead into the truth.

I learn from one of the oldest merchants that the past year has been the best business year in Jerusalem that he has ever known. This is encouraging. A further encouragement is that the almost continuous harvests are coming in bountifully throughout the entire year; and the early commencement of the rains presages another year of plenty.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 18.

Prelude—Certain questions considered. —1. Rapture of the saints—2. Sixth vial, its relative position—3. Space of time between the rapture and Christ's appearance in Mount Zion —Egypt's future — 1. The future, what — true lamp for investigation time Egypt through untraditional cycles —2. Investigation of the, etc 25.

Prelude — Certain questions considered:—A brother propounds the following questions:—1. Does the sixth vial reach beyond the rapture of the saints? 2. Is there not a space of time between the rapture of the saints, and his (Christ's) public appearing with his saints on Mount Zion? How long before? 3. Does not this time cover the time of the pouring out of the seventh vial? 4. Is it not the work of Christ and his army of immortalized holy ones first to clear the enemies out of the land, the antitype of David's reign? 1. Does the sixth vial reach beyond the rapture of the saints? What is the Rapture of the Saints? Some of our readers may not understand this term; and, therefore fail to comprehend the act intended. Rapture means a removal by some force, from the Latin rapere, raptum, to carry off by force—Webster. When applied to the saints, the act is explained in 1 Thes. iv. 17. "Then we which are alive (and) remain shall be caught up (away) together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This is called the rapture of the saints. Will the sixth vial reach beyond this event? Beyond it, but not far, however. The sixth includes seven distinct periods, according to the number of the seven vials, each vial having its own period. Five of these periods are completed; the sixth period is now in progress, with many of its most noted events still in the future. 1. The great river Euphrates must be dried up. 2. The three unclean spirits must gather the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. 3. A remnant at least, of the twelve tribes, must return to Palestine, and occupy that land, and the city Jerusalem. The great conflict of Rev. xvi. 14, belongs to the sixth period. At some point previous to that battle the rapture takes place, since in that conflict Jesus of Nazareth "will open his eyes upon the house of Judah." Zech. xii. 4. The gathering at the close of the thousand years, is by another agent, Rev. xx. 7. The precise time of the coming of the Son of man, and the rapture is unknown. The signs of that coming as given by the Savior, indicate its vicinity. "Watch therefore."

2. Is there not a space of time between the rapture of the saints and his (Christ's) public appearing with his saints on Mount Zion? How long is this space? We shall consider these but one question, since one answer will cover the two. We cannot fully satisfy the demands of this question, since the events are too complicated.

If, in this question, the Mount of Olives be substituted for Mount Zion, we should answer: One thousand years at least, since that standing is at the close of the Millenium. In answering the question as it now stands, many conflicting interpretations are involved. Where did Christ appear with his "saints" on Mount Zion? We have failed to find such a passage. John saw a Lamb stand on the Mount Zion, and with him a hundred forty (and) four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. Rev. xiv. 1. We do not question their identity, but we question the office, and the time. Christ will reign with his saints on mount Zion—but we question—if that reign is brought to view in Rev. xiv. 1. The coming of Christ will be in his royalty—a Nobleman, having received the kingdom; one like the Son of man, who receives a kingdom from the Ancient of days. When he comes, he has many crowns. The order of events as enunciated in Rev. xix. 7-21; and Rev. xx., is the following:—1. The rapture. 2. The marriage. 3. The marriage supper. 4. The descent of the Faithful and True, to judge and make war. 5. The warrior described: His eyes as a flame of fire, and on his head many crowns; vesture dipped in blood; his name, The Word of God. 6. The armies of heaven, (the bride), on white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, follow him. 7. Out of his mouth a sharp sword. 8. On his vesture, a name written, King of kings, Lord of lords. 9. The overthrow of the hostile army. 10. The binding of Satan. 11. The thousand years reign. 12. Satan loosed. 13. The final battle. 14. Close of the official reign of subjugation. The New Heavens and New Earth and the joint reign follow. Our space will not allow a full answer. Will give it in our next number and explain Deut. xxxiii. 1-3; Hab. iii. 1-6; and Isa. lxiii. 1-8; also the 24th Psalm, as these are the principal texts, which are quoted to establish the view that Christ, with his saints first descends upon mount Sinai, thence takes his line of march through the great wilderness to Palestine, invisible to the outer world till he appears on mount Zion; then fulfilling Psa. xxiv. 7-10. As we are now about to front of the events to transpire in the age of subjugating, these points are appropriate, using, however, a due degree of caution, not rushing on where angels fear to tread.

Egypt in the future—The past is history acted out and completed; the present is history in progress of accomplishment; a web in the loom; but the future? what is it? An unexplored night wilderness, without a sun, or a moon, or a star, or any natural object; or any light of nature to guide us? Egypt's future! Who knows it? Who can write it? And, yet, it is written. Who can furnish us with a copy, or even fragments of a copy? There sits a lamp; with its light, pure and the most intensely brilliant [illegible] and let us peer into [illegible] rayless wilderness.' If [illegible] let us follow Egypt in her pass-way through its sands, its bogs, its mountains, its dark valleys till it emerges into the glories of an endless paradise.

Our lamp (Bible): it sends its radiant particles, as swift messengers into the wilderness of the future, the terra incognita of revolving cycles.

Here and there on Egypt's pathway, is brought to view some noted beacon. a. An Altar of witness. b. An Eden garden, like an oasis in a Saharan desert. c. A highway. d. A union. e. And finally, in the perpetual sunshine. These five signals disclose to us all the future of Egypt. In one group, they are described as follows:—d. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be, for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt; for they shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a savior, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. b. In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. c. A garden of Eden, an oasis in the desert. "Blessed (be) Egypt my people," d, A happy union. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt, and with Assyria, (even) a blessing in the midst of the land. e. The most distant view we have of Egypt as a family group. And if the family of Egypt go not up (to keep the feast of tabernacles). Read Isa. xix; and Zech. xiv., five objects in the group. These five way marks being disclosed by the light of our divine lamp we are required to compose, in full, the history of Egypt's future. Are these sufficient data for the solution? In mathematical science, three terms are given, to find a fourth. Here five are given, we are required to find a sixth. In the future of Egyptian history, five positions, and historical notes are given, from which we are to compose her history. The first a pillar; the second is an oasis, an Eden spot in the midst of the wilderness; the third is a union of three countries; the fourth is a highway; the fifth is the Egyptian family in the perpetual sunshine. From these data, we are required to understand what the Messiah does with Egypt in his official reign of subjugation; and how, or by what means it is done. That what, and the how, we propose to investigate. To do this, we shall examine these waymarks singly, and in their order. a. The Altar of witness, or Pillar of witness. This Altar and Pillar, as translated from the Hebrew of Isaiah, by Bishop Lowth, are described as follows:—"In that day, there shall be an altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt; and a pillar by the border thereof to Jehovah; and it shall be for a sign, and for a witness to Jehovah God of Hosts in the land of Egypt: that, when they cried unto Jehovah because of oppressions, he sent unto them a savior, and a vindicator, and he delivered them."

In that day—what day? This expression is repeated five times from the 10th vs., to the close of the chapter; it being uttered by the prophet, six times. To what period in Egyptian history does the expression refer? From the events and the agents we are inclined to interpret that day as looking to the future. It may refer to the events of the xviiith chapter. If so, those events extend into the future. "A pillar of witness." A witness is any person, place, or thing, that gives testimony. A pillar is here called a witness, because it gives testimony. Cast your eye upon a map of the valley of lower Egypt. Fix it upon a spot, on the left bank of the Nile, ten miles east of the city of Cairo; on a rock base of about 13 acres stands a pillar in the midst of pillars. And there it has stood for 40½ centuries. Though to the eye, there can be found, in the valley 70 such pillars, yet the prophet is directed to use the singular, "a pillar." In a valley of 70 witnesses (in appearance), there is only one witness. There it stands, testifying. And there it will stand till its testimony is finished. A witness on the stand for 4,000 years. How many centuries it has yet to testify, is known only to its divine architect. [illegible] Joseph and Mary [illegible] Egypt with the child Jesus, whose [illegible] Herod was seeking, this mighty pillar had stood nearly twenty-one centuries. Often did the parents of Jesus, (it is reasonable) while examining the wonders of this land of the Pharaohs, stand, with their child at the base of the pillar, and point out its height, its magnitude, and the immense blocks of stone composing it. And there it will stand when the empire of the living stone, as a mountain fills the whole earth. It shall be a witness through revolving ages, till God's glory covers the world. A witness, useless, in the midst of monuments!

When the Hungarian chief, L. Kossuth, visited Boston, some years since, (1852) standing on a platform at the foot of Bunker Hill monument, before a vast concourse of citizens, alluding to that immense granite structure, we heard him give utterance to this impressive thought, "Silent Monitor to tyrants, and to all tyranny." Such is the character of the great American revolutionary monument; erected by the might of human power. And when the stranger visits that vicinity, and (in mind) sees its armies tolling in deadly strife, and hears the sound of the small arms; and, above all, the cannon's roar, he, involuntarily, lifts his eye to that "silent monitor," exclaiming, "a sign," and a "witness." What, then, of the God-erected monument of Egypt? It has been standing, the monitor, the "silent monitor" witness of 40 centuries of human strife, and of bloody revolutions. It has been the mute companion of all races: the Ethiopian, the Mongolian, and the Caucasian. It saw the Hebrew children under their cruel task-masters, and heard the sound of the lash, and the cry for help; saw the ten plagues, and the overthrow of the armies of Pharaoh in the Red sea. It was a witness to Jehovah God of Hosts in the land of Egypt; that, when they cried unto Jehovah because of oppressors, he sent unto them a savior, and a vindicator, and he delivered them. It has witnessed as a "silent monitor" the struggles for supremacy, of all religions. What indignities has it suffered to its own person! pierced, blasted, and stripped of its outer raiment, like its divine architect it remained silent.

It is now only a few years since the seal upon its lips has been broken, and it has commenced to utter its testimony. It has declared its own history; when, by whom, and for what purpose erected. It is uttering predictions of the future. Let us give attention to its testimony since we are all personally interested. J. P. WEETHEE.

PAULINE CONSOLATION.

The writer has listened to a great many funeral discourses delivered by the so called Orthodox ministers, but, of these, not one was based upon Paul's consoling words in 1 Thess. iv. 13:—"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that you sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them also, which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Others may have been more fortunate than myself. In the light of this experience, extending through a period of more than thirty-five years, I may, pertinently ask the question: Why do ministers of this class so generally neglect this Scripture as a funeral text, seeing that it is so well adapted to this purpose? It is true, that in their obsequies, this passage is read in connection with others relating to death and the resurrection; and I have heard them sometimes quote a detached fragment of it in the sermon; and, as often misapply it; but for them to take this whole connection of God's Word, and bring out all there is in it, and apply it to the case in hand, is what I never heard them do. Why this beautiful comforting Scripture is passed by, is found in the fact that its general drift, and particular references, are so plainly opposed to their notions of the intermediate state as to leave them no ground for the inferences so essential to a sermon from the Orthodox standpoint. It must be as plain as daylight to them, disguise their convictions as they will, that the only consolation the apostle offers to the bereaved Thessalonians is the Lord's return and [illegible] of the dead. [illegible] To say that the resurrection is the rebuilding of a fallen tent, or tenement, in which the real and proper man dwells is to say the least of it, to trifle with the most solemn words; and if this view, so common now, be admitted, Paul did what no minister holding the popular faith, if honest and consistent, would do: that is, offer as the only balm for bleeding hearts the raising up of the house in which the man once dwelt. Had Paul held to the dual nature of man he would have done very naturally, and logically too, what theological teachers do today, turn the mind of sorrow and grief to the nearer meeting time, the death of the bereaved survivors which is only a question of a few years, instead of to the very remote time of the resurrection for the glad union of death dissevered friends. If death is the meeting time (and it is if the notion I am opposing be true), then why look away off to the day of resurrection as the hour burdened with the weight of eternal glory? or why turn from the meeting of real personalities, endowed with the intelligence of angels, to the bringing together of houses at the last day. This is just what the common theory makes Paul do.

But as a logical conclusion from the whole statement of the apostles, it may be put down as a fact, which no sophistry can overthrow, that, he regarded the death state as a total blank; and for this reason he does not trace as much as one poor word of consolation upon it; for this reason he fixes the attention, the undivided attention, of the living upon the event of the Lord's coming as the time of blissful reunion of the dead and the living. Upon this blank, on which an inspired Paul penciled not a single lineament of life, a corrupt and apostate church, centuries ago, wrote: "The soul is the real man and lives on when the body lies in ruins," and about this supposed existence the sweetest flowers of heaven have been made to cluster. It is judged, rewarded, and crowned. Music, joy and gladness are its heavenly accompaniments. To it eloquence and poetry, measure and melody, have lent their sweetest charms. Nearly all, from the schoolboy up to the wisest philosopher, now exclaim: "Plato thou reasonest well."

The heathen world with all their vaunted wisdom; with their airy speculations touching the nature of the soul; with their fables and dreams of the after life in Elysian fields, were totally ignorant of the true Christian hope, and of the state of the dead. This church was composed mainly, if not entirely, of those who were taught "to turn from dumb idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead." Paul laid the promise of the Lord's return and the resurrection of the dead as the bedrock of their faith and hope. Some had already died when he wrote his first letter; and the living he exhorts not to sorrow as others—their heathen neighbors, who were ignorant of the gospel hope; regarded by the apostle as without hope.

He makes no reference to a soul-entity as existing independent of the bodily organization, and dwelling with God, or with the gods, as Socrates taught; nor did he drop one hint which bore the least resemblance to the more refined notion of his modern disciples, in reference to the intermediate state. The whole style of thought is so at variance with the Platonic notion of that day; and so out of harmony with the theory of Christian Platonists of today, that it seems passing strange, that the great majority of Bible students do not make the discovery that the truth, the blessed and comforting truth, is not in their creeds.

It is over "them that are asleep that the bereaved were in danger of sorrowing in hopeless despair." The word sleep is used metaphorically here, to denote a meaning the very opposite of that expressed by the word alive used literally. Wake or awake is the corresponding word metaphorically to express life the opposite of death. They stand thus: awake—alive, asleep—dead. Paul employed one metaphor, Daniel two—"Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," literally the dead shall come to life. There is this difference between the statements of Paul and Daniel. The former [illegible] Jesus," and later, "sleep[illegible] dust of the earth." The majority of Bible readers understand Daniel to refer to the body as such; and Paul, to the soul as a conscious entity. Both, without question, refer to the same thing as being asleep. Daniel designates the locality of the sleepers and Paul their relationship. They are baptized into Christ, they live in him, and die in him, are raised in him. Both are speaking most emphatically of persons, and not of tenements. Of these persons death and sleep are affirmed. I once heard a well educated minister, a scholarly professor in a high school say, that the members of the Thessalonian church, who had fallen asleep in Christ, were alive; that the word sleep here implied a living condition. If so, Daniel's sleepers in the dust are alive! Such statements refute themselves. He forgot, or overlooked the fact, that the apostle affirmed death of the very same thing of which he had affirmed sleep a sentence or two before. "The dead in Christ shall rise first" is his statement. The gentleman betrayed his ignorance of the meaning and force of a metaphor. Sleep and death are, as literal conditions, widely different and the word sleep used as a figure may be based upon the single point of resemblance between literal death and literal sleep, namely: that of unconsciousness of every thing about us; in perfectly sound sleep no dreamings, no thoughts, coherent, or incoherent. We are obliged to carry the notion of unconsciousness with the word sleep as the figurative name of death, the moment we attach to it the idea of consciousness it ceases to be a metaphor. If in addition to unconsciousness we attach this notion of life we make the two states exactly alike and again destroy the metaphor. Our opponents, applying the word sleep to the soul in heaven, perforce of theory have it both alive and conscious; and happy too, and thus they destroy the figure. To ascribe to the soul life, and not consciousness of what was about it, would not suit the popular theory, and would spoil a great deal of fine poetry about palms and crowns, songs and golden harps.

The righteous ones who have fallen asleep in Christ are in a condition that is fairly, and literally represented by the words "are perished," as used by Paul in 1 Cor. xv., in case there is no resurrection of the dead. But for that dear old word of promise, this same apostle, saintly and self denying, and selfsacrificing as he was, would have no advantage over the most sensual, and debauched disciple of Epicurus. Well might he, with his sad view, take up as the fittest motto of life: "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die." He reasoned: "If our great representative head is not raised from the dead then eternal death limits our enjoyment to the narrow bounds of this fleeting life; all hope is confined to this meager existence, and we, the apostles, are of all men most miserable, because our office and work places us in the forefront of the battle.

What Paul declares to be the only door of hope into future eternal life and glory, thousands are today rejecting under the plea: No necessity for the resurrection of the body, and a vastly greater number, sharing with these the same false notion of the human organization, regarding it as a mere tenement; though unlike the former, holding to the idea of its resurrection at the last day, have moved it away from the primary and grandly important place it should occupy in the scheme of redemption, and made it figure as a little scene in the remote background of the great picture. The immortality of the soul, and its entrance on the heavenly state stands as the front view, about which all the importance, the thrilling interest, and the glory to be revealed at the coming of Christ have been made to cluster. It is taught that our Lord comes at that time; that the soul enters the upper and better kingdom and that its capacities for enjoyment are perfected, exercised and gratified. Adam Clark noticed the discrepancy between modern pulpit teaching and that of the apostles, in reference to the resurrection of the dead: that in the one, it is rarely [illegible] the other, spoken of often [illegible] tremendous emphasis; [illegible] insisted on as a fundamental [illegible] faith, and presented as the [illegible] the most lively hope.

"If [illegible] Christ Jesus died and rose again even [illegible] them also which sleep, in Jesus will God bring with him."

That Jesus rose, stands here, as elsewhere, as the pledge and surety that the dead members of his body shall also rise. The one so related to bringing these from the dead as he arose or was brought from the dead, as the next verse shows. God brings them with Christ—not from heaven but from the dead, and the manner is, as "He brought again from the dead that great Shepherd of the sheep." Heb. xiii. 20.

Paul here, in harmony with the fact that revelation is progressive, reveals what had never been revealed before: that the dead should rise before the living are changed, and the rapture of both take place at the same time.

Comfort one another with the words spoken to the then living disciples and every generation of believers since. The doctrine of these words should suggest the line of thought in every funeral discourse. Have teachers heeded this injunction? Judge ye, my readers.

Letter from Jerusalem.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 21, 1882.

Dear Brethren:

I must write a few lines before the mail closes. I like to keep you posted with the news of Jerusalem. The sultan has sent a firman to allow the walls to be taken down; also he last week sent the information that all refugee Jews are to be allowed to come and remain in this land or city as they please. This we think an extraordinary measure, as only three months ago he would not permit them to land at Jaffa, and they were obliged to leave.

Mr. Green, a Jewish gentleman from London is now here. He was sent by a rich society from London to purchase lands to make colonies for refugee Jews. They seem to have plenty of means.

Many Jews are now arriving with a more hopeful feeling. Pharaoh cannot stand in the way when the day comes for Israel's departure.

A terrific storm has been raging for the past two days; we have had thunder and lightning, hail and rain. Jerusalem is washed clean. The farmers will now commence to plough, and sow their grain. The almond is putting forth its buds, and we see one tree in the garden of our Illinois friends quite white with blossoms.

I fear that my letters have not reached you, from what I read in THE RESTITUTION; perhaps they may turn up in time. I have been very busy for the past two months, but hope to have more leisure now.

Your paper is appreciated in Jerusalem. I think if you would write to Mr. Spafford and ask him to write for THE RESTITUTION he would be glad to do so, as he has plenty of time to devote to writing. May God bless you abundantly is my prayer.

A. E. DAVIS.

REPORT OF TRAVELS.

I left home the 26th of December for Paris, Edgar Co., Ill. Took the train at St. Joseph, Mich., at three o'clock. Struck the Chicago and Danville road west of Michigan City; from there I went to Danville where I arrived at two o'clock in the morning. Left there at nine in the morning and got to Paris at half past eleven, where I found my son-in-law at the depot, awaiting my arrival. We went to his house and met my daughter. After being separated from each other since the 13th of September we were glad to meet once more on this side of the kingdom. Held meetings about one week. Left there at noon on the train going south, for Brother Benjamin O. Cooke's, one hundred and eighty miles from Paris. Got to New Burnside at half past eight o'clock. Brother Cooke came after me in the morning and we went out to his house, a distance of twelve miles. Went with him to see his father and mother. Found Father Cooke quite feeble in health but strong in faith. I commenced meeting the next evening and held eleven days. During the meeting there were six immersed into the saving hope of Christ, four of them being Father Cooke's children. He is blessed with eleven grown children, and they are now all in the like precious faith. The dear father and mother are quite overjoyed. One was a daughter-in-law of Father Cooke. We had one of the best meetings I have enjoyed for many a day. May the Lord bless them and save them in his kingdom. The Brethren Cooke live between the Wabash, St. Louis, and Pacific R. R., and the Illinois Central R. R. They want me to say that if any of the brethren come that way and will call on them, they will meet them at New Burnside if they come on the W. St. L. & P. R. R., or if they come on the I. C. they will meet them at Marion, Williamson Co., Ill. They can leave the Central at Carbondale and come to Marion, New Burnside is in Johnson Co., Ill. The dear brethren remembered that it takes money to travel and some for our time. God bless them is my prayer. I am to return again in the spring if the Lord spares my life. Will report again soon.

J. S. HAVEN.

Paul.

He is really a preacher who took Jewish monotheism, engrafted on it those limitless energies which he recognized in the mediation of Christ, and inoculated an intensely spiritual, as well as an exactly practical morality. He is occasionally spoken of as an egotist. But he was really a man of great judgment and gentleness, of attractive manners, of immense activity,—one side of whose nature was occupied by an absorbing love of Christ; the other by a passionate longing to communicate the joys and hopes which he entertained as widely as possible throughout a suffering world.—Dean of Peterborough.

Luther.

Luther laid the ax at the root of the tree. He denied the Romish doctrine of a priesthood having in its hands the sacraments and other means of grace, keeping the door of people to its own ranks, and governing the laity by a divine commission. This is a clear intelligible position. Everybody could understand it. The cause of the reformation depended on no tenuous (small, minute) discriminations.—Scribner.

Let a sense of our mortality both mortify our pride and quicken us in our duty.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 7, 1883.

We have little room for editorial this week. Several communications are of necessity deferred. We even have to leave out our Youths' Column this week.

The first three days of February have been notable for severe storms in the west, and from telegraph news stormy weather extends over nearly the whole continent. Heavy snows, and cold sleety rains were extensively prevalent on these days and the results may be disastrous to stock in the west. It will be seen by our news items that heavy gales prevailed in parts of Europe at the same time. Has the periodicity theory anything to correspond to its prognostications?

News Items.

ZULULAND.

ULUNDI, January 31.—Cetewayo has been reinstated King of Zululand. About 5,000 Zulus were present at the ceremony. Many chiefs expressed great dissatisfaction at the conditions on which he was restored.

GERMANY.

In the floods of last autumn, the official returns show that in Prussia alone 130,000 persons were left homeless, 20,000 houses and 40,000 acres of land were ruined. But the more recent rains have been more violent, the floods greater, and the districts flooded extending along the entire Rhine from Switzerland to Holland. In Austria and Hungary, too, the damage done by the Danube has been almost unprecedented; and in France the loss by the rising streams has been immense.

The heaviest floods that have occurred in the British lake district for twenty years now prevail. Lake Derwentwater and Bassenthwaite now join, and a portion of Keswick is submerged.

Disastrous avalanches are reported in the mountains of Colorado, attended by serious loss of life and destruction of mining property.

A despatch from Alexandria says "Great anxiety is felt at Suakim, which is on an island in the Red Sea, respecting the condition of affairs in Soudan. The insurgents are reported to have burned a depot at Karkon. They strike the White Nile daily opposite Cawa."

Mr. [illegible] has returned to England from the Tigris-Euphrates Valley with ten or twelve thousand specimens, consisting of tablets, cylinders, and various other antiquities.

In the Hungarian Lower House, last week, Herr Jokay energetically advocated the placing of the Jews on complete equality with the adherents of other creeds. His remarks were greeted with cheers.

COLD WEATHER.

On January 23 the thermometer registered twenty-seven degrees below zero at Dubuque, Ia., the lowest point reached in that city, according to the record in the Signal Service Office, since Feb. 6, 1875.

At Winnepeg, Man., the temperature fell to forty-six degrees below zero; the lowest on record.

THE STORM.—FEB. 2.

A heavy gale prevails around the British coast today, and numerous casualties are reported. Two coasting vessels were wrecked on the Isle of Man and the crews were drowned.

The gunboat Red Wing attempted to reach the Island of Inishmurray, Ireland, with stores for the starving people, but heavy seas frustrated the effort.

The gale continued last night. Several districts are flooded.

A PEANUT GALE.

PARIS, Feb. 2. — There is a fearful gale here. Much damage has been done in the neighborhood. One person was killed by the fall of the scaffolding on the new city hall.

Conference Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a Quarterly Conference meeting of the Churches of God in Northern Indiana at Argos, Marshall Co., Indiana, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 16, and holding over Sunday the 18th following. Let our brethren come to this meeting, hoping and praying for the divine blessing to attend the effort of setting forth the truth of the Lord's soon coming, and of the ending of this age now so near. It may be the last Conference that may ever be held at Argos, Ocsillo times near their close. The Indianapolis, Peru, and Chicago Rail Road, and the Nickle Plate Rail Road cross each other at Argos.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Parties ordering books and tracts will please consult the latest issue of our paper, and order only what is advertised in that list. Works on hand a year ago may be exhausted now.

We publish the two following communications from Br. H. Heyes at his earnest request. We have never seen many numbers of the Christadelphian, but have formed a favorable opinion of the periodical, judging from these few numbers as samples of the many. The Investigator is one of our exchanges, and it, at least, by no means merits the reproachful epithet so bitterly applied to it. Dr. J. H. Thomas and W. G. Moncrieff have both written for THE RESTITUTION, and their communications have always been very instructive and, therefore, very acceptable. So far as THE RESTITUTION is concerned, we shall, in this instance, and in all others of similar nature, avoid retaliation. To us the doctrines and ordinances of the Gospel are superlatively precious, and as such we prize them above all price; yet these are means to an end. God has predestined that the heirs of salvation shall be conformed to the image of his Son. The moral resemblance is to be attained in this probationary life. One feature of this image is—"When he was reviled he reviled not again." We want no bitter carrying our strife in our heart, but pray for that wisdom which is from above which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated." With malice toward none, but with charity toward all concerned, we submit the letters to our readers, and our-self to him that judges righteously.

From "Christadelphian" of Jan. 1883.

Editor Restitution:

Under the caption "United States" in the Christadelphian of this month on page 35th I find as follows:

"Brother Gunn writes:—I had hoped that some of the brethren in America would have cautioned you long ago against Dr. J. H. Thomas, who certainly is not sound in doctrine, and is striving to hold a position in which he can do great damage to the truth—posing as a Christadelphian and fraternising with the vile RESTITUTION and the viler Investigator of Montreal.

[We are in a somewhat helpless position with regard to communications from the other side of the Atlantic. The platform of the Christadelphian (as the Americans phrase it) is well known: and when a man of education addresses himself to us fraternally, and encloses printed productions of his own apparently in [illegible] with the truth, we naturally [illegible] his advances are on the [illegible] mutual endorsement of the [illegible] sometimes turns [illegible] this we are mistaken. The [illegible]dy is for brethren on the [illegible]erican side (as everywhere else) to use their discrimination when any one approaches them in the name of the truth, and act on John's recommendation to "Try the spirits whether they are of God."—Editor.]

"You have, Bro. C., in the foregoing a correct copy of Wm. Gunn's words, and of R. Roberts's remarks thereon. According to W. G., THE RESTITUTION is "vile"; and the Investigator "vilor." And the editor says not a word against the application of the epithets. Dr. J. H. Thomas, I presume, feels able to speak for himself. With him and Bro. Moncrieff I am personally unacquainted: and a copy of the Investigator I never saw. Extracts from it I have now and then seen, and judging of the periodical by the extracts, I should not be afraid of placing the magazine in the hands of the best person to be found. Indeed those most likely to be pleased with it would be the "pure in heart"—so I think. But I leave Bro. Moncrieff to consider about the propriety of the word of five letters before Investigator. God grant his grace not to err in the matter!

With the editor of THE RESTITUTION vile, and with the paper itself, I have been for years acquainted. If the editor of the Christadelphian never sees THE RESTITUTION he may claim excuse for the appearance of the word vile. Wm. Gunn, I presume, has seen the papers—but whether the man speaks from his own knowledge of it, or from hearsay, I know not. But I challenge Wm. Gunn and the editor of the Christadelphian to justify on Christian grounds the appearance of the word vile before RESTITUTION. Point to a single number of the papers—point to a single article that ever appeared in THE RESTITUTION meriting the epithet "vile," if you can. Is it agreeable thus to note a railing word in a publication which myself and wife highly value; a publication containing much that every lover of truth would value? No! Sad it is that the editor allowed the insertion of the note which disgraces the magazine. Perhaps, however, he may view it duty to apologize for the appearance of the two adjectives.

Now, Bro. C., I am not about to return railing for railing. I have not so learned Christ. Plain truth, however, is not raillery. I have said before that I valued the Christadelphian. I do value it. In reference to the Sermon on the Mount, it has, I believe, been more faithful than any of our British or American magazines or papers that I am acquainted with. I must beware of injustice: so I commend the Christadelphian much in its straight forwardness in boldly declaring the duty of professors in matters which other organs are almost silent about. Its rebuke of connection with Freemasonry, etc., has my hearty concurrence. Association with secret orders, I hold, with the editor, to be manifestly incompatible with genuine Christianity; and I might say more in approval of the serial.

But to Wm. Gunn I deem it in place to say that before proclaiming THE RESTITUTION and Investigator "vile," wise would it have been to have looked at home. The people, exclusively, are, in W. G.'s view, the Christadelphians, all others being outside the fold. Here is the avowal, are the fruits consistent therewith? When a woman in America whose husband was a "Thomasite" (so she called him) told me this and that about those he communed with, I hesitated assent to what she said, thinking she was vexed. Now, however, I view the woman more truthful. Since then, my acquaintance with Christadelphians has much extended. Persons represented by the Birmingham organ, by the Ensign, and by no periodical, I have conversed with familiarly, and have had sufficient opportunity to know some by their fruits. And stern facts justify me in saying, that, reflecting on Christian characteristics, I cannot view more than one in ten, true disciples.

When affliction has visited some of their own the shallowness (practically) of "brethren and sisters" has been disgracefully manifest. They lacked the spirit: so they could not show its fruits. And just in point here is a reason given in the Christadelphian of Jan. 1883, page 42, under the notice "Glasgow," of a brother leaving the ecclesia there, because they did not believe in possessing the Holy Spirit as possessed in the apostolic age. Now the Christadelphians say they are the true ones—a corresponding part with the church planted by Christ and his apostles. But certainly these modern ecclesiæ are essentially lacking by their own confession. The churches of 1800 years ago possessed the spirit:—the love of God was shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto them. Rom. v. 5. Deficiency of the spirit of Christ accounts for the dryness so evident among these Christadelphians. Much might I say concerning the spirit. Mere possession of knowledge without love is of no worth. "We have the truth," say some here and there, while one party keeps aloof from another because of dogmatic differences:—but with all your understanding of truth (and this is only partial) your worship, to be acceptable, must be in spirit and in truth.

Some Christadelphians may think on this wise:—We have made sacrifices; we have suffered: and after all the cost it would seem hard if we are not up to our claims. Should any so think they can be truly told that there are men and women, whom you look on as outsiders, now living, who can meet any one or number of you in telling about sacrifices, privations, poverty, hard-worn attire, cold, heat, exposure, persecutions, perils, etc., endured for conscience sake. If ye have suffered, others have borne probably more than yourselves. "Poor creatures!" ye may say—to this, to have suffered so much in vain." We may not, however be such objects of pity: the Judge will show in due time who are truly his own and who are not.

Wm. Gunn:—In reporting THE RESTITUTION vile, and the Investigator viler, thou includest contributors with editors. Myself is then (in thine eye) one of these "vile" creatures. By nature...so I am: but through God's grace I am clean. There are, alas! faulty ones—more of these than true ones—among those represented by THE RESTITUTION, the Investigator, and the Messenger. Our wisdom, and the wisdom of those represented by the Birmingham and Nottingham organs, is to truly know God for ourselves. "We know that we are of God," says John: and to be worthy of comparison with the first century Christians, we must enjoy personal communion with God. I conclude with counsel to all:—"examine yourselves; prove your own selves."

H. HEYES.

She is a Daily Christian.

What a testimony was this to give of a person by one who lived in the same house with the female thus spoken of! The two ate at one table, were each witnesses of each when morning called each to duties; the one a mother whose hands were full and whose heart was often sorely grieved at the unfeeling conduct of two of her daughters; the other her boarder, whose occupation as schoolmistress necessitated absence from Mrs. C. until evening. But their evenings were passed for each others company, and though there was no natural relation between the two, their mutual love was far more genuine than what exists in countless instances of the closest kindred. Privately to me did Mrs. C. tell of her boarder's excellence; and at another time Mr. C. spoke of her as a sister, worthy of the name. The writer also was acquainted with her enough to be convinced that the modestly clad, the self-denying schoolmistress had counted the cost when she avowed herself a disciple of Jesus. How much more telling is a living example of daily converse, daily deeds, a meek and quiet spirit under all circumstances, a constant demeanor as seeing the Invisible at all times: how much more telling we say, is such an example from day to day, month to month, than where we find dogmatic zeal without the evidence of a circumspect course. How vain to ensconce ourselves with tenets, when promises are broken, and personal integrity otherwise is lacking!

A new generation has sprung up since the time of my knowledge of the devout schoolmistress. Yet fresh in memory are matters then existing and developing among the Adventists in Connecticut. Divisions, disputes, jealousies, contentions — such prevailed, rather than fruits of the Spirit. With sadness did some, who reflected on the precepts of Christ and the apostles, look on the differences and estrangements caused by the discord: such was it that an infidel editor in Hartford remarked to me that he knew of no people among whom there was antagonism as much as within the Adventists. All the contention, however, was not wrong. The opposition to the Bible truth of promised future good to Judah and Israel, the absurb conceit of "conditional prophecy," the persistent setting forth of the view of the expiration of the thousand years of Rev. 20th—such were errors not to be allowed to be published orally and in print, without protest and refutation. And the few who gave time, money and labor to the defence of the literal fulfilment of prophecy, and the disproof of the post-Millennial notion, never, I opine, regretted their efforts.

How some men, lovers of pre-eminence and notoriety, will hold on to views, spite of plain evidence [illegible] [illegible] "seeks his w[illegible] rarity another in peculiarity; such in dollars. "Crucifixion," said George Storrs, "is a hard death," the truth of which saying none will gainsay; and until men, claiming to be servants of God, overcome self, mischief will attend and follow them.

I will here tell what was as I narrate: About 32 years ago, when returning from camp meeting, I met in Providence, R. I., with a prominent "thousand years past" lecturer in company with an Advent preacher whom I much esteemed, along with one or more individuals. The contender for the past Millennium declared that the tabernacle of David was rebuilt at Christ's first advent. I immediately denied this. "Was not David a prophet?" the man asked. Yes, I replied. "Was not David a king?" I again said, Yes. "Was not David a priest?" No, I answered. "David not a priest," he exclaimed, "my eldest boy knows he was." David, said I, could not be a priest, for he was of the tribe of Judah, and until Jesus came who was made a High Priest after the order of Melchizedek, none but of the tribe of Levi could be priests in Israel. (Here is the gist, perhaps, not the exact words I said). The Advent preacher and the rest were dumb: but during the day the preacher remarked that never did he see J. T. taken so before; and even among his sympathizers in Hartford he met with scant assent to his assertion, "David a priest." Some time after the talk in Hartford about the colloquy, I asked J. T. to own his error. In effect, however, he would not own he was: "Never," he said, "will I yield the point!"

After this interview I felt I had done with the man. In a few years it was evident that his course was downwards, and ere long his melancholy end came. I have related what I know myself, and hearing that he told an Advent sister that he would rather be first in a city than second in the kingdom, I was prepared to view the unhappy utterance rather true than otherwise. Uneasy creatures are these of the Diotrephes class! What stripes are in store for them! Matt. xviii, 6.

We began this piece with a view to show the excellence of practical Christianity; but not to underrate points of faith. Though knowledge without love is profitless unto salvation, let us never cease enriching ourselves more and more with the treasures of revealed truth. There is always advance for us; and in these evil days we require the whole armor, and all the strength and light we can obtain. So making progress in divine knowledge let us take good heed to glorify our Father with good works. Scripture on Scripture might be quoted—incitements to practical duties. True as James was endowed with the Holy Spirit, is his description of pure and undefiled religion true to the letter—let us not be lacking here—which also we might say when many other portions of both Old and New Testaments are presented to view. Among the many, look at two just now: Heb. x. 24; and xii. 15.

Simplicity in organization, with the open Bible as our creed, is our wisdom in respect to union as bodies here and there. However this or that creed of man's forming may command admiration because it comprises truths elaborately extracted from the Scriptures, there is no warrant for any body of men demanding assent to each point in such creed as an indispensability to communion. We challenge proof of any creed being indisputably correct and complete. The Christadelphians profess to see clearly. But the reader is particularly asked to mark what the writer is about to say, which will show that the Christadelphians are not clear in understanding a matter prominent in the Apocalypse. Here it is:

The Christadelphians declare that the Papacy is the Anti-christ of the Apocalypse, and that the 1260 days (years, as they say they signify), are all in the past. This persecuting power is "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Rev. xvii. 6. Centuries past after the apostolic age before these years began, and generations have gone since the ending of these 1260 years. Now the Christadelphians avow themselves the only true body of believers existent on earth since the apostolic age. But within these 1260 years, martyrs of Jesus were slain; a few? Nay! multitudes. And these (2 Tim. ii. 12) having suffered with Christ will also reign with him. Rev. xx. 4-6. So whatever doubt may be about any in this century being participants in the glory and honor in reserve for the overcomers, we have the assurance that the martyrs spoken of in the Apocalypse will be kings and priests in the coming age. And if the Christadelphians are right in their view of the 1260 days ("years") being in the past, they are egregiously wrong in viewing themselves the only true heirs [illegible] kingdom since the [illegible] they are wrong certainly; for if [illegible] 1260 "years" are past, a grand multitude of sons of God, slain during that period, will be crowned on the resurrection morning—a multitude, brethren of Jesus, who were faithful to death during ages intervening between the first and nineteenth centuries—otherwise the 1260 days are future, which view the Christadelphians declare to be erroneous.

So, reader, the Christadelphians are not quite clear-sighted. Beware of leaning on men individually or collectively. Our wisdom and the wisdom of those represented by the Birmingham and Nottingham organs, is to see that we truly know God for ourselves. "We know that we are of God," says John, and to be worthy of comparison with the first century Christians, we must enjoy personal communion with God. On this matter a body of Scriptures might be quoted. The true heir of God—the joint heir with Christ—knows God for himself or herself. On this important point, however, we cut short now; but (D. V.) we may say more upon it before long. Among the Scriptures on individuality, look at Gal. vi. 5; Eph. iv. 7. The saint enjoys the earnest of the Spirit; and though in heaviness at times, he (or she) at other times knows the unspeakable joy Peter tells of and there is not the uncertainty about acceptance in Christ's presence that some talk about.

It is gratifying here to quote something excellent from R. Asheroft's narrative of his American journey, from the Christadelphian of Jan. 1883: "The brethren in Guelph exhibit a high standard of acquaintance with the Scriptures, and are apparently wishful to apply them in their personal purification and preparation for Christ. This, indeed is most important of all, for of what avail is it though we understand all mysteries and all knowledge, if we neglect to become transformed by the renewing of our minds, and fail to rid ourselves of those characteristics which appertain to us as mere natural men and women?" These are timely words, reminding me of what Dr. Thomas said in private conversation at the time he was delivering lectures in Hartford, Conn., about thirty years since. Much had been earnestly discussed concerning baptism, and faith in the kingdom. The Doctor's talent and Biblical knowledge impressed those present. "But," said the Doctor [illegible] does all this avail us unless it [illegible] us, and in these evil days we require [illegible] as little children?" As [illegible] to Count Tellmer (Villa Aday. The [illegible] quainted as I am with sequences during years following his presence in Hartford, I think myself justified in saying that better would it have been for him and others, had John Thomas been more like another John who wrote and preached 1800 years ago.

Now for something else from B. Asheroft's narrative, appearing in the Christadelphian, Dec., 1882. Giving account of a meeting in Wauconda, he says: "Brother Dr. Reeves well spoke of the gathering as a 'holy convocation,' and in a forcible and able address drew our attention to the type of the waving of the sheaf of first-fruits under the Mosaic law, and also to the two wave-loaves—representative of those who first at Christ's coming and secondly at the end—have been moulded and leavened by the power of righteousness and truth." We will here imitate Dr. Reeves in taking "loaf" as a figure. One loaf, according to the Doctor and B. Asheroft, represents the first century Christians; the other loaf the nineteenth century Christians, "us Christadelphians." Is this latter loaf a counterpart? For, mark! the loaves were alike. Oh! Dr. H. and B. A., ye lack clear-sightedness here. Ye Christadelphians! Ye like the Hebrew and Gentile Christians of the apostolic age? Read carefully and ponder deeply what is said of these in the book of Acts; in Paul's letters of which we will name those to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and Thessalonians. Ye like such? Not ye indeed! Besides, where are the gifts? Your talk about "no gifts in this age" will not avail you here, for the loaves were alike! No difference in any respect! Lev. xxiii. 17. Compare yourselves faithfully with the churches planted by Paul and the other apostles and you will find that they possessed what you don't possess: gifts, and an exhibition of fruits of righteousness which are by Christ Jesus (Phil. i. 11) which ye fail in exhibiting. Purge out the old leaven!

But let us farther use the figure of a "loaf" in representing Christians. A much bigger loaf, prepared during the 1260 days ("years"—which the Christadelphians say are past) than those of the first and nineteenth centuries together will appear before Christ when he rewards his own!

Oh! reader; while the writer admits there are true seed among the Christadelphians, there are true seed also elsewhere. Even in knowledge, which [illegible] "puffeth up," they are yet [illegible] otherwise imperfect [illegible] trust not in man. Not [illegible] attainments in knowledge are men and women known to be Christians: by their fruits are they known. Reader! I will close by asking thee to read over and over again, as Paul's words to the Ephesians, in chapter 3, verses 14 to end.

Brevities.

Carthage, in the days of its power, covered a district twenty-three miles in circuit, and contained 1,000,000 inhabitants. It drew tribute from 300 Libyan cities, and was at one time the richest city in the world.

The last trial for witchcraft in Belgium took place in 1815, and in 1840 the people of Bois, near Dantzic, beat an old woman to death because she proved herself a sorceress by rising twice when they plunged her into the sea.

Engraved wooden blocks for printing books, the mariner's compass and rockets, the use of movable types and the prototype of the printing press, were all known in China in the tenth century. Pi Sheng is the name of the man who invented a mode of making impressions with separate characters five centuries before anything of the kind was done in Europe.

ITALY.

The tenants of a certain estate refused to pay some extraordinary taxes that had been levied, whereupon execution was issued against the property, with due notice to the owner, who happened to be the Pope! The notice, which was in the usual legal form, reads: "To Citizen Joachim Pucci, by trade or profession, Pope; conducting business (also residing) at the Vatican Palace, Rome." The taxes were promptly paid, and a receipt given to "Citizen Joachim Pucci."

DISCOVERIES NEAR ROME.

Excavations for a new fortress on the River Tiber have unearthed remains of what is supposed to be the old Latin city of Antemnæ, whose history antedates the foundation of Rome by Romulus. Its site, which has never been a matter of dispute, is upon the summit of a lofty hill rising abruptly from the valleys of the Anio and the Tiber at their junction, between the second and the third milestones of the Via Salaria, in the ground formerly belonging to King Victor Emmanuel and now to Count Tellmer (Villa Aday. The remains so far discovered are portions of the old city wall, with fragments of Etruscan black iridated ware, and of local pottery made by hand and baked in the sun.

The principal discoveries resulting from the visit of the Princes to the Mosque of Hebron are enumerated as follow: 1. The finding of a new entrance, said to lead to the eastern cave. 2. The description of the antechamber and the fact of a door leading into the cave. 3. The description of the cenotaph of Joseph for the first time and the exploration of a passage leading thereto. 4. The exploration of the various chambers adjoining the court-yard, which have never been correctly drawn on former plans. All that now remains is to obtain access to the cave itself. This is never visited even by Moslems, and probably has not been entered during the past seven hundred years, at least. Access might be gained either by opening one of the two entrances now identified or possibly by removing the stone, a shaft, and lowering a ladder into the antechamber. The latter would be the easiest way, but either would be regarded by the Moslems with extreme feeling.

To the Brotherhood Scattered Abroad.

As it always has been so it is now. Some profess godliness for gain. By their fruits shall ye know them, is still the true test. If there come unto you one whose initials are T. W. D., be not deceived, though he have a recommend from the Conference of the State of Indiana. I know whereof I speak.

Subscribers will please take notice that in remitting to us all orders should be sent direct to THE RESTITUTION, at Plymouth, Ind. Avoid all "Subscription News Agencies," as we give them no commissions. It cannot benefit you to send through them, but will necessarily make a delay of some days in filling your order. Remittances may be made either by draft, money order, or registered letter, at our risk. Do not send personal checks, as it often costs us twenty-five or thirty cents to cash them, besides a delay of several days. Do not send postage stamps unless it is unavoidable, in which case procure one cent or [illegible]. Our friends in Canada will please remember that Canadian postage [illegible] no value whatever to us.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $300. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

TRUSTING.

I do not ask the God will always make
My pathway light;
I only pray that he will hold my hand
Throughout the night.

I do not hope to have the thorns removed
That pierce my feet;
I only ask to find his blessed arms
My safe retreat.

If he afficts me, then in my distress
Withholds his hand;
If all his wisdom I cannot conceive
Or understand—

I do not think to always know his why
Or wherefore, here;
But sometime he will take me, hand and make
His meaning clear.

If in his furnace he refines my heart,
To make it pure;
I only ask for grace to trust his love—
Strength to endure;

And if fierce storms beat round me,
And the heavens be overcast,
I know that he will give his weary one
Sweet peace at last.

STUDIES IN "KEY-WORDS."

In my work entitled "Key-Words," the plain English reader may obtain a clear view and correct analysis of that important Hebrew term, sheol. Throwing aside the traditionary speculations of human Commentaries and Lexicons, let us take the sure way, and gather the Scriptural meaning of that word from the Scriptural use of it. Any meaning attached to it which has no precedent in Scripture, must, of course, be rejected as contrary to sound doctrine. Turning then to the word "sheol," on page 103 of "Key-Words," we find that in the common version it is rendered "grave" thirty-one times, "hell" thirty-one times, "pit" three times. We find that the righteous are spoken of as going into sheol, yea, as even praying to go there. Thus the holy patriarch Jacob, at his first occurrence in the Bible, says, "I will go down into sheol unto my son mourning." Gen. xxxvii. 35. Again he says, "Thou shalt ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to sheol." Gen. xlii. 38. And the patient Job, "perfect and upright" (Job i. 1), says, "If I wait sheol is my house." Job xvii. 13. He prayed, "O that thou wouldest hide me in sheol." Job xiv. 13.

We find that the wicked also go to sheol. "They spent their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to sheol." [illegible] wicked shall be [illegible] into sheol."

We find that sheol swallows up the whole individual, "soul and body," for Korah and his company "went down alive into sheol." Num. xvi. 33. And of the wicked it is said, "Let them go down quick (i. e. alive) into sheol." Psa. lv. 15. In prospect of a resurrection the Psalmist says, "Thou wilt redeem my soul from the power of sheol, for thou wilt receive me." Psa. xlix. 15. (This reception is at the advent, "I will come again, and receive you to myself." John xiv. 3.) And in predicting the Savior's resurrection it was said that his soul would not be left in sheol. Psa. xvi. 10.

We find that sheol is not up but down, as indicated by such expressions as "dig into sheol," "go down into sheol," etc. Never do we read in Scripture of going up to sheol. We sometimes find sheol used figuratively—as in Isa. xiv. 9,—but this, as with other words, does not at all set aside the literal meaning.

As to the condition of those in sheol, we find that even the righteous, while there, cannot thank or praise the Lord. "In sheol who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. vi. 5. "Sheol cannot praise thee" (Isa. xxxviii. 18), that is, those in sheol cannot praise thee. (This is a metonomy by which the container is put for the contained, as where we say, "The kettle boils," meaning not the metal itself, but the water in it boils.) And, to set the question of consciousness or unconsciousness perfectly at rest, we find it testified that "There is NO work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol whither thou goest." This is addressed to every reader, indiscriminately, as indicated by the pronoun "thou," and shows that all go to sheol. Eccles. ix. 10.

From the above brief but comprehensive analysis, we derive the following conclusions as to the literal meaning and use of sheol in the Holy Scriptures.

1. It is not a state of torment, for the righteous go into it.

2. It is not a state of happiness, for the unrighteous dead go into it.

3. As those in sheol are neither tormented nor happy, they must be unconscious; for the Scriptures expressly affirm that "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol," and that "The dead know not anything." Eccles. ix. 5, 10.

4. Taken literally, sheol denotes the state of unconsciousness in which "both soul and body" of "the just and the unjust" remain between death and the resurrection. In some occurrences of the term it seems to have special reference to "the second death," or the state of non-existence into which the consuming wrath of God will ultimately reduce the wicked after the resurrection.

In the quotations here made from the common version I have dropped the words "grave," "hell," and "pit," and in their stead have retained, in its untranslated form the Hebrew term "sheol," thus endeavoring to place the English reader, while studying this term, on the very same vantage-ground as that enjoyed by the ancient Hebrew Christian who never saw an English version, with its varied and mystifying ways of rendering this term,—using three words where the inspired writers have used but one.

The Greek term corresponding to sheol, is hadees, which the late revisers have left untranslated in the New Testament; and, to be consistent, they should leave sheol untranslated in the Old.

Another Hebrew word frequently rendered "grave," is keber, which often occurs in the plural, and admits of the possessive pronouns, as his grave, my grave. But sheol never occurs in the plural, nor does it admit of the possessive pronouns; it being the death-state in general, and not to be appropriated to any individual. I therefore think that when we say "the grave," meaning thereby the death-state, in this general sense, we express, perhaps as nearly as possible in English, the meaning of sheol. However wide-spread or popular the delusion that it means a vast fiery prison of endless torture, the texts containing it in Scripture, if carefully and candidly studied, show that it cannot have any such meaning.

TIME, NUMBER AND RHYTHM.

In my last paper I showed the co-incidence and co-ordination of God's cosmos of works with man's cosmos of faith in their legal relation to their mutual essential factors, number, time and rhythm. It will be my purpose, in this paper, beginning with this point of co-incidence appropriately expressed by the numerically symbolic 10th day of atonement, therefrom as a point of departure to develop and show the co-ordination of the two cosmoi.

The co-incidence then of the [illegible] cosmoi resulting in the first [illegible] eighth or full chord, having been [illegible] to be appropriately denoted so [illegible] number is concerned by the harmonic conjunction of the numerical exponents of God's purpose and man's purpose as indicated by the numerical beginning of each of the two individual series, thrown into a new relation according to the law of time, number and rhythm and expressed by the new numerical result of this co-incidence thus established, namely, by the numerical symbol 10, we would expect the first exponent of the new idea which man's purpose obtains in this new conjunctive relation, to be numerically expressed by the number 1. The first positive step, therefore, for man in his new relation of value would properly be expressed by 11 or by a 1, in a ratio of value to another 1 of 1 to 10, the second step by 12 or 2 in a similar ratio to 1, and so on until the nine digits have been exhausted, when we begin again, doubling the prime factor of the 1st series in the ratio and so on, every new series glorifying the prime factor which represents God's individual one purpose, while every factor in the series representing man's individual purpose in its new relation to God's purpose diminishes in value according to a one-fold ratio of positive value in relation to its own prime factor, or the right hand of the prime factor of God's expressed purpose.

Then man's purpose separated from God's purpose numerically expressed equals 0 in value. Brought into a harmonic conjunction with God's purpose it is in and of itself still 0, but we find it has received a significant value because of its position. The first and highest positive value moreover of man in this new conjunctive series we find numerically expressed in the unit of the new series at the right hand of the unit of the old series. But the unit of the old series expresses God personally and the unit of the new series expresses Christ personally. Therefore if the co-ordination of these two units be harmonic, the co-ordination of the persons which they represent must be harmonic, and the laws of their related harmony must be identical with those of their related units as expressed in this new numerical relation. Moreover as the unit of the new series receives its value by its relation to the unit of the old series, so every other unit in the new series receives its proportionate value through its relation to its own prime factor or unit. Therefore a harmonic relation established between these two prime factors demands a similar harmonic relation between these two prime factors and all the units or persons so related to these two prime factors. Again, the glory of the one in either series, numerically considered, consists in the fact that there can be no other numerical expression which does not contain and repeat it as an essential factor.

Therefore in these two series which numerically represent God and man, there are two prime factors, representing two persons, of the one the first an individual God, and of the other the first an individual man Christ, which in this new relation become essential factors of every other individual man, thus establishing a co-ordinate relation between all these several individuals or persons as expressed by God and man at his right hand. Now a co-ordination of persons demands essential likeness but rejects identity. Christ and all who are Christ's must be essentially like God, but neither can be essentially God himself. But what are some of the essential factors of person? Individual life, individual intelligence and an individual will are to direct this intelligence. [illegible] they not?

Then all these persons [illegible] in this new harmonic relation will possess a co-ordinate life, intelligence and will, and the controlling life, intelligence and will must be found in the prime, essential factor of them all, or as we have shown, none of these individuals being in and of themselves anything, their prime factor, God, must of necessity, when intrinsic value is accounted, be considered "all and in all." And likewise if the second series be accounted by itself, Christ, its prime factor in the same sense must be seen to be its "all and in all" to the glory of his prime factor God, the Father. If therefore all these persons have a co-ordinate life, intelligence and will, we can now better understand why and in what sense John in his 1st General Epistle, 1st chap. 3d verse, calls this co-ordination a κοινωνια or partnership, and elsewhere all who have part in it κοινωνοι or partners, and why we all partake of the symbolic emblem of this divine partnership instead of "communing" with them.

So much for the persons who stand related to these two cosmoi. I have endeavored to show how "the captain of our salvation" ipso facto by the very position which he occupies becomes [illegible] in a sense "the author of our [illegible] and I now propose [illegible] that he in the same sense becomes an author of a new heavens and a new earth. To understand this it will be necessary for us to analyze for a moment the term we have used, namely, "author." We use this word very loosely in English. For instance we speak of God as the author of this creation in which we live, when we mean the Creator. We speak also of a certain man being the author of a book when we mean that he is the composer of the thoughts as expressed and arranged in it. We do not mean that he created it in the sense in which God created. Now the Greek is not equally ambiguous in its use of terms, and the Scriptures are not ambiguous in their general teaching on the fact first of God being one personal God, and second, that he is the Creator of all things in the sense of an absolute first cause, and this idea as nearly as it can be expressed to the finite conception by one simple appellative is αρχων a verbal noun from αρχω to make or create. The word translated author and used above is αρχων primarily a leader, then because a leader is commonly a chief it comes to mean any sort of a chief like a "captain" and is so translated in the other passage referred to. Then because an author is supposed to be a leader in the particular line of thought which his authorship expresses, the same word is sometimes used to mean an author. Also meaning a ruler, and αρχη a rule are also both relative, not absolute terms, and all three of them denote pre-eminence or priority, or precedence in relation to a series, not in a relation to any and all series. Now these three words are the terms of strongest creative import applied to Christ either in the Old or New Covenant Scriptures.

I think therefore when the author of Hebrews speaks of "the works having been come to pass since the foundation of the cosmos" he understands and intends to make a distinction between works which can only be referred to an absolute first cause and anything short of this. Now in the passage above referred to, Christ is called "the author and finisher of our faith." But the very word "faith" of which he is said to be the author and finisher implies a belief in and a reliance upon a personal cause anterior to and pre-eminent above the one who has and exemplifies it. Again the term "captain" in the other passage referred to above, namely, "the captain of our salvation," carries with it the idea of a leadership subject to another leadership pre-eminently above it. And so of αρχη and αρχη. Their relation must always be defined to be specific, and we find God by the mouth of David defining himself as ο αρχων των αρχοντων. The Ruler of rulers, and in the Apocalypse of John we find Christ defining himself as ο αρχη της κτισεως του Θεου "the head of the creation of the God," and the word for creation used here means his intelligent creation. Now bearing in mind another teaching of Christ's, that faith such as a grain of mustard seed exemplifies, will cause mountains to change their places or to be removed and cast into the sea, which certainly teaches that in faith resides an ability at least to control the laws of the inanimate creation, and putting this thought in immediate relation to the thought expressed above that Christ is the head of God's intelligent creation, do we not see that without becoming a creator in the sense of a first cause he may become "the founder of a new earth" and the author of "a moon and stars, the works of thy fingers?" The language of the Psalm is, "thou wilt change them and they will have been changed." Why? "because they all will have waxed old as a garment, and as it were an outer garment."

What does the process of changing garments used as a figure here imply? That the creation whose garments are thus changed is being destroyed? Far from it. Do I destroy myself when I change my garments? Is authorship in fact, in a finite sense, ever anything more than an old thought in a new dress? Is the Messiahship in fact anything more than the final assertion in a cosmos of faith of the Lordship over this his creation of the heavens and the earth which God originally gave to the Adamic man? If not then I have demonstrated as I undertook to that this cosmos of God and this cosmos of faith in which we live, are co-ordinate according to a law of time, number and rhythm, both as to their respective personal prime factors or heads and all other persons in them, in their several harmonic relations to one another; and moreover in the relation which these two persons, God and Christ, sustain as authors of their respective cosmoi both to one another and to these two cosmoi, whether considered in the light of animate or inanimate creations. And as a further illustration of my thought, this body of ours with its [illegible] upon which I have been enlarging. The body with all its harmony of parts will represents God's old cosmos of created works, and the regenerated life within will represents Christ's new cosmos of faith. Now Paul says of this state, "not that we would be unclothed, but have our clothing clothed upon" and if I understand the Scriptures, the same changing process which finally in faith makes one new man out of the regenerated life and its old body will make one new cosmos of beauty and harmony out of God's old cosmos of works and Christ's new cosmos of faith, whether we think of them in their relation animate or inanimate.

To review my general argument thus far:

1st premise. That any cosmos is and must be an arrangement according to law, and that any such arrangement from the very nature of things demands three essential factors, namely, time, number and rhythm.

2. That God's cosmos is a cosmos of works and ways.

3. That Christ's cosmos must necessarily also be a cosmos of works and ways.

4. That they cannot be identical as proved from the Scriptures themselves.

5. That Christ's cosmos must be a cosmos of faith, since his work is a work of faith as proved also from the Scriptures themselves.

6. That these two cosmoi are as inseparably related to each other as the organic body and its life.

7. That any two or more cosmoi related to each other must be related to each other according to the law or laws of their essential factors, time, number and rhythm.

8. In the use of the Levitical numerical typical tenth day of atonement and its significant teaching on essential co-incidence of the two cosmoi above according to the general teaching of the Scriptures themselves, as well as according to the laws of time, number and rhythm. Co-ordination of all the several parts follows as an axiomatic corollary.

9. This co-ordination shown both as to persons and things pertaining to the two cosmoi.

10. Deductions drawn therefrom as to the personal prime factors, God and Christ, in their positional or official relations severally to their respective cosmoi as authors or creators, and these deductions supported by quotations from the general and specific teachings of the Scriptures.

11. Illustrations of the whole argument by reference to the indisputable fact of a co-ordination begun in each individual regenerate person between the spirit newly regenerated in faith and its old Adamic life, a co-ordination that must go on in each individual case until its mortal is swallowed up of life, and we shall have been changed, a change which is designated in the Scriptures as the completed state.

Remember that regeneration begins with the life and that we await the redemption of our bodies, and that the co-ordination begun in regeneration is completed only when the body shall have been redeemed. Remember that Christ is "the first-born of many brethren" and that it would be just as reasonable to imagine a birth according to the flesh without a body, as one according to the spirit, and moreover remember Paul's specific instruction on this point, 1 Cor. xv. 44, "If there is a physical body there is also a spiritual body. It is sown a physical body, it is awakened to life a spiritual body."

"But not first the spiritual, but the physical; after that the spiritual."

"The first man was from earth, of earth's dust; the second man the Lord from heaven."

Again remember Paul's specific statement on the other point, namely, the final co-ordination of all the animate creation. Romans 8th chapter:

"For the earnest expectation of the animate creation awaiteth the revelation of the Sons of God. For we know that all the animate creation sigheth and suffereth along with them until now. And not only it, but we ourselves who have the first-fruits of the spirit, we ourselves sigh within ourselves awaiting sonship, namely the redemption of our body."

Conference Report.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, met according to previous appointment at Hesperia in the Weaver Hall. Elder B. W. Woodward was there and held meetings two evenings previous to the beginning of the Conference. We are glad to report an increasing interest in the truth at Hesperia. The brethren are alive, and heart and hand in the work. The ministers present were, Elders Burtonshon, Hoyt, Kendall and Woodward. A spirit of Christian unity pervaded the meetings and as Brother Hoyt expressed it, it was the best conference ever held in Michigan.

On Friday when the stage arrived from White Cloud, all were anxiously waiting and wondering who were among the occupants that had "come up to help" push the car of truth along. As the driver, Mr. J. Carlisle (who, by the way, is one of those thoughtful, large-hearted many) halted with the ominous wheat the genial faces of Elders Hoyt and Kendall, Brother and Sister Cott of Allegan Co., and Brother Lemon of Yiskauing, appeared at the door. We all rejoiced greatly at their coming, and as the evening drew near, those who were interested in the meetings went up to the hall, and Dr. Kendall spoke to a full house from Psa. cxii. 8. Saturday morning Elder Hoyt gave us one of his good sermons from Rom. vi. 23. At 2 p. m. a sermon by M. A. Austin, text 1 Cor. xv. 58, after which we had the best conference meeting of the week. In the evening Dr. Kendall delivered a very able lecture on the "Authenticity of the Scripture."

Sunday morning had conference meeting at 9 o'clock. At 10:30 a sermon by Elder Hoyt. At 2 p. m. Dr. Kendall again addressed a full house from Heb. iv. 9. After the sermon the Lord's supper was administered. In the evening Elder Woodward preached from John xiv. 14; subject, "Resurrection," followed by Elder Kendall. This was the most interesting meeting of the week. Elder Burtonshon was present at each service and assisted in opening and closing, also in very appropriate remarks. Sunday evening closed the Conference session. During the next week Elders Burtonshon and Woodward hold meetings until Friday evening. The interest continued more than usual all through the week. Elder Woodward is doing a noble work, and very many this winter are ready to rise and call him blessed for the truth he has so plainly preached to them that they could not pass it by, but have accepted it with joyful hearts even though opposition, hatred and loss of friends have been among the trials they have had to pass through to gain the truth. Brother Daniel Weaver kindly furnished his hall, with organ, stove, chandeliers and everything for comfort, for the sake of having the gospel preached to them, and the brethren and sisters of Hesperia appreciate his generosity. May the Lord bless and keep them in the bonds of peace and unity is our prayer.

CHRIST'S MISSION.

I give unto them eternal life.—John x. 28.

The Bible contains the only authentic account of God's dealings with the earlier races of the world. It gives the first intimation of his plan of salvation by providing a Redeemer, in his promise to Abraham, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

The minute directions God gave the Jews regarding their worship reveals more fully his plan. In all its ceremonies there was a foreshadowing of the perfect sacrifice which should give complete atonement for sin. The New Testament alone testifies how that long ago promise was kept and how the law was fulfilled.

John the Baptist, as the herald of the Savior, proclaimed that Christ was the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world." His own declaration was "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." What Christ's mission was, what truths he taught are vital questions for all to understand. The Savior said: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Taking the Old Testament with its rites and symbols always pointing to the future; and the New with its announcement of the birth of a Savior, and its record of his work and teachings and his own declaration, "I have finished the work," each one must there learn for himself the truth, with God for his teacher. "Only be never weary of learning, for God is never weary of teaching."

The accepted mission of Christ, accepted by Christendom, was to save sinners by offering himself as an atonement. Isaiah prophesied that he should bear our sins in his own body on the tree. Paul said "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many."

But was it only to offer sacrifice for sin that he took "upon himself the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of man?" Great as was the work of offering atonement was there not a greater work to be accomplished and upon which the successful issue of all, offerings and sacrifices depended? This mission [illegible] cost of death, was the [illegible] of Christ. He [illegible] he could win [illegible] nal life. Theology teach[illegible]al life means eternal hap[illegible]eternal death means eternal [illegible]. The Bible teaches, "I give unto them eternal life. He that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live." St. Paul's words are, "To them, who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life." Can any one explain why this apostle, taught by the Spirit, should urge those who believe in Christ to seek for immortality, when they were by nature immortal? Why did he declare that "Christ came to bring life and immortality to light in the gospel," if all men were immortal without Christ?

Laying aside the teachings and traditions of men, and with the Bible only as a guide, is not this truth taught, that Christ's great work was by dying himself to take the sting from death, and open the tomb for his followers to pass out to immortality and God? "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, can die no more, and are the children of God; being the children of the resurrection," said the Savior to the Sadducees.

Paul wrote, "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Lord." In another place he declared, "He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap everlasting." What meaning have these declarations, if every soul just or unjust is by nature immortal? Why these promises of life eternal, life everlasting to immortal souls? The invitation of the spirit and the bride is "Come whosoever will, and take of the waters of life freely." How empty and meaningless are these words to undying men, but to mortal beings under sentence of death what "good tidings of great joy."

In vain one searches the Scriptures for proof of the doctrine of inherent immortality. Long after the early apostles were dead it was engrafted on the creed of the church, and which, like many other articles of faith which reason and science rejects, the orthodox church still holds. Science is opening up new fields of thought, knowledge is steadily increasing, why should not the brighter light of these latter days reveal the truths of the Bible more clearly?

Christ said to his disciples, in parting, "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself." He did not say when you die you shall come to me in glory, but I will come and receive you unto myself, that is when he shall appear to raise the dead.

The promise made to the thief on the cross is thought to prove immortality by nature, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Christ was not in Paradise, that day. When he met Mary at the sepulchre he said, "I have not yet ascended to my Father," and that was the third day after his crucifixion. The prophet Hosea, speaking for the coming Redeemer, said; "O, death, I will be thy plague, O, grave, I will be thy destruction."

Paul the apostle of the crucified Savior answers, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" — St. Paul Globe.

SPEAK NOT EVIL.

BY DEBORA WINCH.

"Speak not evil one of another brethren."

"Speak not evil" God hath called you,
To his service and his love!
And he bids—let no root bitter,
You to evil speaking move.

If "the bitter root" you cherish,
It will poison every spring,
Of the glorious life within you,
Till it fall—a lifeless thing.

Bitter root by "thinking" groweth,
There the seed at first is sown,
If no evil imagined evil,
Never would it have been grown.

Have we tried, obeying fully,
The royal law of all the words?
Then we but sounding cymbals be,
In the pure eyes of the Lord:

Mark what comes from [illegible]
God's own plainly written rule,
"He who taketh up reproaches Cannot dwell in Holy Hill!"

JERUSALEM'S FUTURE TIME OF TROUBLE.

The persecution of the Jews within the last year or two has brought that despised people prominently before the nations, and caused a great deal to be said about them. Their history has passed under reviews, their present status discussed, and their probable future portrayed. Both the secular and religious press have engaged in the discussion, and many favor the project of their colonization in the land of their fathers. In connection with this view considerable attention is now being given to the Holy Land. For some years past there has been a growing interest taken in that country. The researches of travelers, the explorations of scientific antiquarians, and the recent survey of Western Palestine, under the sanction and auspices of the British government, have aroused public attention (especially the religious public) to the capabilities of the land, and to the desirability of its occupation by the descendants of its ancient inhabitants. The recent trouble in Egypt, and the protectorate which the English have been forced to assume over the Suez Canal and Egyptian affairs, will undoubtedly have an influence for good upon Palestine. Already colonies of Jews are settling in different localities of that country, and reports reach us from time to time of frequent arrivals of Jews from Russia and Germany. The bitter persecutions through which they are passing will drive thousands of them to their fatherland, and especially if they can have the protection of some great power. The indications at present are that the time is drawing near of which the Psalmist wrote: "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." Psa. cii. 13, 14.

The probabilities are that a large settlement of Jews in Palestine will take place in the near future. But this emigration and settlement must not be mistaken for the great restoration foretold in the Bible. That restoration will be effected by the hand of the Lord, when Judah and Israel will be gathered out of all nations, and form one nation and one kingdom upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall rule the united nation. Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22 [illegible]. The Jews are not yet ready for the righteous reign of their Messiah. Their hearts are as hard, and as full of hate as their father's were, when they crucified Jesus of Nazareth. They still despise and curse the Nazarenes. A great part of their sufferings in past centuries, and even today, have been inflicted by those who bear the Christian name, consequently they are embittered against Christianity and its founder. Let a large emigration of Jews settle in Palestine, and they will try to establish the Mosaic order of worship, and look for a Messiah after their own heart. With hearts full of hate for the Crucified One, they will become the easy dupes of some wily and ambitious pretender. Believing Jews have been warned against falling into this error. Jesus has said, "If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matt. xxiv. 23, 24. And again he said to the unbelieving Jews on another occasion: "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not, if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." John v. 43.

Daniel's prophecies point to a time when a certain prince shall come who shall confirm a covenant with many (Jews) for one week, but who will break faith with them causing the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of the week. This prince or king is described in another place as being mighty, crafty, ambitious, prosperous, professing peace, yet speaking great things, and assuming great power, and he shall destroy the mighty and the holy people. This king will presume to stand up against the Prince of princes, but he will be broken without hand, or human assistance. Dan. ix. 26, 27; viii. 23–26; xi. 45. Daniel was informed when this vision should be accomplished—when this crafty destroyer should arise, "Understand, O son of man; at the time of the end shall be the vision. . . . . Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be." Dan. viii. 17, 19.

These thoughts bring us now to Jerusalem's time of future trouble. She has passed through many great trials in her past history, but there is one more to come, described in these words: "And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." Dan. xii. 1. If what Jesus foretold in Matt. xxiv. 21, was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, then some one will please harmonize the two statements. Daniel's prophecy of this time of trouble refers to what will take place at the time of the end, when Michael shall stand up for the children of Daniel's people—a time when his people shall be delivered, and when the resurrection of many—both just and unjust—shall take place. Refer what Jesus said to the same period and then we have the two texts harmonized.

Jerusalem is to receive at the Lord's hand double (punishment) for all her sins. The Lord will purge the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. Isa. iv. 3. His "fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem." Isa. xxxi. 9. "The Lord God shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of the land." Isa. x. 23. Two-thirds of those in the land shall be cut off and die; and the remaining third part will be brought through the fire, refined as silver and tried as gold. Zech. xiii. 8, 9. The arm in which they trusted shall be broken — their covenant with death shall be disannulled, and their agreement with hell shall not stand; and "though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant (only) shall be saved." [illegible] will finish the work and cut it short in righteousness, for a short work will the Lord make upon the earth." Isa. xxviii. 18; Rom. ix. 27, 28. Those passages, and many more which might be quoted, plainly indicate that there is tribulation yet in store for the Jews—that the time is not yet come to speak "comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry to her, that her warfare (or appointed time) is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned." Isa. xl. 2.

Nor will Jerusalem alone be required to drink the cup of the Lord's wrath. Jerusalem will become a burdensome stone for all peoples; all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it." Zech. xii. 3. After she has taken the cup of trembling, and partaken the very dregs thereof, the prophet Isaiah addresses her thus: "Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine; thus saith thy Lord the Jehovah, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again; but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee: which have said to thy soul, Bow down that we may go over: and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street to them that went over." Isa. l. 21–23. First, "the Lord has a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel;" "because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land." Hosea iv. 1; Micah vi. 2. Then, secondly, "the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword." "For lo," says he, "I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished, for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts." Jer. xxv. 29–31.

The means by which this controversy will be carried on, and this punishment inflicted, on both Jew and Gentile, nationally considered, will be war. The kings of the earth, and of the whole habitable, are to be gathered together to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Rev. xvi. 14, 16. And Jehovah by Zechariah says, "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle, and the city shall be taken." [illegible] This is the same gathering as that before mentioned in Rev. xvi. The battle is that of God Almighty. "The Lord shall go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." verse 3. The Lord Jesus comes with the saints just at this juncture; the remnant of Judah who recognize him are delivered, while all their enemies, whether Jew or Gentile, meet with a terrible overthrow. The Lord through the prophet Joel says, "I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down unto the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." Joel iii. 2. Read in the same chapter verses 9–17 inclusive, a call to the nations to come and gather themselves together to this great battle, when and where judgment will be meted out to them. Mark well what is said here, "Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord."

This harmonizes with what Zechariah says about the Lord coming with his saints at the time of this battle; and with the solemn words of warning given by the glorified Jesus in connection with the great gathering to Armageddon, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 15. Zephaniah also says, "Wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured by the fire of my jealousy." Zeph. iii. 8. The result of this judgment will be that the Lord will "turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." And he will take out of the midst of Zion the proud and haughty; but will leave therein an afflicted and poor people, who shall trust in the name of the Lord. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth." "Sing, O daughter of Zion: shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more." Chap. iii. 9–15.

Jeremiah says: "Thus saith the Lord; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness? Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." Then follows a promise of deliverance, rest and quiet. "For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished." Jer. xxx. 5–7; 10, 11. Here we find mercy mingled with judgment. Isaiah foretells of a time of "grief and desperate sorrow" when there shall be a rushing of nations, but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee afar off, and be like thistle-down before the whirlwind. Deliverance will come suddenly and unexpected. "Behold at eventide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us." Isa. xvii. 12–14.

Read Isa. lix. for a description of the character of the people in this day of their desperate sorrow. "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey (or is accounted mad;) and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment." verses 14, 15. The Lord then undertakes the cause of the poor in spirit—the oppressed. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord." verses 18–21. The enemy coming like a flood is the gathering and rushing of nations at Jerusalem before referred to, when the Lord shall appear for the salvation of those who wait for him. Observe that the Redeemer shall come to Zion just at this time, as other prophets have declared. Isaiah says in another place for the comfort of the remnant: "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies. For behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Isa. lxvi. 5, 14–16.

The apostle Paul comforted the persecuted Thessalonians with similar language. Says he, "It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day." 2 Thess. i. 6–10.

Our Lord told his disciples that "Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. Gentile times and Jewish times end together. Jewish times were to end with the seventy weeks of years spoken of by Gabriel to Daniel. Sixty-nine were ended when Messiah was "cut off, and had nothing." One week yet remains to be fulfilled; the week in which the "Prince that shall come" will confirm a covenant with many. That will be "the last end of the indignation" against Daniel's people and city; "to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophesy, and to anoint the Most Holy." Gentile times end when the stone smites the image upon the feet. See Dan. ii. 34, 35. The image, representing the Roman empire in its last stage, was broken to pieces, and the stone which smote it, representing God's kingdom, became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. This last form of the Roman empire was seen by John in vision rising out of the sea, "having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the names of blasphemy." Rev. xiii. 1. This was supplemented by another beast, coming up out of the earth [illegible] and [illegible] yet dragonish—a [illegible] deliver, and persecutor. This ten-horned beast carries a woman, gaily attired, and adorned with jewels, carrying a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. Her name is also inscribed upon her forehead: "Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." The woman was drunken with the blood of saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus.

The ten horns are ten kings, who having received power as kings for a short season with the beast, hate the woman, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. "For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom to the beast until the words of God shall be fulfilled." Rev. xvii. Then in chap. xix. John gives an account of a gathering of the beast, the kings of the earth, and their armies, to make war against him that sat on the horse, and his army. The beast, and false prophet were taken captive and destroyed by fire, and their armies slain with the sword. Thus the fourth kingdom in its last phase is brought to desolation and the saints take the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven and possess it forever. Gentile times and dominion end here, and a new era commences with Jerusalem becoming "the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem." Jer. iii. 17.

In conclusion, from what we have quoted from the prophets, (and very much more might have been quoted), we cannot but see that the judgments of God are about to fall on the wicked. Neither Jew nor Gentile can escape. God is no respecter of persons. He will render to all according to their works, nationally or individually. Those nations who interfere with his plans, or persecute his people, will meet with condign punishment. Israel, his chosen people, have been severely punished for their sins. They have been cast out, cut off, and forsaken of their God—but not forever. When they turn to the Lord he will have mercy upon them. Paul warns the Gentiles lest they also should be cut off. "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise, thou also shalt be cut off. And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again." Rom. xi. 22, 23. Individually, God will render unto them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and incorruptibility—eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. Rom. ii. 5–9.

SELECTION FROM THE UNWRITTEN WORD.

"Dost thou know the ballancings of the clouds." Job. xxxvii. 16.

Clouds are among the most striking appearances in the natural world. Whether heralding the dawn with beacons of flame and banners of gold, or attending the sunset with armies of light and sapphire thrones; whether clothing the mountains with garments of beauty, or enriching the landscape with flying shadows; whether shading the weary from the noonday heat, refreshing the field and the garden with gentle showers, or shaking the earth with mighty thunders; whether moving in silent and solitary grandeur along the blue deep of the sky, or covering the whole heavens with black and jagged masses, torn by the tempest and hurled onward like charging hosts in the shock of battle; glorious in the morning, grateful at noonday, prophetic of the dawn at evening. Clouds lend a charm to every landscape, a diversity to every season, and a lesson to every thoughtful mind.

No earthly scene could attract us long, if deprived of light and shade from the changing clouds; and with our present feelings we should find it hard to be satisfied in a state of one unvaried cloudless noon. It is doubtless for this reason that clouds so frequently form a part of the symbolical representations by which the Creator of the heavens and the earth reveals himself to man. When the waters of the flood passed away from the earth, and God covenanted with man to repeat the deluge no more for perpetual generations, he pointed to the bow in the cloud for the seal of his covenant. He wrote his promise in the seven-fold colors of the showery arch. When the hosts of Israel came out of Egypt [illegible] began their march to the [illegible] Land, through the waves of [illegible] sea, the Lord went before them [illegible] guide and a defense in a pillar of cloud. The same awful symbol of Jehovah's presence was a light to his people and darkness to their foes. When the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai to proclaim his fiery law amid thunderings and lightnings and the sound of a trumpet exceeding loud, he vested his presence from the witnessing tribes in a thick cloud. When the tabernacle was set up in the wilderness, and God would give a token of his willingness to hear prayer and to dwell with the humble and contrite, he caused a cloud to appear between the Cherubim that covered the mercy-seat with their outspreading wings, and he spoke from that awful shadow. The Psalmist in describing the majesty of Jehovah who laid the foundations of the earth and spread out the heavens like a curtain, says that he maketh the clouds his chariot. The voice which proclaimed the Son of God on the Mount of the Transfiguration came out from the cloud which covered the excellent glory.

When the great work of man's redemption was accomplished, and the Conqueror of sin and death ascended to the right hand of the Father in view of his wondering disciples, a cloud received him out of their sight. And in the last great day when he shall return for judgment, and shall gather all nations before him, he shall come upon the clouds. The voices of the mercy-seat are no longer heard as of old from the awful shadow of the Tabernacle. The visible presence of the Son of God no longer walks with men below. And yet the bow of promise still spans the summer cloud; the chariots of Jehovah still sweep the sky; the heavens are covered with the dust of his feet. There is still abundant reason why we should make a sacred study of the clouds. There were some in ancient time who thought it strange that they could not find out the ways of the Almighty unto perfection. To silence such presumption, he put the question, "Dost thou know the balancing of the clouds?" He referred to objects which are familiar to every eye, which come within the range of every day's observation. And the force of the rebuke was this: If you cannot explain things that are so common and apparently simple, why need you wonder or complain that you cannot understand him who is from everlasting to everlasting. This question about the balancing of the clouds has been before the world more than four thousand years. Men have been studying and growing in knowledge all the time. But nobody has yet been found able to answer it, either among the shepherds like Job, who are as familiar with clouds as with their flocks on the mountains; or among philosophers, who study vapors and stormy winds in laboratories and upon housetops.

The latest authority among men of science says that little is known of the causes which balance the clouds in the air. They are formed of water, and water, however minutely divided, is always heavier than air; and yet flying fountains of all the rivers of the earth, which bury the mountains in snow, and flood the plains with water, go floating over us at vast heights, when all our philosophy would require them to sink to the earth. Why they do not come down at once, desolating the plains with another deluge, nobody knows. It is a sign of progress in knowledge that men have discovered their ignorance. And it takes a wise man to tell us in what direction our ignorance is most profound. The writer of the book of Job must have been guided by something higher than human wisdom to have been able to ask in his day the one question which is still hardest to answer, about the clouds. He might have asked a hundred others which are easy for us, but which nobody could answer in his time. He needs divine inspiration to ask the one which the world after the lapse of so many centuries of study, still finds the hardest to answer. And this was not by accident, for it was the avowed purpose of the writer to show that in the most common things there are mysteries past finding out. But this old book asks another question, viz: "Can any understand the spreading of the clouds?" which is no easier of solution. These questions are asked, not simply to perplex and confound us, but to show that in the common things of daily life there are mysteries; and that much more may we expect that the judgments and purposes of the infinite God will be unsearchable. He must come to us, if he reveals himself at all, in the thick cloud of mystery; he must conceal more of himself than he makes known. If we could fully understand his ways, we could not believe him to be the infinite God. He must be incomprehensible in wisdom and power and love, or we could not commit our future interests to him according to his word of promise.

It is infinite folly of the skeptic to refuse to believe because he cannot comprehend the infinite. Every faculty of his mind, every organ of his body, every cloud in the sky, every particle of dust beneath his feet, contains mysteries which no human science, by continued search, can find out. Our own existence and faculties and destiny are unfathomable mysteries. But they are all most real and undeniable facts. It is greater folly to deny or neglect our responsibility to God because we cannot understand how we came into being, or in what way our life is preserved. It is by the dark and awful lesson of mystery that God would educate us all to the highest exercise of faith. He shows us the unsearchableness of his wisdom and power in the drop of rain, in the flake of snow, in the blade of grass, in all the little common things around us, in order that he may help us to believe that he is everywhere and that nothing is too small to receive his attention.

He impresses us more deeply by what he does not and cannot make known of himself, than by all that our limited understanding can comprehend. "How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out." They must be so, or they could not command our faith and satisfy our longings for a future life, holding supremacy in our minds, so that we may never cease to inquire, to think and to learn. There is a cloud of mourning as well as of mystery. To those who will receive it, the mystery is the forerunner of light, and the mourning is the messenger of joy. The divine Comforter promises especial blessing to them that mourn. The cloud of mourning casts its shadow upon every path. None are exempt, but all are burdened with words of lamentation over the changing and transitory state of man. With many life is a long conflict of pain and disappointment, hope is a bright cloud that brings no rain, joy is a fountain that springs up in the burning desert, but recedes when the thirsty approach to drink. In every heart there is some secret woe, in every cup of earthly pleasure there is bitterness. The eloquent and the mighty climb to the heights of fame and find them cold. The friend of the poor and the emancipator of millions falls by the hand of an assassin. Men of genius enrich the world and themselves die poor. Men of wealth build splendid mansions and never inhabit them. Reformers preach righteousness and humility, and they are hissed as fanatics and denounced as disturbers of the public peace. The clowns and the comedians who live by making others laugh, are themselves consumed with secret sorrow. The devotees of pleasure who make life a jest and death a shadow, are themselves the saddest creatures in the world.

You may plant the rose in your sunniest window and shelter it from every blast, but the thorn will appear before the bud, and the worm may hide itself in the first and fairest blossom. You may toil for long and weary years to reach some coveted position, and when it is gained only wish yourself back where you began, that you might make a different choice. You may groan under the burdens which you are now bearing and yet find yourself no happier when they are removed. You may think that had it not been for one great loss or disappointment, you would be today entirely content with your condition, when it may have been that loss alone which saved you from other ruin. You may search the world around, but you will find no path on which the cloud of trouble and sorrow never casts its shadow; you will enter no home which may not at any time be made the house of mourning; you will climb no height so lofty and serene as never to be beaten by storms or veiled in darkness.

Such is man's lot in this world; and in all its changes he can find no rest; in all its sorrows no sufficient consolation; so long as he pictures his brightest prospects in the fading clouds, and builds his most substantial structures upon foundations that the storm may sweep away. Would you know how much reliance to place upon the most cherished expectations of earthly good? Look up to the vanishing cloud and see. And yet there is something for us to rely upon more sure and permanent than the changing aspects of the sky. There is a cloud of mercy which pours down blessing upon the most desolate heart, and there is a cloud of light that leads to glory and to God. Clouds are, in some sense, mediators between the heavens and the earth. They are material in substance, rising up from the deep, and carrying heavy burdens on the wings of the wind, and so they belong to the earth. They are ethereal in lightness, standing without any visible [illegible] long to the heavens with showers that [illegible] and curtain life, and they are charged with lightnings that blast and destroy. They cover the traveler with a cooling screen from the burning sun, like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, and so the same cloud that pours down blessings on one, breaks in tempest and affliction upon another. God's acts and thoughts of kindness are as numerous as the drops of rain, and it takes them all to make the cloud of mercy by which the humble and trusting have been refreshed, protected and guided in the way of peace. That mercy surrounds us every moment like a thick cloud dropping down the blessed rain upon the waste places of our hearts. Out of the cloud come voices of invitation, of entreaty and of command, directing us to the Lamb of God, and saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." God has written the transitoriness of all earthly things upon the clouds, that every eye may see it. He has given them beauty and made them a blessing, that they may the better represent things which charm for a time and disappoint in the end. When you are tempted to set your heart on earthly things, look up to the changing clouds and see how soon your possessions will pass away. God has clothed the clouds of the morning and the evening with evanescent beauty that he may awaken in our hearts a longing for the land where the glory of his presence shall be an everlasting light.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to that end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints to joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 17.

Prelude—Explanations of Deut. xxxiii. 1-3; Hab. iii. 1-6; Isa. lxiii. 1-8; Psa. xcix. 7-10—Christ and his army visible—Egypt in the future—2. Green spot or the oasis in the desert—3. The union of Egypt with Israel and Assyria—4. The highway. 5. Egypt beyond the reign of subjugation—Five way-marks.

Prelude.—A brother remarks, The Scriptures that point out the manner of Christ's second coming—please read Deut. xxxiii. 1-3; Hab. iii. 1-6; Isa. lxiii 1-8—these have never had a fulfillment as we understand them. If they do not relate to his second coming, please show us our mistake, and when and where they are to be fulfilled. We believe, and so have we written, that Christ and his army of holy ones, after the marriage supper of the Lamb, will first strike "terra firma" at Mount Sinai. Thence pursue their line of march through the great wilderness to Palestine. Question, Will they be (visible) manifest to the outer world before they appear on Mount Zion? We believe that the 24th Ps. has not been fulfilled, and will not be till Christ and his bride appear before the gates of Jerusalem. The theory is now stated in full. To us, this is new, as it always has been, a view somewhat questionable.

We shall explain the four passages quoted above, as distinctly, and in as few words as our abilities will permit; hoping that the explanations will be true to the Bible and satisfactory to all. We would rather be honest than "sharp." We shall take them in their [illegible] to (Moses) said" The Lord [illegible] from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them; He shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints; from his right hand (went) a fiery law for them. Yea, he loved the people; all his saints (are) in thy hand: and they sat down at thy feet; (every one) shall receive of thy word." Deut. xxxiii. 2, 3. These words were uttered by Moses to the children of Israel in the plains of Moab by Jordan (near) Jericho. Num. xxxvi. 13. The law had been given from Sinai, and they had finished their forty years in the wilderness; had come to a place where the promised land was quite near; Moses had seen the land but was not permitted to enter it. Before being taken from them he gives them a parting address. In his farewell song he makes use of the words as above.

The Lord came from Sinai.—Is that coming past? Or, is it still future? As the truth or falsehood of the theory turns upon this expression, it is well to examine it critically. If this coming is past, the view is false, and the whole theory tumbles into ruins. We hold that that coming was past when Moses uttered the words.

1. He says, The Lord came from Sinai, not will come, some three or four thousand years beyond the time I (Moses) am now speaking. If then so far future, why did he not use the future tense? He uses a past tense to express a past act. The Lord came, not will come.

Moses, in narrating the wanderings of the Israelites, commences at their encampment at the foot of Mount Sinai, and notes remarkable events in God's dealings with them during the 40 years in the wilderness. The order of events is followed, Sinai, Seir and Mount Paran. "Came from" God was their guide. Who (God) went in the way before you, to search out a place to pitch your tents (in), in fire by night, to show you by what way you should go, and in a cloud by day. Deut. i 33; (see Ex. xiii 21, 22; Num. ix. 15, 22; xiv. 14). Jehovah led them toward Kadesh-barnea, by the foot of Mount Seir. There, and about Mount Seir the Israelites continued many days, not less than about 37½ years; "And the space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, (which flows west into the Dead Sea) (was) thirty and eight years." Deut. ii. 14. Hence the propriety of the expressions. "Rose up from Seir unto them." Deut xxxiii 2 and "ye have compassed this mountain long enough: turn you northward." Deut. ii. 3, 7, 14. "He shined forth from Mount Paran." The exact position of this mountain cannot be ascertained. It was near to Mount Seir, and was one of those mountains on which Jehovah often shone forth in his brightness, during his long sojourn with his people in the wilderness, a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. Ten thousands of saints." Holy ones. Such is its proper meaning: for Moses narrates but one coming (on Mount Sinai). He then continues with them as their king through the wilderness. God did not descend alone. The chariots of God (are) twenty thousand, (even) thousands of angels: the Lord (Jehovah) (is) among them, (as in) Sinai, in the holy (place). Psa. lxviii. 17; when the law was given. Who (Jews) have received the law (of Moses) by the disposition of angels." Acts vii. 53; "And it (the law) was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator (Moses.") Gal. iii. 19. "If the word (law of Moses) spoken by angels was steadfast." Heb. ii. 2. Many, or thousands uttered the words of the law in concert (perhaps), amid thunderings and lightnings.

From his right hand (went) a fiery law for them." (Israel). "Yea, he loved the people" (Israel) or he would not have been to the trouble of providing for them a fiery law, and of being their sleepless guide through the wilderness. Verses 3 and 4 are parenthetical, and somewhat ambiguous in their use of pronouns. To whom do the pronouns "he," "his," and "thy" refer? God, or Moses or both? Vs. 4 and 5 relate to Moses as a mediator or God's vice-regent. May not vs. 3 refer to Moses? Neither explanation will affect the translation of vs. 2. They are all expressed in the past tense, because [illegible] desire of the [illegible] 10, 12, 17, 19, 22 [illegible] sufficient to convince us [illegible] Moses knew what tense to use in describing future actions and events. 2. Habakkuk, in his prayer, is said to speak of Christ's second coming: "God came from Teman (the south), and (even) the Holy One, from Mount Paran." Hab. iii. 3. This coming is past, the past tense being used; and it was the Father's advent as seen by Moses in the wilderness. "And" means "even," God and the Holy One being one person. Habakkuk describes a past manifestation of the Elohim. His song was composed and sung in the congregation on the eve of the Babylonian captivity, which Jeremiah's 70 years bondage were about to commence. Habakkuk saw, in view of the impending danger, carried back to God's judgments on Egypt, his advent on Sinai, and his protection through the wilderness. If God then delivered his people from that actual bondage, why not from this impending captivity? So thought the prophet. Isa. lxiii. 1-8; Ps. xxiv. (relating to other events) will come in No. 18.

Egypt in the future.—It is our province, by the aid of the Bible, to trace Egypt through her future changes and to examine the agencies by which they are made, and the manner of their accomplishment. Five way-marks are given to aid us in our investigations. One, the pillar of witness, we have briefly noticed. A volume would be required to develop, fully, the purposes of its construction. A single additional question, however, must suffice for the present: Why was this pillar, sign, and witness located in Egypt? God does not act without reason. He had an object in the erection of that pyramid in the land of the Pharaohs, rather than in Palestine or in Assyria. The relative geographical location of the valley of the Lower Nile affords a reason quite sufficient. 4. No land has had such an eventful experience. 2. It was at that time (B. C. 2170) in the front rank of knowledge and resources. It is on the grand highway of western civilization and commerce. 4. Of the Eastern world, Egypt is the most convenient land for scientific research; and consequently God located this sealed monument in that location where the sea would be the sooner broken. Had it been erected in any part of Asia, it would not now be declaring its testimony. Many other reasons might be suggested but these we deem sufficient.

Second way-mark.—The oasis, or Eden garden in the wilderness of Egypt's future. The prophet's description is the following, "Blessed (be) Egypt my people." Isa. xix. 25. "Which in time past (were) not my people, but (are) now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." 1 Peter ii. 10. "And he saith also in Osee. I will call them my people which were not my people, and her beloved which was not beloved." Rom. ix. 25. "And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to (them which were) not my people, thou (art) my people; and they shall say (thou art) my God." Hos. ii. 23. "Blessed Egypt!" What a volume of associated thought is suggested by these two words: how inappropriate to Egypt under the Turk. What expression would now suit Egypt? Turko-Mohammedan cursed people! What terrible revolutions in that land before it can be truly said, "Blessed Egypt!" What physical, what political and what religious changes. The Libyan desert must retreat before the march of agricultural improvements. The indolent, God-forsaken Asiatic must give place to a more efficient race; one new and enterprising; one whose political aspirations will carry it onward toward Millennial justice and purity. Its religious creed must be totally changed. Mohammedan ideas have never renovated the morals of any country. The moral standard of the Koran is low; and in its leading thought it is licentious.

There have been two remarkable prophets, who have established each a religious system: viz: the Arabian Mohammed, the author of Mohammedanism; and Jesus of Nazareth the Messiah of the Christian. The lives of each, with their religious [illegible] been written; and, for [illegible] have been in circulation. One system is found in the Koran; the other in the Bible. The leading thought of the one system is, Hate your enemies; of the other, Love your enemies. Compare the written lives of each of these noted prophets. Who cannot discern a remarkable contrast in the lives of these prophets, in their disciples, and in the nations that have adopted their religions? The crescent has degraded Egypt. Such is the legitimate tendency of Mohammedanism. Though in its first centuries of domination it was a patron of science and literature, it lacked moral principle. It never developed a healthy moral constitution. The reason is obvious; its parents were without any. As water cannot rise above its fountain, neither can Mohammedan morals rise above their fountain contained in the Koran. Before Egypt can reach that beautiful, luxuriant and blessed garden in the wilderness, it will be renovated morally, socially, religiously and nationally. These changes will be accomplished fully, under Messiah's reign of subjugation. The incipient changes are in progress, as will soon be apparent in her onward movements.

3. Third way-mark.—Egypt's union with Israel and Assyria.—That union is described as follows. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land." Isa. xix. 24. "In that day." What day? In the day of Messiah's regal, official, personal administration; in that day in which Christ "puts down all rule, and all authority and power." 1 Cor. xv. 24. In that day when the stone, smiting the image, and reducing it to dust, becomes a mountain and fills the whole earth. We may affirm, with much assurance, that the past history of those three countries gives us no record of such a union; and, consequently, its fulfilment is in the future.

It is true that those three countries are now professing the same religion (that of the Koran); but is there any union between those countries? Is there, union under Jehovah: "In that day, the Lord shall be known to Egypt and the Egyptian shall know the Lord." "And the Egyptians shall serve (the Lord) with the Assyrians." These distinctive characteristics are sufficient to fix the union in the future. The object of this triple union is not fully known. Why, under the reign of Messiah, (whose reign will be over all nations) two countries, Egypt and Assyria, should be united with Israel, may not be so clear. Under the present circumstances we may be allowed to conjecture. The geographical positions of Egypt and Assyria, relative to the land of Israel, we present as a reason. Relative to Palestine, Assyria is the gate of northern, middle, and eastern Asia; for, in visiting the holy land, the inhabitants of those powerful kingdoms, states and empires would pass through Assyria, (all countries on the eastern side of the Euphrates and Tigris being included under that name). That country would command Asia. For the same reasons Egypt may be called the gate of Africa, and the West; Egypt, even now, by reason of her Suez canal, is the toll-gate of the Great West. Their union with the land of Israel under the Messiah, would give ample room for the central kingdom or capital empire of the world. With such physical changes as are named by the prophets, this triple territory would sustain an immense population. J. P. WEETHEE.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 1.

THE JORDAN AND THE DEAD SEA.

"O my God,.... I will remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar."—Psalm xlii. 6.

There is no river in the world like the Jordan;—none so wonderful in its historic memories, none so hallowed in its sacred associations, and none so remarkable in its physical geography. It is the river of the Holy Land. It has been more or less intimately connected with all the great events of Scripture history from the patriarchs to the apostles. Its banks [illegible] great [illegible] and its waters have been [illegible] of Jehovah's judgment, power, [illegible] earth witnessed. [illegible] leave had burnt up [illegible] cities and polluted plain, [illegible] waters of the Jordan rolled over them and buried them for ever from the face of man. Thrice was the swollen torrent of that river stayed, and its channel divided to let God's people and prophets pass over "dry shod." Once, at the bidding of the man of God, the iron axe rose buoyant from its channel, and floated on its surface. Once its waters gave forth healing virtue, as if to prove to the proud Syrian chief the fallacy of his sneering exclamation, "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus better than all the waters of Israel?" Greater still were those miracles of our Lord which the evangelists have grouped thickly on and around the central lake of the Jordan. There did the storm-tossed billows hear and obey the voice of their Creator; there did the incarnate God walk upon the face of the deep; there, obedient to his will, the fishes filled the disciples' nets; along those shores the lame walked, the deaf heard, the blind saw, the sick were healed, lepers were cleansed, the dead were raised to life again. But the most glorious event the Jordan ever witnessed was Christ's baptism; for when he was baptized, "the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him;" and when the Divine Son was perfectly equipped for his great work of redeeming love—when just about to set out on his glorious mission—the voice of the Divine Father pierces the vaults of heaven, and proclaim to the astonished and joyful disciples on Jordan's banks the divine approval of both work and worker,—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Surely, then, we may say that every spot along this stream is "holy ground," and that the name Jordan is not only emblazoned on the page of history, but enshrined in the Christian's heart.

It would almost seem as if nature or nature's God had from the first prepared this river to be the scene of wondrous events, by giving to its physical geography some wondrous characteristics. Its principal fountain, bursting from the base of Hermon, is, like the mouths of other rivers, on the level of the ocean,* It descends rapidly through its whole course, and at length empties into the Dead Sea, whose surface has a depression of no less than 1312 feet. The whole valley of the Jordan is thus a huge rent or fissure in the earth's crust. Though it is not much over a hundred miles in length, at its southern end, along the shores of that mysterious lake, we have the climate and products of the tropics, while at its northern end on the brow of Hermon, we have a region of perpetual snow.

THE FOUNTAINS.

It was on a bright and cloudless summer day I first visited the fountains of the Jordan. On the preceding night I slept on a snow wreath, on the very peak of Hermon. Beside me, in a hallowed rock, the fire of Baal had often burnt in bygone ages, and around me were the great stones of Baal's altar and the shattered ruins of a later temple. There I was enabled to prove for the first time how accurate was the name given to this mount by the sacred writers, Baal-Hermon (Judg. iii. 3; 1 Chron. v. 23). A noble spot that was for the worship of the great fire-god. His priests could see the sun rising from the eastern deep long before his beams lighted up the plains below, and they could see him sinking slowly in the western sea long after he had set to the shores of Phœnicia; and then at night on that commanding peak, they could kindle a flame whose light would flash far and wide over Syria and Palestine. Wishing to realize something of the grandeur of those old Baal-fires, we gathered a great quantity of the dry prickly shrubs that cover the mountain sides, piled them up on the rock where the fire used to burn, and applied a match. The air was perfectly still, and the flame seemed to shoot up into the very heavens, while Hermon's icy crown gleamed and glittered in the ruddy light.

The descent from the top of Hermon to the fountains of the Jordan was as it [illegible] in a [illegible] from Oreenlan[illegible] to the equator. The heat was most oppressive when, emerging from a wild mountain glen, we entered the marshy plain of Merom. Away in front our guide pointed out a little isolated tell, apparently in the centre of the great plain,—"That," said he, "is Tell el-kady." We were soon beside it, and tying up my horse beneath the shade of a noble oak—a straggler from the forests of Bashan—I set out to explore.

DAN.

The tell is cup-shaped, like an extinct crater, which it perhaps may be, for the stones of the surrounding plain are volcanic. From its western base bursts forth one of the largest fountains in Syria, its waters forming a miniature lake, and then rushing off across the plain southward a deep rapid river. Within the full, beneath the branches of the great oak, is a smaller fountain, whose stream breaks through the circling rim, and foaming down the side, joins its sister. This is the principal source of the Jordan.

But the tell, has it no name in history, no story or legend to attract the notice of the passing pilgrim or the Bible student? It had once a historic name, which is not yet quite gone; and its story is a long and sad one. I wandered over it wherever it was possible to go. I found a few heaps of rubbish and old building stones, a few remains of massive foundations, a few fragments of columns almost buried in the soil, vast thickets of thorns, briars, and gigantic thistles, some impenetrable jungles of cane and thorn bushes, but nothing else; and yet this is the site of the great border city of Dan. Upon this hill Jeroboam built a temple, and set up in its shrine one of his golden calves, thus polluting that "Holy Land" which the Lord gave in covenant promise to the seed of Abraham. Therefore has the curse come upon Dan. Though one of the noblest sites in Palestine, though encompassed by a plain of unrivalled fertility, it and its plain are now alike desolate. The prophetic curse is fulfilled to the letter,—"In all your dwelling places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your works may be abolished" (Ezek. vi. 6).

It is interesting to note how the old name clings to the spot still, though in an Arabic translation. Tell el-kady signifies "the hill of the judge," and the Hebrew word Dan means "judge" (Gen. xlix. 16).

CÆSAREA PHILIPPI.

Half an hour across the plain, through pleasant forest-glades, bordered with myrtle, acacia, and oleander, and another half hour up a rugged mountain side, beneath the shade of Bashan's stately oaks, brought me to the site of the old Greek city of Panium, which Herod the Great rebuilt, and renamed Cæsarea-Philippi. This is one of the very few really beautiful spots in Palestine. Behind rises Hermon, steep, rugged, and grand, one of its lower peaks crowned by the frowning battlements of a Phœnician castle. In front stretches out the broad plain of Merom, like a vast meadow, and away beyond it is the mountain range of Lebanon. The city stood upon a natural terrace, which is interspersed with groves of oaks and olives and shrubberies of hawthorn, myrtle, and acacia, and is all alive with streams of water and miniature cascades, fretting here and there against prostrate column and ruined wall. It is, in fact, as Dean Stanley has happily named it, a Syrian Tivoli.

Behind the ruins rises a cliff of ruddy limestone. At its base is a dark cave, now nearly filled with the ruins of a temple. From the cave, from the ruins, from every chink and cranny in the soil and rocks around, waters gush forth, which soon collect in a torrent, dash in sheets of foam down a rocky bed, and at length plunge over a precipice into a deep dark ravine. This is the other great fountain of the Jordan.

It is "holy ground," for Jesus was here. Beside the fountain he uttered those memorable words, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church" [illegible] xvi. 13-20; xvii. 1-13 [illegible] the sight of the great [illegible] have suggested the [illegible] of the expression? And [illegible] six days afterwards Christ [illegible] his disciples, and led [illegible] up [illegible] an high mountain, and was transfigured before them." Standing there amid the ruins of Cæsarea, one does not need to ask where the Mount of Transfiguration is. Hermon, the grandest and the most beautiful of all the mountains of Palestine, has established its claim to the title of "holy mount."—J. L. Porter, A. M.

*Some geographers give the fountain of Dan an elevation of 700, others 800, others 200 feet; but these seem to be erroneous, as I have shown in the article "Jordan," Kitto's Cyclopædia, last edition.

The Hour of Youth.

No time is like the hour of youth,
So rosy and so fair;
When life is lit with sunny hope,
And free from anxious care.
When tender words of new-born love
Are whisper'd soft and sweet;
And blossoms beautiful and bright
Spring forth our steps to greet.

No time is like the hour of youth
As nature in the spring,
So life is in its opening time
A pure—a lovely thing!
Before the summer's scorching breath
Across its bloom has pass'd—
Before the balmy zephyr yields
To winter's chilling blast.

No time is like the hour of youth!
Oh, prize it while ye may!
For life is only, at the best,
A short and fleeting day.
Sow ye the garden of the heart
In youth with precious seed;
The harvest of the after years
Shall then be blest indeed!

Imitation.

Children must imitate somebody or something. You could not help it if you would, and you would not help it if you could. Babies learn to talk by imitating the sounds they hear and see made by the people about them. You begin to imitate before you know what you are doing, and you will go on imitating as long as you live. I once knew a little boy who had been brought up with his grand-parents, and saw very little of other children. It was amusing to notice how old fashioned he was in all his ways. He copied grandfather and grandmother without intending it.

But you have often set yourselves to imitate some one on purpose. The boy just comes to school sees a bigger boy, who is at the top of his class, wins many prizes, gains the good-conduct medal, is a first-rate cricket and foot-ball player. He thinks, "I will be like that boy," and makes him his model. He does not succeed at first, perhaps, but he keeps on trying. He does not become like the boy he admires all at once; it takes him months and years.

A monk wrote a book teaching people to live as Christians should. He called it "The Imitation of Christ." Could he have found a more suitable title? I think not; for every real Christian is trying to become more and more like Jesus Christ. Remember that he was once a child, so that you need no wait till you grow up before you can copy him.

You must be like Jesus before you can act like Jesus. Even if you could do what he did without being like him, he would not be satisfied. God reads our thoughts and he requires truth in the inward parts—that is, he will have us sincere in all we say and do. The first step toward the imitation of Jesus Christ is to ask God to give you a new heart. A boy once made up his mind that he would be gentle and loving and truthful and good as Jesus was. He tried hard for a little while, then he said: "Mother, it's no use trying to be like Jesus, because even when I do what pleases him, I want to do something else." Only God himself can conquer that difficulty for you. He will, if you ask him.

Imitating Jesus Christ, you will find work for every day in the year. You will have a great many copies to do before you learn to write properly; a great many sums to work out before you are a good arithmetician. You cannot translate a page of "Cæsar" without a dictionary the first day you begin to learn Latin. Surely a lifetime is not too long to spend in forming yourselves after the pattern of Jesus Christ. For we must be like him at all times and in everything. It is not enough to be gentle like Jesus. You must be truthful as well. We may be forgiving, but we are not like him if we are not also obedient.

"How much you would do to please father and mother, especially when you feel how dearly they love you. God calls you his children, and tells you you are "beloved" by him. One very strong reason why you should be imitators of God, is because he loves you and you love him. Nay; you cannot imitate him unless you love him, for if he loves, and you copy him, you must love too. Think each day of this year, "I am God's child, and I must be like my Heavenly Father." Then try to imitate him more exactly day by day. Pray to him to help you, and never forget that he is very near you, and is pleased with your effort, however imperfectly it may succeed.—Early Days.

I asked a little child, not long ago, "Have you called your grandma to tea?" "Yes, when I went to call her she was asleep, and I didn't know how to wake her. I didn't wish to holla at grandma, nor shake her; so I kissed her on the cheek, and that woke her very softly. Then I went into the hall, and said pretty loud, 'Grandma, tea is ready,' and she never knew what woke her."

A little boy was deeply interested in reading "The Pilgrim's Progress," the characters in that wonderful book being all living men and women to him. One day he came to his grandma and said: "Grandma, which of all the people do you like the best?" "I like Christian," was the reply, giving the little boy her reasons. "Which do you like the best?" Looking up in her face with some hesitation, he said slowly: "I like Christiana." "Why, my son?" "Because she took the children with her, Grandma."

Editor Restitution:

A happy new year to you and all the brethren. Time is swiftly rolling by, and soon we will all be gone. Are we living up to our privileges? living up to duty? I fear we as a people are growing cold and indifferent. This is true at least of the people here in the west. Some of our big guns have gone into the boggy state. Some are very worldly minded; the cares of this life choke out the word; their oxen and calves claim their attention. Others follow pernicious habits—dram-drinking, chewing and smoking, conforming themselves to the world—while their lights are going out, and the good cause is evil spoken of. This is a sad but true picture, and makes our hearts sorrowful when we ought to be rejoicing. May all arouse and prepare to meet our soon coming King—make haste while the Bridegroom tarries.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CRADLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 14, 1883.

WE are reading books received, and will notice in due time.

REMEMBER that Conference commences Friday evening of the present week.

"DISASTER" is the one word that sums up the news items of current times. A large portion of our paper gives details. A severe gale is reported as taking place in Great Britain Feb. 12, and Cincinnati is literally inundated.

A VISIT TO HUNTINGTON COUNTY.

On the Saturday preceding the second Sunday in January we made a visit to Huntington County, to preach a few discourses to a little band of brethren and sisters residing in the district of country surrounding the home of our well known brother in Christ, W. T. Griffin. Seven years had elapsed since we had been in that locality to hold forth the word of life. Our route was, in part, over a portion of the new railway known as the Nickel Plate. We found this road a remarkably good one in all respects for a line that had been built and furnished with rolling stock in the short space of only eighteen months. It is a very direct line from Chicago to Buffalo, and is already doing a large freight business, though, as yet, only one regular passenger train each way has been placed on the line. As it gets more fully into operation the managers will find more trains a necessity. Its passenger coaches are neat and well adapted to the convenience and comfort of travelers.

Our short journey was over a section of country that we moved into before the Red man left it, as his paternal inheritance, and favorite hunting-ground. It was forty-seven years ago this present winter that we first commenced traversing the grand old forests that then stood in all their primal magnificence in the Eel River valley. This river has a somewhat notable history in connection with governmental transactions with the Indian tribes. The French name was L'Anguille—the name for "eel" in this language, and "eel" was also the signification of its Indian name—Ke-na-pe-com-a-qua.

This name of the river was also the name of a somewhat celebrated Indian village located on the north side of the stream about six miles from its junction with the Wabash where Logansport is now situated. Connected with this river is an other little piece of Indian history to which we will give just a passing notice.

We presume many of our subscribers have read the disastrous defeat of St. Clair, Nov. 4, 1791, on the head waters of the Wabash. The leading commander of the Indians in this battle was Meshekunnoquoh, which signifies Little Turtle. This chief finally became peacefully disposed toward the United States, and a comfortable house was erected for him near the banks of Eel River, not far from where Columbia City is now located. This celebrated chief died at Ft. Wayne, July 14, 1812, on a visit to the commandant at that post.

To return to our own early connection with this region. Perhaps no country in a state of nature ever presented scenes of more surpassing beauty and loveliness than did the rich lands in the vicinity of this beautiful river. For a marvelous display of floral grandeur nothing could transcend the enrapturing sight of the almost limitless flower-beds that literally covered thousands and thousands of acres with a wild Paradise of bloom. It was amid these grand old forests, and these widespread aisles of flowery enchantment, that we commenced our travels as a herald of the coming King. The early settlements were grouped in the more favorable localities, and often quite widely separated. The surveyor's lines, marked on the trees, and, for nearer cuts across the woodlands, the pocket compass, guided us in our course from one well known locality to another. Plain and earnest men and women—closely crowding the limited rooms in the log-cabins of the pioneers of these new homes—were the auditors that listened to our solemn message. It was no lullaby chant that was sounded in the ears of Christ's waiting ones in those days that we now look back upon as days of sublime mystery. We not only preached the coming of the Lord, but we expected him, and felt and lived accordingly. But he tarried—and our journeys now are along among the cemetries where those loved ones are passing the night of death. In this very journey we saw the white marbles that told us where the sleepers reposed that once listened with tearful interest to our thrilling cry—Behold he cometh!

The lips that once sang the sweet and rapturing melodies of advent glory and heavenly triumph, are now motionless—"The heart-harp is broken and the song-strain is still." The sons of exhortation have made their last appeals to the godly and the ungodly. Death has hushed the voice of persuasion, and the weary head is resting on the pillow of clay. The fervent and effectual prayers of Messiah's devoted followers, who lived in that time of solemn waiting, are no longer ascending to the throne of grace. Petitions, lifted from those hearts filled with the love of God, were not voiced to be merely heard of men. But, like the prayers heard by the Apocalyptic Seer, there was incense in them. It was from that golden censer in the angel's hand, and the holy cadences, and the fragrant perfume ascended skyward. The echos that were lost to human ears were heard in the Holy of Holies by the loving Father of the household of faith. But the prayers of these saintly ones, like the prayers of David the son of Jesse, are ended. A feeling of melancholy sadness stole over us as we looked toward the mounds that were heaped over the sleepers in Jesus. This sadness deepens when we remember that the candlesticks that lit them onward to the dark valley and shadow of death, have been removed out of their places. The churches of those times have passed away with those that have gone down to the grave. The quadruple gloom of Laodicean formality, heartless worldliness, infidelity, and Roman superstition has gathered over in impenetrable blackness—a blackness never to be rifted till rifted by the lightenings of the day of God. Other lampstands have been placed out in neighboring localities—shall these be removed?

Though we did not set out with the intention of saying much about the history of these parts, or of our own ministerial experience, yet, as we have commenced, we will add some items more which may possibly interest our readers. For about 42 years we have been trying to herald the coming of Christ and the age of restitution. The country through which we have mostly labored in preaching the kingdom of God, and life through his Son, is interspersed by three rivers of some celebrity in Indian affairs. Of Eel River we have already spoke[n]. We have given its name both in E[nglish] and Indian. The Tippecanoe coun[try] Indian name was Quiteq[uenon]. Fish River. Both th[ese] of the Wabash—O[uabash], meaning a cloud driven by [a] supernatural wind in the highly figurative tongue of the Red Man. The third river we look upon from our window as we pencil these lines. The Indians called it Wallounga—Yellow River—from the tinge of its waters. These rivers through larger streams—all finally become blended and lost in the Mississippi which is, by interpretation—The Father of Floods. Along these streams the Indians had their homes when we erected our humble log cabin on the beautiful banks of the Ke-na-pe-com-a-qua about 47 years ago. Here, as from time immemorial, they feasted and hunted—here lived and loved and died—and here we saw the burial places where the Red Clay went "dust to dust." The survivors soon went westward, to make their graves in the lands of the Sunset, and the plowshare of the supplanting Pale Face directly mingled the slightly buried dust of their past generations with the Earth-mould—and with them their flowery woodlawns have vanished from the things that be."

Since we commenced preaching all has changed. The once powerful Indian tribes have become nearly extinct, and they will soon be numbered with the dead nations. The churches of our early ministry are now with the silent multitudes awaiting the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God. Although the snows of time lie white on our temples we are still working, but it is for a new generation. If days stay away a little longer we too must go to the land of darkness as darkness itself, to rest awhile in the desolate chambers of the house prepared for all living. The brethren in Huntington county have had severe trials, but our meetings were cheering. At our Synod gathering on Sunday morning we were reminded of gone-by days, as a goodly number took hold in earnest. We tried to preach the truth in love to all, and the impression seemed to be good. Some seem almost persuaded to yield the obedience of faith. While we preach the gospel of the Kingdom and the coming age of restitution—while we preach life everlasting only through Christ—O let us strive for more of the lowly spirit of the Lord Jesus. Let us realize ere it be too late that—"if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." O that we may have the spirit of adoption who[reby] we may know that we are the children of God. We bade the dear friends farewell with the hope of seeing them again ere the year closes should it be the Lord's will. For their kindness to us we have them in grateful remembrance. May the Lord guide us all by his counsel and afterward bring us to glory.

EARTHQUAKES IN DIVERS PLACES.

On Sunday evening, Febuary 4, late in the afternoon, we were studying that portion of Scripture—Acts iii. 12–21—that was so generally used as the Bible Lesson for that day, intending to discourse upon it in the evening address to our little church here in Plymouth. We were looking over this part of the chapter as translated by the American Bible Union. Suddenly there was a very perceptible jar in the floor under our chair and a slight tremor in the very heavy brick walls of the building, attended with a low heavy detonation. Although unable to account for the phenomenon, we little suspected its true cause till next day we learned that it was a slight earthquake shock. Many people throughout the country noticed the occurrence but supposed that the sound and tremor were the results of frost bursting the heavy crust of sleety snow and ice that covered the whole country. In another part of our paper will be found a full summary of the disastrous events that occurred in January, and so far, between fires, floods, snow-blockades, sleet-storms, shipwrecks, train disasters on railroads, financial wrecks, and acts of daring wickedness, it would appear that Febuary may fully rival the disastrous record of January. A political journal asks, "Is 1883 to be a year of calamities?" to which we can only reply that prophecy points ominously to the decade of the eighties. We give below clippings from the papers on the general prevalence of the shocks at this time, as well as upon the remarkable increase of earthquake shocks during the last fifty years. We choose to give the news in a somewhat diffuse form notwithstanding some repetition.

EARTHQUAKES AT HOME AND ABROAD.

In Wolfsborough, N. H., at five minutes past 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, an earthquake was felt. It rattled windows, crockery, and articles of furniture. The movement was from west to east, lasting five seconds. Ten minutes later another slight shock was felt. Previous to the time of the first shock it was perfectly calm, but immediately with the earthquake motion it was set in rapid motion, and continued so.

In Bloomington, Ill., at 5 o'clock on Monday morning, an earthquake shock was distinctly felt. A rumbling was heard for several seconds, followed by a shock.

A severe shock of earthquake was experienced in Agram, Hungary, on Sunday evening.

Renewed shocks of earthquake have been felt in Murcia, Spain.

In southern Michigan and northern Indiana the shock was felt between 4 and 5 o'clock. It knocked down stove pipes and cracked windows.

The earthquakes of Sunday and Monday, though not very destructive, were remarkable because of the widely separated points on the earth's surface which were nearly simultaneously affected. On Sunday evening there was a severe shock at Agram, and on the same day the shaking of the earth which has recently disturbed the inhabitants of Murcia was renewed. On Monday afternoon shocks were felt in New Hampshire, Illinois, Michigan, and Indiana. The near co-incidence in time of these various shocks naturally suggests that they were the result of some common cause. This idea is strengthened by the fact that all the shocks, both in Europe and in this country, were felt in regions where earthquakes are not infrequent. A year seldom passes in which one or more earthquake shocks are not felt in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and the neighborhood of the great lakes and in the mountainous portion of New England. To be sure, these shocks seldom do any damage, though, as all who have read descriptions of the earthquakes of 1811 and 1812 in the Mississippi valley know, they are not always destitute of very destructive effects, at least in that part of the country. In view of the apparent connection in origin of the recent earthquakes, it is very interesting to recall that a remarkable earthquake occurred in New England in November 1755, which, it is believed, emanated either from the same centre of disturbance as the great earthquake that destroyed Lisbon less than three weeks before, or from some centre whose activity was aroused by the shakings that western Europe and Iceland were then experiencing.

Since 1843 an average of 570 earthquakes a year has been known to occur. Mallet has collected the records of 6831 earthquakes which took place over a period of 1266 years previous to 1850, but 3210 of these occurred during the last fifty years. It seems, therefore, that our earth is almost constantly shaking at some point, and no part of the world is entirely free from tremors of some degree. Professor Milne has recently urged that the study of earthquakes should receive more attention in countries little subject to their visitation. Such countries may at long intervals be shaken by earthquakes of a severe character, and it is suggested that even the stable ground of England may not be secure against disturbance by convulsions as calamitous as that which suddenly swept away 60,000 of the inhabitants of Lisbon in 1755.

STUDIES IN "KEY-WORDS."

Having, in a former number of THE RESTITUTION, analyzed the Hebrew term, sheol, let us now consider its Greek representative, hades, as it occurs in the New Testament. Turning to page 56, in my work entitled "Key-Words," we find hades rendered in the Common Version "hell" ten times, and "grave" once. In the Revised Version of 1881 it is left untranslated, being merely transliterated or put into an English dress, thus, "Hades."

The inspired writer in translating Psa. xvi. 10, has substituted hades for sheol, in Acts ii. 27. This is sufficient proof that the two words mean the same. Their etymology is closely related, the root of sheol being shaal, to dig, from which comes the idea of searching out, inquiring, asking for; as for something unseen,—"Man giveth up the ghost (rather 'man expires,' יִגְוָע) and where is he?" Job. xiv. 10. So too, hades is usually thought to be derived from a, privative, and idein, to see: hence it comes to mean the unseen state into which man is brought by death. Since hades has been selected by inspiration as the representative of sheol, we are not to give the former term any meaning that would be contrary to the latter.

What is said of the rich man and Lazarus has been thought proof that hades is a place of disembodied torment. But it seems rather that the presence of the body is implied by such material things as "eyes," "tongue," "flame," and "water." Nor is the rich man spoken of as immortal, and his punishment endless. It seems but a [fi]gurative description of the [ter]rible doom decided to set aside [for] ever. For another figurative use of hades, see Matt. xi. 23; and for a similar use of sheol, see Jonah ii. 6. (My views on the rich man and Lazarus are given at large in the sixth discourse of my work entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom.")

There is to be, however, a place of fiery torment for the wicked, which will especially reduce them to non-existence. That place is called "gehenna:" three times out of its twelve occurrences, it is called "the gehenna of the fire." The righteous are not cast, in Scripture to go there; and the wicked are to enter it bodily,—with "eyes," "hands," "feet," and the "whole body." Matt. v. 29; Mat. ix. 43–47.

It would be far-fetched and fanciful in the extreme to say that gehenna is "in the outer darkness of unilluminated space, far beyond the remotest fixed star," for we have no authority for supposing any unillumined space in that direction. Nor do I find any warrant in Scripture for supposing gehenna to be "the lower section of hades, in the bowels of the earth." The plain facts are that gehenna is the Greek form of גֵּי הִנֹּם Ge Hinnom, the name of a valley on the west and south of Jerusalem, called to this day by the native Arabs, Wady Jehennam. Liddell and Scott's Lexicon (1849) describes it as "a beautiful valley near Jerusalem, where children had been sacrificed to Moloch; afterwards held in abomination, and used as a place to cast carcasses of animals and malefactors, which were consumed by fire constantly kept up."

The word gehenna, therefore, conveys a vivid idea of that scene, on the surface of the earth, where the wicked, like stubble, tares, and the fat of lambs, will be consumed into smoke, and become ashes under the feet of the righteous. Psa. xxxvii. 20; Matt. xiii. 40–43; Malachi iv. 1–3.

PETER, "BELOVED BROTHER" TO PAUL.

Brother C. Beardmore:—Your intelligent grasp of the apostle Peter's agreement on "the day of God—day of the Lord—as 1000 years," and St. Paul's "speaking of these things" will (or should) enlighten many who employ Peter to say less than Paul St. Peter notices the grand, all-eclipse bending change to be accomplished on (during) that day" as a 1000 years. It is that great and manifestation (or reigning restitution) day of the Lord." Acts ii. 20; iii. 19–26. But St. Paul discriminates between the faithful with "an abundant entrance and a full reward," and the slothful, who suffer loss, as a man escapes from his burning home—with only his life. 1 Cor. iii. 10–18. He shows "that it is a righteous thing with God to account those (who shall have suffered persecution for his name) worthy of the kingdom; and so reign with Christ through the 1000 years." Rev. xx. 5–7, while "with flaming fire he will punish—burn up—their foes, as he consumed Korah and his company; or Sodom and Gomorrah. 2 Thess. i. 5–10; 1 Cor. xv. 21–27; Jude 5–15.

The marrow and fatness of St. Peter's incorporation of St. Paul's teaching "of these things" (touching the great and appearing day of the Lord) lies in the fact that Peter does appropriate Paul. Peter's general terms take in "the times of the restitution" (as he himself puts it, Acts iii. 19–21) and thus he affirms "his times, who is (Jesus) the blessed and only Potentate," as Paul puts it. 1 Tim. vi. 16.

There are many texts in general terms, that have been used to deny the definite and discriminating terms, that are designed to fill up the outline of the subject as a whole. This applies to baptism, second advent and judgment.

Thus Rev. xx. 1–10 is filled out with both time and event. The notice of the 1000 years, and the events they embrace is repeated, made absolute and unmistakably plain; but the other verses from 11 to 15, engross the judgment, as if it were without "the 1000 years." Some like this in general terms, and in their bewilderment deny that!

All such fail to see "the adversary—the enemy"—in all this. What is the value of faith that mounts the throne and employs one part of divine revelation to demolish the other? This is its value. It demonstrates that such do not "build on the foundation of prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner."

Adam's "sin (all sin) unto death" has had that value. Let us beware.

In Christian love,

J. B. COOK.

The living Christian, pure of heart and unspotted by the world, is the best preacher of the gospel in these days. ## Armenian Antiquarian Discovery.

The Allgemeine Zeitung announces that a discovery, the importance of which can hardly be overrated, has been made lately by a Bavarian archæologist, Herr Sester, at the point where the Euphrates bursts through the Taurus Range. Here, in a wild romantic district, lying between Matatieh and Sanisat, he found a line of megalithic monuments, averaging sixteen and eighteen metres in height, and bearing inscriptions. They are in a remarkable state of preservation, and Herr Sester has no doubt that they formed part of some great national sanctuary, dating back three thousand years or more. There was formerly at this place a necropolis of the old Commagene kings, so that it seems reasonable to attribute these colossal monuments to this ancient people, the hereditary foes of the Assyrians. Very little is known about them. The classical writers allude to them only in casual passages, and the arrow-headed inscriptions, though mentioning them very often, have hitherto yielded scanty information. Herr Sester proposes visiting the place next year, accompanied by Dr. Puchstein, a pupil of the Berlin Archæological Institute. Meantime, it is conjectured that they will belong to the class of remains which Professor Sayce has designated as the "Chettite monuments," all that has come down to us from the once powerful race of the Chetta or Chatti.

The visit of the Princes to the Mosque of Hebron revealed the existence of a second tomb of Joseph, directly under the one already known, hitherto undescribed. What is usually styled the shrine of Joseph, is a chamber surmounted by a dome of lead, lighted by an octagonal lantern, containing a cenotaph covered with pale green silk having white lettering. The newly observed or second shrine, lies fifteen feet underneath, is also domed as to its ceiling, and is supplied with another cenotaph draped with green silk. It is entered from the interior of the Haram, by a passage just within the north gate, on a level with the base of the ancient rampart wall. As the workmanship of the upper shrine appears to be of Arab origin, the lower cenotaph must be the older tomb and, if either be ancient, the original one.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $260. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $600. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

R. S. DWINNELS, President.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At East Newark, N. J., Jan. 26, 1883, Eliza Wanmaker, in the 80th year of her age.

Near twenty-five years ago our aged sister, after witnessing the good confession, was baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus for the remission of sins. The last decade of her life were years of labor and sorrow and affliction, but mingled with the comforts of the truth, for in all her suffering she steadfastly held the confidence and rejoicing of the hope. After many days of earnest expectation and patient waiting death came to her relief. She leaves several children who are walking in her footsteps, animated by the same hope and faith, and by whom her memory will be lovingly cherished.

WE'VE ALWAYS BEEN PROVIDED FOR.

"Good wife, what are you singing for? You know we've lost the day,
And what we'll do with horse and kine, is more than I can say:
While like as not, with storm and rain, we'll lose both corn and wheat."
She looked up with a pleasant face, and answered low and sweet,
"There's a Heart, there is a Hand, we feel but cannot see:
We've always been provided for and we shall always be."

He turned and with sullen gloom. She said:
"Love, be at rest:
You cut the grass, we tied soon and late, you did your very best.
That was poor work; you've not at all to do with wind and rain.
And do not doubt that you will reap rich fields of golden grain;
For there's a Heart, and there's a Hand, we feel but cannot see;
We've always been provided for, and we shall always be."

"That's like a woman's reasoning; we must because we must."
She softly said, "I know not if only—yes, and trust.
The harvest may recle in the day. Keep heart, whate'er befide;
When one door shuts, I've always seen another open wide.
There is a Heart, there is a Hand, we feel, but cannot see:
We've always been provided for, and we shall always be."

He kissed the calm and trustful face, gone was his restless pain.
She heard him with a cheerful step go whistling down the lane,
And went about her household tasks full of a glad content,
Singing to time her busy hands as to and fro she went:
"There is a Heart, there is a Hand, we feel, but cannot see:
We've always been provided for, and we shall always be."

Days come and go; 'twas Christmas tide, and the great fire burned clear.
The farmer said, "Dear wife, it's been a good and happy year;
The fruit was gain, the surplus corn has brought the hay you know."
She lifted them a smiling face, and said: "I told you so!
For there's a Heart, and there's a Hand, we feel, but cannot see:
We've always been provided for, and we shall always be."

WHAT NEXT.

The fearful loss of human life since the birth of the new year, the suppressed undertone of the public is, what next; have we been deceiving ourselves, and is it possible that the warnings of the faithful servants of God are correct, who have been so in- [illegible] in their work and labor in [illegible] the imminent approaches. What do you mean by a crisis? A change in the governments of the world. "And the Seventh Angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. xi. 15–18. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to thy saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them that destroy or corrupt the earth."

It is not my purpose to attempt an exposition of the revelations or even the texts we have quoted. If the passages are to be understood in their literal sense, then certainly do the signs indicate their fulfillment in the not very distant future. The change of the rulership from human government to that of a divine theocracy, is a grand, sublime and magnificent work, or a new creation worthy of the God of the Bible, delegated to his beloved Son the glorified man Christ Jesus. It will take a little time. God is never in a hurry. Almost two thousand years have past and gone since the Son of God entered upon the great work of redemption. The first act was in the atoning sacrifice of himself as the one great offering whereby men might be reconciled to God. How few, oh how very few, have availed themselves of the free, unmerited offer of eternal life through a crucified Redeemer. He is the only live lawful heir to his father David's throne. All the other heirs are in hades and have lost their heirship. The world is his by right of redemption. Will he get peaceable possession? Nay, the enemy will dispute every inch of ground until the last moment when fire shall come down from God out of heaven and devour them.

How slow the progress and how few the number that have accepted the great gift or boon of eternal life, so dearly purchased and so freely offered to the sons and daughters of Adam's apostate race. And now in the closing hours of Gentile times, when God's especial judgments are being witnessed on every hand, how hard it is to get men to see and to act promptly and decidedly. Oh how few the number the faithful servant has to present to his beloved Master for his long and faithful toil and earnest work. The words of the Master are appropriate, "Ye would not come to me that ye might have life; men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

God has done for his vineyard all he can do. Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone. What is the next scene to open before an astonished world, faith and testimony agree: "Behold I come as a thief." What consternation, yea what horror will surprise a guilty world, and an apostate church, a hypocritical membership; how cheering to the lone, way-worn, humble disciple to hear the good news: "Come, my people, enter into thy chamber and shut thy door about thee; and hide thee for a little moment, until the indignation be over past. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain." This, then, is the order. He comes as a thief, takes his people away to the clouds, they are shut in with their dear Lord; safe, yea eternally safe, while the vials of his wrath are poured out upon a guilty world.

In my early life, away back 76 years the Methodists of that period were God fearing men, they were honest men, they lived for a purpose. A minister with whom we were well acquainted, preached much on holy Godly living. He practiced what he preached. He had on a card fastened on the wall before him in his study: "The All-Seeing Eye: Thou God Seest Me," written in plain letters under the All-seeing Eye; this made no impression that has never been erased from my mind. I regret exceedingly that I have at times lost the force and vividness that was made on my mind 65 years ago, and that now returns with all its former force and pungency, electrifying and vivifying my entire being. What enlarged and exalted views of the character and attributes of the God of the Bible, and what a halo of glory encircles the Son of God in his great work of redemption, in renovating and purifying the planet and presenting it to God his Heavenly Father, pure and clean as when it was finished and he pronounced it very good.

How far below and beneath our high and exalted privilege do we live, feeding on the Vanity-fair trash of the present transitory world.

I commenced to write upon the judgments of God upon the gelebration of men that now inhabit th[illegible] but my heart [illegible] and [illegible] I turn over the picture [illegible] dulled delight I revel among the glories and pleasures and ravishing delights of the age of Millennial glory so soon to take the place of anarchy, confusion and unrest; when Christ shall reign on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his Ancients gloriously. Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold as the light of seven days in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wounds.

Washington may well be called a Vanity-fair city, where the great men and women of the nation come to spend the winter, eating, drinking, visiting, music and dancing is the order of the day, also the night. The hand-writing on the wall has but a momentary effect, and if it is not said it is forcibly noted out, let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die. The solemn scene at the President's mansion on New Year's day with the frequent alarming disasters on the sea and on the land have but a momentary effect. A new excitement has just sprung up: the Marquis of Lorne has appeared among us. He is a very plain-looking, companionable, jovial fellow, talks with everyone and seems at home. He is the guest of the President; perhaps this is well enough. Watchman what of the night, the morning seems to dawn. The under tow has set in very strongly. The mask is thrown off, wickedness stalks abroad unshocked, unreproved and almost unheeded. To what a fearful pitch has crime reached, how are the mighty fallen, how low has the noble standard of divine truth fallen; truly has truth fallen in the streets, and equity cannot enter. Fabled ministers and fabled sermons is the order of the day.

We turn from these lullaby, lukewarm, sickening scenes, to the faithful unerring word of God and to our periodicals which are faithfully contending for the faith once delivered to the saints; what lessons of instruction copied or drawn from God's blessed book, the Bible. Sceptic go thy way, touch not a single leaf. In youth it taught me the way, lay on it not the hand of unbelief. I am old and full of days, have seen days and times that tried man's souls, have lived three months and two weeks without tasting bread (in the war of 1812), this we could endure in hope of better days; but of all trials none compares with that of being among false brethren; but out of all these severe trials the Lord has safe delivered us. For ever blessed be his holy name, and let all the people say amen. We have an abiding conviction that the end of the age is very near, what we do must be done quickly. In conclusion we say God bless the household of faith, keep them in the love of God, and in the patient waiting for his dear Son from heaven that they may be found unto praise and honor and glory at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Amen.

NEWELL BOND.

Editor Restitution:

Some of the readers of our paper may wish to know what I have been about since my last note of labor published in THE RESTITUTION.

Well, I am at present at my own pleasant home after an absence of seven weeks, enjoying the society of my own, and that of dear friends from Canada with whom I have been intimately acquainted for many years. I spent five weeks with the loved ones in Ventnor South Gower and Sumptville, Canada. Preaching twice on each Sunday and twice through the week. I also visited them all at their own quiet homes, conversing upon all the great truths which I believe are clearly set forth in the oracles of truth. Also upon all the great questions of the day, which are calculated to elevate man to that high standard in morals and purity of mind which it is the privilege of all the children of God to attain in this age! A standard that will give them the assurance that they will enter the city, eat of the tree of life, and share with Jesus their elder brother in his reign and glory of the coming ages.

Our meetings have not been as well attended for years. Some of the over-much religious were stirred up against the gospel we preach, even to forbid their young members to attend our meetings.

We ate the memorial supper in each place, and I had the honor of immersing a member into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and some decided to obey upon my return. Thirty-one years ago I commenced my labors in these places. All that God required of them was done for my comfort and needs.

On the evening of the 12th of Dec., I bid adieu to these loved ones and took the Charlotte of Nahum for Newcastle. Stopped at the station in Prescott, after taking a good supper at the hotel, from 8 p. m. until 1:30 a. m. At Belleville, our train being heavy and behind time, it was divided and another engine hitched on to the first class of cars. At 10 a. m. we reached Newcastle, where I found my good Brother Daniels in waiting to take me back to his pleasant home, where I spent a couple of nights pleasantly with him and Sister D. They are about my age, living isolated from all those of like precious faith, hence our visit was joyful. In this place there was formerly quite a number, but some have died and others have moved away, and there is only one besides them left in the township.

On the morning of the 15th, Brother D. took me to the station, and upon my arrival at Bowmanville, I found Brother D. Hogarth, my old and tried Brother in Jesus our Life-Giver, in waiting to take me to his beautiful home, where I have always received a warm welcome by all during the past 28 years. On each Sunday as usual, a good congregation assembled in our Chapel, to whom I preached two discourses on each day; some came from 8 to 12 miles. At the close of the evening services we ate the memorial supper. On each day it was a feast of fat things to all, a foretaste of the glorious future. During my stay of 18 days with this people, I visited nearly all of them at their own pleasant homes, where I was joyfully received by both parents and children, conversing upon truths that some who profess to be looking for Jesus the Life-Giver, ignore! Nearly 24 years have rolled away since I commenced my labors with this people. Never did I have a more pleasant time with them. To their honor I say it; they did all for me that the God of Israel required of them. But we deeply feel the loss of those who have fallen asleep in Jesus.

Dec. 26 I spent as usual with my much beloved family, Brother and Sister Daniel Hogarth, and it was truly a joyful time. They have 14 children; seven of them are married. They have 22 grandchildren living. All their children and companions, and ten of their grandchildren were present, in all there was 34 of us. At about 11 p. m. we began to take the parting farewell, and with their eldest son and his companion I started for West Whitby, a distance of 32 miles, where I stopped two days visiting the loved ones of His faith. On the morning of the 28th, Brother C. Hogarth took me to the station, where I took Nahum's chariots. Stopped over one train in Toronto and called on a few of the loved ones. Reached Suspension Bridge about 7 p. m. Found Mrs. L. in waiting to receive me, with a boy and horse and cutter to take me and my baggage to our pleasant home where I expect to spend most of my time until April.

THE DISASTERS OF A MONTH.

Over a Thousand Lives Lost in January on Land and at Sea. An Extraordinary Series of Calamitous Fires, Floods, Explosions, Shipwrecks, Railroad Collisions, Earthquakes, and Blizzards.—The Inauspicious Beginning of 1883.

January was a remarkable month. Its fatal and terrific collisions, fires, and explosions, and the alarming death rate, the list of business failures, and the overwhelming series of shocking casualties that marked it will make it memorable for years.

The month had just begun when the news of Gambetta's death was flashed over the wires to all parts of the world. The mystery that hung over it, together with the perturbation and excitement it caused in France, made the event the sensation of the world for several days.

On the day that the news of France's loss arrived the President of the United States stood in the White House surrounded by the wives of the Cabinet officers, receiving congratulations from a throng of callers. The decorations were strikingly bright, the uniforms of the diplomats and soldiers were brilliant, the costumes of the ladies were rich. The band was playing, and the whole scene was one of life and animation. Suddenly Elisha Allen, the Hawaiian Minister, dropped dead near the threshold of the reception room. The White House was closed at once, and the brilliant throng was dismissed.

Three days later came the news of the spread of disaster and death over a large part of Europe. The Rhine and the Danube rose, inundated villages and towns, washed away bridges, undermined houses, and spread distress over many miles of territory. The Rhine dam at Ludwigshafen gave way and many people were drowned. The list of the dead along the Rhine numbered more than seventy persons. France, Switzerland, and Austria also suffered great distress.

On the following day Gen. Chanzy died. After Gambetta he could worst be spared in France. Gambetta was called the soul, and Chanzy the sword of resistance to German invasion. It was said that the Germans feared Gen. Chanzy as they had dreaded Skobeloff.

On the following day, the 6th of the month, the Inman line steamer City of Brussels, as she was nearing Liverpool in a dense fog, was run down by the steamer Kirby Hall. She sank almost immediately. The Captain of the City of Brussels said that the fog was so heavy that he stopped the engines and allowed the vessel to drift with the tide. After she had drifted thus for forty-one minutes, the Captain heard the whistles of steamers on both port and starboard sides. He thought that the two steamers were passing him in parallel lines. A moment later a white light loomed up on the starboard bow, and before anything could be done the Kirby Hall struck the City of Brussels with terrific force. The Captain of the City of Brussels stuck by his ship till she went down, and then clung to a spar until rescued. Ten men were drowned.

Four days later occurred the appalling loss of life in the Milwaukee hotel fire. The hotel was a veritable death trap. The fire started in the basement at 4 A. M.—an hour when all the inmates were asleep—and shot up the shaft like a meteor. In a minute suction of the air from the shaft into the corridors had carried the flames into every story, and before any one had time to give an alarm the whole north end of the structure was a sea of fierce and roaring flame. The stairway around the elevator shaft was burned away, and the sleepers were caught in an awful trap. Another stairway was at the extreme north end of the building, but almost inaccessible. The flames and smoke swept through the corridors, and the affrighted guests were aroused by the suffocating smoke pouring through the apertures of the doors, followed by the glare of the fire. Some rushed forth almost into the heart of the flames and struggled toward the further stairway. A few of them escaped; the others were overcome by the smoke and roasted in the fire. But most of the people were awakened too late. When they jumped in affright from their beds and threw open their doors they were met by surging flames. They flew to the windows. Five or six stories below was the stone pavement. Many jumped, and were picked up mangled and dead. Others shrank back from the fearful jump until the flames swept into their rooms and shrivelled them into unrecognizable shapes. Many women hung from the window sills and rent the air with screams until the fire licked their hands and they went spinning down to a horrible death. At one time there were five women hanging at the same time from sixth story windows. Below were thousands of men looking on horrified and powerless as the women dropped one by one to the street and were picked up dead. The servant girls had no chance of escape, for the fire rushed up the stairway, consuming it as it passed, and swept into the servants' rooms. One after another they jumped from the windows in the top story of the burning building to the street below. Thousands looked on and saw them meet their death. The proprietor of the hotel became insane. The belief was general that somebody had set fire to the building, as no less than four attempts to burn it down had been made within two years. The number of lives lost was 74.

While they were still digging bodies out of the Milwaukee ruins the Plankinton House, a big hotel in St. Louis, caught fire. It started at the same hour in the morning as the Milwaukee fire, but most of the guests escaped; three, however, were killed.

On the 11th day of the month 10,000 people were driven from their homes in Hungary by the floods. Many were drowned. The dykes around Raab gave way, and the deluge completely inundated the town. Great distress still prevails there.

On the 14th occurred a frightful fire in a circus in Russia. It was in some respects even more horrifying than the disaster at Milwaukee. Eight hundred people were packed into a circus building in Borditscheff when the alarm of fire was given. The structure was but of wood, and was without windows. The performance was about half over, and two clowns were in the ring. Suddenly a third clown rushed in and shouted, "Fire!" The people thought it was a part of the performance until the ringmaster ran out shrieking at the top of his lungs. A moment later the fire began to creep from the stables. The people rushed for the main entrance. The doors opened inward, and were forced shut and held there by the pressure of the terror-stricken multitude. Some fought their way to the two side exits, but both were firmly nailed up, and defied all efforts to break them open. It was impossible for the victims to escape. When the people realized this they began to throw their children into the ring from all parts of the house. There was a carpet in the ring, and there the fire did not reach. Parents, imbued with a heroic instinct tossed the little ones down from the galleries and from all parts of the house. Nearly 200 children huddled together in the ring and watched the slow approach of the fire with blanched faces. A few cried piteously, but most of them were awed and fascinated. But as the fire crept around the building, the parents forgot their heroic impulses, and one by one jumped into the ring too. Soon the enclosure was a mass of struggling, fighting, terror-stricken men and women. The poor children were trampled under foot by the mob as it surged frantically about. Then twelve or fifteen horses, scorched and maddened by the flames, sprang into the ring, where they bounded frantically about among the people, trampling them to death. The whole ring was now a struggling, fighting mass. The fire brigade was summoned, but it did not arrive until half an hour after the fire began, and then it was impossible to do anything toward putting out the fire, as the tanks were frozen. After great effort the doors were cut away, but nearly 300 people had already perished. At the main entrance the scene was horrifying. The blackened bodies of scores of victims lay packed in the doorway, where they had been held as in a vise and slowly roasted to death. It is said that the fire was caused by a groom, who threw a cigarette in the straw.

On the 16th twenty two successive earthquake shocks destroyed many houses and frightened the inhabitants of the province of Murcia in Spain. There was also a heavy earthquake shock in Bohemia. During the week preceding there had been shocks in Illinois and western Kentucky, as well as in Canada and New England, and many destructive shocks in the island of Formosa. The number of earthquakes in this remarkable month kept pace with the disasters by fire and flood.

On the 17th day of the month the steamer Josephine left Seattle, W. T., and sailed for Skagit River. The next day, when off Port Susan Bay, her boiler exploded. The passengers were at dinner. The crown sheet of the boiler went straight up through the forward cabin and pilot house, and blew the man at the wheel high in the air, killing him instantly. Two men who were waiting at the dinner table, directly over the boiler, were blown to atoms. Neither the Captain, the purser, nor the fireman could be found afterward. Eight persons were killed and many more were wounded.

On the following day occurred the great powder explosion in Holland. The village of Muiden was wrecked, twelve persons were killed, and neighboring towns were seriously damaged. The gunpowder manufactories for the Dutch army are situated at Muiden, and terrific explosions occurred at the same time. The roofs were blown off the houses, and windows were broken eight miles away.

The same day two awful disasters occurred. The steamship Cimbria was sunk, and there was a frightful accident on the Southern Pacific Railroad. The Cimbria sailed for New York from Hamburg with 500 souls aboard. The morning was clear at first, but later a heavy fog settled on the sea and increased in density hourly. The engines of the Cimbria were kept at half speed for a time, and finally were run very slow. Shortly after 2 o'clock whistles were heard, and a moment later the British steamer Sultan, a freight and passenger boat, was seen headed directly for the Cimbria. She struck the Cimbria abaft the first collision bulkhead, heeling her over on her side. It was seen at once that the Cimbria was going to the bottom. Lifebelts were hastily distributed, and spars were cut loose for the passengers to cling to. A few minutes later the ship went down, leaving hundreds of men and women struggling in the water. One by one they were drowned. Some of the passengers and crew crowded into the only three lifeboats that could be cleared away, and rowed along the coast until picked up by passing steamers. Less than a hundred were saved. Meanwhile the British steamer went on her way. When she arrived at Pilsbe she reported the collision. Survivors of the disaster describe the scene at the sinking of the Cimbria as terrible. The air was filled with the cries of the hundreds who struggled until benumbed by the icy water and then sank from sight. The steamer Sultan was [illegible] by the police on the 2[illegible] train then claimed that [illegible] hours at the scene of the collision.

The calamity on the Southern Pacific Railroad in California was due, according to the verdict of the Coroner's jury, to neglect on the part of Conductor Reed and Brakeman Patten. The overland express train which left San Francisco on the 19th stopped at Tehichipa to take out an extra engine, to assist in pulling up the Tehichipa grade. By some means or other the train got away, and started backward down a grade of 120 feet to the mile. The train consisted of two engines and eight or nine cars, some of them sleepers filled with passengers. The train went whirling down the grade at a frightful speed for a distance of four miles. Then a curve was reached, and two sleeping cars and the mail, baggage, and express cars jumped the track and went down an embankment fifteen feet high, where they lay piled in a shattered heap. They caught fire and passengers, who were imprisoned in the wreck, were burned to death. Many of the unfortunate victims were held down by pieces of timber or heavy iron. They struggled to free themselves, but could not move, and the fire finally put an end to their sufferings. Others, maimed and injured, lay upon the snow, and were unable to render any assistance to those who were vainly endeavoring to escape from the fire. The passengers in the sleepers were awakened by the fearful velocity of the train, but in a few seconds, and before there was time to do anything, the crash came. Thousands of splinters, bits of iron, glass, and debris flew in the air, and the luckless passengers were buried under the wreck. Then the fire burst out and the smoke from the painted wood swept over it all. A fierce wind was blowing along the mountain side, and the weather was bitterly cold. Those within the first car struggled vainly. Only one man was dug out alive from under the heap of ruins of the first car. There were sixteen lives lost.

California had another accident that day besides the railroad horror. The Atlantic Giant Powder Works, near Oakland, was the scene of fire almost simultaneous explosions. Nearly forty men were preparing twenty-five tons of powder for shipment to Portland, Oregon, when the explosion occurred. The men were blown to atoms. The shock of the explosion was felt seven miles away, where the people ran from their houses, thinking it was an earthquake. [illegible] from the scene of the explosion were shattered, and many men painfully wounded.

On the same day the ship Vorwarts was sunk off Libau, and eight persons were drowned.

The day following witnessed the death of another famous man in France, Gustav Dore.

The same day three coal trains, consisting of three engines and sixty-nine cars, became unmanageable on the George's Creek and Cumberland Railroad, near Cumberland, Md. All were coupled together, and when they got in motion their momentum was so great that it was impossible to stop them. They went down the steep grade with frightful rapidity, until one of the engines jumped the track, and the rest of the train went crashing down an embankment. An engineer, a fireman, and three brakemen were killed, and several others mortally injured.

The sinking of a considerable portion of the city of Wilkesbarre on the 24th day of the month not only caused a panic in that town, but seriously frightened thousands of people who live in the mining districts. Nearly one hundred acres of the ground on which the city stands caved in and hundreds of houses were unsettled and many rendered unsafe. The structures must be rebuilt, as they are so badly racked that it will be impossible to repair them. Huge fissures in the earth extend across large tracts of land. The disaster was caused by the removal of the natural props in the Delaware and Hudson Coal Company's mine underneath the city. The scenes at the time were extraordinary. There was a loud roar, then a rumbling sound, and the earth shook violently and the houses rocked. Then came a crash, and the people rushed into the streets as their houses began to fall about their ears. The ignorance of the scared inhabitants concerning the nature of the impending disaster added to their alarm. The miners living in the quarter of the city that was shaken rushed about the streets not knowing what to do, and women sprang from their beds and fled out of doors. Nobody stopped to dress, and they almost froze in the piercing wind but were afraid to return into their tottering houses for more clothing. So they waited in the streets for sunrise. The people of Wilkesbarre are yet living in daily alarm. The whole city is undermined, and another disaster is feared. Relays of watchers have been organized, and a system of alarms arranged. The people are moving away as fast as possible from the district that has caved in.

On the 26th the steamer Agnes Jack was wrecked near Swansea. She went ashore on a reef, and was just out of reach of rockets, and utterly out of reach of boats. The people on shore saw twelve of the crew clinging to the mast of the ship. One by one they were swept away. At last the captain stripped off his clothes, plunged into the waves, and swam for the shore. He too was drowned.

Fierce and disastrous storms and floods began in Great Britain on the 25th and continue as the month expires. High winds and heavy rains have blown down buildings and flooded all the low-lying lands. The storm has raged for several days, and snow has also fallen heavily. The towers of the new Law Court buildings have rocked so that pedestrians were warned away from the vicinity, and the gale has done great damage to buildings in Driffield, Preston, and Fleetwood. The mails were delayed, and the sea wall at Bridlington was seriously damaged. Rivers overflowed their banks, and much of the low country in Ireland was inundated. People have been obliged to flee from their houses and great distress prevails. Terrific gales swept over the Severn valley during the night of the 29th, and the sea has been so high that tidings of disasters to steamers are looked for hourly.

On the 30th of the month great snow slides swept down the mountain sides of Colorado, and buried miners and their buildings to destruction. One slide started at the top of Ruby Peak, near Irwin, and rushed with terrific velocity down toward the valley. It travelled a mile and a half, carried away all of the shaft houses and machinery belonging to four mines, and buried eight men. In three other places in Colorado slides occurred that day which resulted in disaster and death.

On the last day of the month came the news of the wreck of the Italian steamer Ansonia off the coast of Tripoli, in which twenty persons perished.—N. Y. Sun.

A VISION.—Rev. vii. 9-17.

FLEE AS A BIRD.

Whence come they? Whence come they? this wonderful crowd
That cannot be counted? They seem like a cloud;
Their garments are gleaming with light from the skies,
And peace, that is perfect, looks out from their eyes.

They come from the ranks of the greatest and least;
Among them are martyrs, and prophet, and priest;
And still, and forever, the song that they sing
Is love of the kingdom and love of the King.

Among them are faces that once were so dear;
Long, long have we missed them; but lo! they are here!
Through faith did they conquer; they bear from afar
His name on their foreheads, as bright as a star.

They witness for Jesus, this wonderful crowd,
As round the bright throne they float like a cloud;
And still, and forever, the song that they sing
Is love of the kingdom and love of the King.

EGYPT IN PROPHECY.

"In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a Savior, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. And the Lord shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the Lord, and perform it. And the Lord shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the Lord, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them. In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land: whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance."—Isa. xix. 18-25.

The irrepressible "Eastern Question" has entered upon another phase. Egypt, the land of wonders, is once more prominently before the world, and under aspects and international relationships morally and politically unlike any of the past. Whatever statesmen and diplomatists may do, the intelligent believer in the Divine supremacy over nations has this noble advantage, that he is sure the Divine purpose will be completely realized. Party politics to him are matters of indifference. As a free citizen he has a right to choose his political school, and to tell you frankly which it is; but he is far enough from thinking that his party is necessarily that which Providence will honor as the instrument of its will in the accomplishment of predicted issues. There lies before us the beautiful landscape to which the finger of prophecy points. It may be reached speedily, as if by express train, or it may be a long way off, though apparently near, because of movements like those of the pilgrim Israelites from Egypt to Palestine in the days of old, but the certainty of arrival there exactly at God's time is beyond doubt. What is written must come to pass, for the writers were under unerring guidance. "No prophecy of Scripture cometh of private interpretation; for prophecy came not of the will of man, but men had utterance from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit." Words indited by God's Spirit fall not to the ground.

This is rock! We therefore build here, in positive certainty of the ultimate fact declared by the prophets, although we may be utterly unable to describe the process by which God will accomplish his design. We may imagine that international diplomacy will take such shape as we think will facilitate the declared purpose, but what is our imagination worth in the vast sphere upon which the All-Seeing looks, and in which he works, adapting means to end and cause to effect with unerring wisdom? What the political complications of our conduct in Egypt may be I know not, but I know by the word of truth that a day comes when the Lord shall say, "Blessed be Egypt my people, and Syria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." That is cheering information, joyous intelligence to the Christian who longs for the time when the Lord shall be the recognized Master of the world. That is something to find in the "Scriptures that cannot be broken!" It is enough for us at present, that is to say, enough for faith. It is our duty and privilege to believe the word of him who sees the end from the beginning. How he will do what he has promised is not an element that fits itself comfortably into the idea of simple faith. Our anxiety for details is evidence of latent unbelief, not of unquestioning reliance on the Word that cannot fail. But God will have the confidence of his children, he desires it, requests it, should have it always; hence, with all the wealth of information he has given us respecting final [illegible] there is often [illegible] respecting processes. This is precisely what a little reflection would lead us to expect. If God says, "I will do this," whatever it may be, it is ours to accept the declaration as proof absolute that it shall be done, not only when details of the mode of operation are kept back, but even when appearances, or existing facts, seem to make the accomplishment of the purpose impossible. "Thus saith the Lord," should be enough always and everywhere for men—and it would be if they knew the glorious Speaker—without any information as to the arrangements he had made to realize his purpose. The principle I wish to emphasize by these remarks is embodied in the words, "Have faith in God." He hath spoken and he will bring it to pass, all appearance to the contrary notwithstanding.

The lips that once sung the sweet | children of God. We have the best [illegible]

The Egypt of Joseph and Moses can never fail to interest the student of history; the Egypt of the miraculous exodus of a vast multitude of slaves, from whom were to spring the Hebrew legislators and princes, and God's seers and poets, must claim the attention of the statesman and the philosopher; and the Egypt in which the Child Jesus found asylum from the bloodthirsty Herod can never cease, for all these and other reasons, to hold a special place in the heart of the Christian, notwithstanding its centuries of degradation among nations, and its blind worship of the Arabian antichrist, Mohammed.

What can be more suggestive than the "Miracle in Stone," the Great Pyramid, which has of late years occupied so much thought and excited so much wonder? Is not this "a witness to the Lord in the Land of Egypt?" By whom, when, and why was this marvellous structure erected? Shall we err if we say that the architect was under Divine direction, as much as Moses was in the construction of the tabernacle of testimony (Ex. xxv. 40; Heb. viii. 5) or David when instructing Solomon regarding the building of the Temple? (1 Ch. xxviii. 11, 12, 18, 19). We think not. It is wise always to take the least difficult theory in dealing with problems regarding which there is no direct information; therefore we conclude that the Lord inspired the builder of this "sign and witness" for himself, which has stood from prehistoric times simply as a mysterious wonder, but is now in the closing days of the Christian dispensation brought [illegible] to confirm Divine truth and to [illegible] Judaism. This is the easiest solution of the marvel. Every other hypothesis is beset with unconquerable difficulties, but this makes all plain. It is God's sign and witness, and it surely suggests that the inhabitants of Egypt shall ere long abandon false worship and a false prophet, and serve the God of Israel as his people. What a wonder is this! An inspired witness in stone distinctly marking the dispensations, Jewish, Christian, and millennial, of which the inspired writings of the Bible speak! But after all why wonder? Is not creation itself a marvellous demonstration of the infinite wisdom and omnipotence of the Godhead? This is, at least, the view that God's scientific philosophers, the writers of the Bible, took of it. They say, among many such utterances:—"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race. His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof" (Psa. xix. 1-6). Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are very religious. For as I passed by, and beheld your objects of worship, I found an altar with this inscription, To an unknown God. What therefore ye ignorantly reverence, that declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; made all nations of men (margin) of one blood, to dwell on all the face of the earth, and determined the times appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he is not far from every one of us, for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. And the times of this ignorance God overlooked: but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent: because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by the man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts xvii. 22-31). "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse" (Rom. i. 19-20).

But the prophecy in our text must be fulfilled in its season. The "day" is coming when the Egyptians shall "know the Lord." This breathes consolation to the Christian's heart, amidst the horrors of war and the uncertainty of statesmanship and diplomacy. The Turkish Empire is breaking up rapidly. Egypt, one of the richest gems in its crown, is now under the protection of England, and is likely to remain so. The Sultan is both morally and physically, unable to rule, and we are not the people to abandon to anarchy or despotism any nation over which we have authority. We do not seek additions to our vast empire, but when the weak stretch out their hands to the strong, whose reputation warrants confidence, we dare not refuse the help sought. The Turk, once the terror of Europe, is now its scorn. He is not, indeed he never was, fit to rank as a member of civilized nations. His day is over. The last sands are dropping from his glass. Foundered on imposture and force, the Koran and the sword, this insolent power must lie and sink amidst its native corruption, without the remotest prospect of resurrection. The Mohammedans commence their era with the Hegira—an Arabic word signifying flight—on the 16th of July, A. D. 622. On the 17th of July, 1882, the lightning spark through the wire told the world that Alexandria was in the hands of the English—1,260 years to a day! So wonderfully exact is Divine prophecy! Mohammedanism is now therefore moribund along with the empire to which it gave birth. They die together, and the world will be well rid of both. Islam and Turk must shortly pass away forever!

But what is to become of the fair lands which have been "trodden down" and "defiled" by this "worst of the heathen?" (Ezek. vii. 24). That is the great problem of to-day. All nations are asking it. All cabinets are pondering over it. This is, in a word, the profound "Eastern Question, which will give the world no rest until it be solved. The Christian student can name the only possible solution of the question which perplexes the princes and wise men of this world; but the Christian student's standpoint is one which the wise men and princes of the nations will never occupy until the irresistible logic of accomplished facts compels them to acknowledge a Divine hand in a matter which they thought within the sphere of "practical politics." In the estimation of statesmen, international diplomacy is the real ruler of the world, whose decisions, if thought expedient, are to be enforced by fire and sword. In the conviction of men who read and understand the Word of God, events are surely tending to the realization of his will in relation to the entire world. His will has to be "done on earth," or the Master would never have put such a prayer in the lips of his disciples. That prayer has been spoken countless millions of times by human lips, no doubt, in the majority of instances, without a correct idea of its meaning; but it has to be answered, and will be, for Christ's words are not to be thrown into the waste-paper baskets of the world's rulers.

The discovery of the lost tribes of Israel, especially of the representatives of Ephraim, the chosen head of the prophetic family, is undoubtedly an essential factor in the solution of the Eastern Question at this supreme crisis. Even those who have not yet realized the fact, that England has for centuries been doing the work, and establishing the characteristics assigned to Ephraim, admit, and cannot possibly deny, with the prophetic page open before them, that Israel must be on the scene before Judah can obtain a settlement in Palestine. No solution of the Eastern Question is possible till then. But where is the princely younger son of Joseph, who obtained the pre-eminence through the prophetic legacy of his venerable grandfather? Lost? Impossible! "Blind?" Yes, assuredly. He is the blind people whom the Lord has been leading by a way they knew not for thousands of years; but now "they are at hand to come." England will do the work assigned to Israel in the future, as it has been doing in the past; and that for the best of reasons. No other nation can have the rule in Palestine, and the protectorate over Syria and Egypt; for, in addition to our illustrious patriarchal ancestry, we have received, as no other nation has, the Word of the living God, and bent the knee in adoring homage to his glorious Son, through whom, and on whose account, he is about to work a marvellous revolution in the earth until all nations hail him King!

Jerusalem, the ancient capital of the land which the Owner of all lands granted to Abraham and his seed, Jesus has told us should be "trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled." Everything indicates that the period thus described is at hand. The Turk has trodden down and defiled the holy land. He has set up a temple to an impostor on the ruins of the Temple of God on the holy hill of Zion. But a new age dawns after a long and dismal night; and the prophet sings about the mountains of Israel:—

"But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown: And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded. And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men. Thus saith the Lord God: Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations; therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God. Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. xxxvi. 8-15).

That Egypt, Syria, and all other nations will be blessed through Israel, the Lord's "inheritance," in the day of his manifestation as the Anointed of Jehovah, when he shall be "King over all the earth," is certain. If we think that our nation is set apart for this high destiny, it should lead us to deep humility and much searching of heart. Our responsibility, as the custodians of the Holy Scriptures, is unspeakably great. Let us live under the power of the truths they teach, and to the glory of him whose character and work give them their inestimable value and glory!

I conclude with two suggestive extracts from, "Good Tidings to Israel and the Church."

"One very remarkable result of the question," says the editor, "has been the Divine isolation of England. Instrumentally, this has been brought about by the action of Germany. France has been conquered by her own fears, and has somewhat ignominiously retreated, throwing overboard the government of M. de Freycinet in her flight. Another link is thus formed and exhibited in the chain of Britain's Providential Government. . . . Christ himself, the King of Israel . . . has overruled our destinies! . . . The leading French papers testify as to the issue: The Temps, dwelling upon the acknowledgment which appeared in Prince Bismarck's organ, the North German Gazette, that the importance of English interests at Suez does not permit that Power to submit them to the adjudication of an International Commission, says, 'the Conference will disappear, and leave no trace of its existence beyond a practical identification of the complete ascendancy of Europe before English omnipotence in the East.' The Monitor also states that 'German diplomacy has resulted in replacing the Anglo-French Condominium in Egypt by the British Protectorate,' and asks where is the success for Europe?'

"Contemplating the whole situation, we get a most startling demonstration of our identity with Ephraim—'My heir of the world.' Strange indeed it is that man who professes to believe all that the prophets have spoken,' and to acknowledge the Hand of God in history, should be so blind as not to see it! The facts are briefly and simply these: God brought us, when we were an inconsiderable people, out of Assyria, as Sharob Turner proves; and he has given us a secure and peaceable habitation in these Isles of the Sea. Here he has caused us to 'renew our strength,' to 'spread out our branches,' to 'overflow,' and 'run over the wall,' even to Canada, the United States, and the Rocky Mountains on the West. In the East, he has given us our vast Indian Empire, as large as the Continent of Europe without Russia, with an area of 1,486,319 square miles, and a population of 240 millions.' And still we are multiplying 'as the sand of the sea!' By an irrevocable Law of Destiny, therefore, we must proceed to assert our supremacy in the very quarter, aye, the very Land, which Jehovah gave on oath to Israel 'for an everlasting possession!' Our acquisition of Cyprus, of the Armenian Protectorate, and now, practically, of that over Egypt, show how the wind is blowing; i. e., how the Divine Spirit is moulding the future of the nations! Even our envious rivals, in their own despite, are forced to admit the overwhelming superiority of our actual interests and claims in these ancient lands; and though doubtless we shall have to fight, and fight hard, with the Military Despotism, and to pass through great national tribulation, ere we take final possession of the country from the Nile to the Euphrates, that this is our assured destiny is plain to the most unprophetic observer. But mark, good reader, unless God has broken his oath, to do this is the exclusive right, prerogative, and inheritance of Israel!

"Nor must the magnificent moral goal, to which we are thus being led, be lost sight of. 'All they who take the sword shall perish with the sword.' The nations that depend on mere brute force, and human state-craft, must succumb. Sin, by a Divine Nemesis, becomes its own punishment. By war shall 'the nations that delight in war' be destroyed! This is the end decreed to all the 'bloated armaments' and military science of the 19th century. And the nation that shall have dominion shall acquire and hold it for ever, not by its own might and wisdom, though it has both, but because it is of the Covenant which God made with Abraham; because to it are committed the oracles of God; and it has been 'raised up,' quickened, and energized by the Gospel of Christ, and in order to disseminate it. Thus 'shall righteousness and praise spring forth before all the nations.'

"Praise, praise to the King of Israel, our God, Declare, O declare ye, his glories abroad!
For lifo love Rowed'th on, Pra-e and fell as a river,
And the mercy endureth for ever and ever."

[illegible] is now proved beyond doubt that one [illegible] sometimes recently discovered at Tanis, [illegible] of Ramses II., the oppressor of Israel, the Pha[illegible] who knew not Joseph. For many years Ramses had held the children of Israel in bondage. He made a treaty with the Moabites, who had settlements on the eastern part of Egypt, and got rid of them, not before they had treacherously betrayed the interests of Israel. He annexed Goshen, the Delta, where the Israelites were settled, to his kingdom. He became master of Lower as well as Upper Egypt. By a decree in his twenty-first year he deprived the Israelites of all the privileges and immunities which Apophis, Joseph's Pharaoh, had granted them, and as sojourners and strangers rendered them liable to the hardest services demanded of subject tribes. He had cities built in the Delta, and fortifications. There is not a single ruin in any part of it on which his name is not found engraved. Seven of the Temples of Thebes were erected by him. In all the cities of Nubia, Egypt, and the Delta, his works appeared in Temples, or monuments, or other buildings. A chain of fortifications on the east of Egypt was reared by him, extending for one hundred and sixty miles. The history in the first chapter of Exodus tells us where he found his workpeople.

[illegible] title of a series of Lectures by Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, on the Great Pyramid of Egypt, and a deeply interesting book it is. Professor Piazzi Smyth's fascinating work, "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," is the storehouse from which the writers of books and pamphlets on this subject have largely drawn. It is undeniable that a considerable amount of Rabbinism has found its way into print under the "Identification" excitement; but we ask who was to test all such stuff as [illegible] Let us see what Isaiah says by "the altar and the pillar to Jehovah in the land of Egypt." If in this we wish to know. Make waste paper, if you please, of three-fourths of the "Identity" publications. We shall shrink to very little "the devil" but tell us plainly how we have come to do the work prophetically assigned to Joseph's youngest son. Tell us this, and we ask no more; but don't ignore it without examination.

"They are far more worthy of the appellation than those Christians who claim that their exclusive honor, whilst their errors sink ingloriously to [illegible] we to the confession that the million mortals of the Universe, with man as the unsurpassed marvel of the series, came into existence without an intelligent overpowering God. These philosophers are three-score-years. The belief of the sceptic is of enormous capacity—credits without an adequate cause! The faith of the Christian is a very simple affair compared with this!

"Early in his so-called prophetic career Mr. Seiss's [illegible] formed a conspiracy to kill him. Warned of the imminent danger, he left Mexico, accompanied only by Absalom, and concealed himself in a cave near at hand. Here he spent three days undiscovered, after which he arrived safely at Acapulco, but not without danger. This credit, from which his followers commence their era, is known as the Hegira, or flight."

Daily Life.

"It is daily life that tests us—the manner of man we are. It is not our prayers, it is not our profession, but it is the tone of daily intercourse and conduct that decides how we stand. The little homely graces; the cheerful, every-day amenities; the Christ-like uttering itself not so much in conscious act as in unconscious influence; not so much in deeds as in that subtle aroma which without name exudes from the saintly soul, to equals and inferiors; to agreeable and disagreeable, to rich, poor, ignorant; to young, to old; bearing burdens, accepting crosses, seeking no great thing to do, content to put self by, and be a servant of the lowest—these are the fruits of only one root.—Fruits that none may counterfeit.—Ware.

I spent the last Friday, Saturday and Sunday in January with the church at Dundee, in Blackford Co., Ind. The attendance was large and the interest very good. The church at that place is not large in numbers, but they are strong in the faith, and are doing a good work in the Lord's vineyard.

Since writing you before I have held a series of meetings in Lake County, this state. In all preached sixteen discourses. There was a good interest manifested throughout, and the meetings were well attended. One man was immersed into the faith of the gospel, and I hope others may be induced to become obedient in the near future.

Many persons are becoming impressed with the faith that we are near the close of this dispensation. But alas! how many are wholly indifferent to their duties to God, in order that they may be prepared to meet the Lord at his coming.

Our health is very good.

DEAR UNCLE:—After so long a time I write to let you know of our whereabouts, and to renew for the dear old RESTITUTION. As we have not seen a copy of it since last October, we feel as if we can no longer do without it. We like to hear through it from those of like precious faith with us, as we have no one here to speak of Christ's glorious kingdom to come, and of his reign on earth. We long to be able to have some one of our preachers come here and give the people a few gospel sermons. If any brethren can come we will do all we can to assist them.

We hear by letter that Sister Shultz of Eagle Creek, Ind., has fallen asleep. Oh, what a comfort to know that when Jesus comes she will come forth to reign with him. Take courage, Brother Shultz, and mourn not as those without hope, but wait patiently for the coming of the Lord.

Editor Restitution:

[illegible] a brief report of our [illegible] Eagle Creek. In November, while at the Plymouth Conference, I was called to Eagle Creek to attend the funeral of Sister Shultz. Remained in that neighborhood some two weeks. Held eight meetings at Hamlet with good attendance, then back to Eagle Creek and held several interesting meetings, after which I returned home, where, owing to a kick from a horse, and the severe illness of my wife, I remained till in January, when the brethren sent word there was a prospect of doing some good there. Accordingly I started out, and after three days of riding in a buggy I arrived at my destination, and found brethren Barnhill and Beebe already there.

Commenced meetings on Friday before the third Sunday, which were well attended considering the extremely cold weather. Held in all fifteen meetings, had three additions, two by baptism and one on former baptism. We feel that good seed was sown that may yet be harvested. On the last Sunday evening we met to commemorate the Lord's death.

I wish to say a few words on the subject of sending out preachers. We are frequently admonished to go out and trust the Lord, and he will provide. Did not Jesus say Go ye into all the world, etc.? Certainly he did; but who did he give this commission to? To the apostles. Are we apostles? No. Then I think we will do well to consult an apostle on this subject. Some might think that preaching would stop with the apostles. This is not correct, for we find the apostle Paul instructing Timothy to commit to others that shall be able to teach; and the same apostle says in Rom. x. 14, they could not believe on him whom they had not heard, hence in order to hear they must have a preacher. Then the apostle says, how can they preach except they be sent? Now if preachers have to be sent in order that the gospel shall continue to do its work, we would ask, What or where is the sending power? It seems from 1 Cor. iv. 9, and many other texts, that the Church is the sending power. But it seems to me that the Church is often-times saying Come, instead of sending the preacher where the truth has never been sounded out.

Brethren would it not be well to see to this matter, for if we have a duty to do in this direction and neglect it, we will be accountable for it. There are many corners in the State of Indiana where the truth would take deep root, if a preacher could be sent so he would not have to go a beggar. There are many preachers who can say, Here am I, send by me.

Your brother waiting for the kingdom. H. R. CARTER.

CENTERVILLE, W. T.

Editor Restitution:

I presume it will not be out of place for me to let the brethren know what the truth is doing here. Centerville is a small station on the N. P. R. R., or that part of the road which runs from Kalama on the Columbia river to New Tacoma on the Sound; a very nice quiet little village, surrounded by the dense forests that are characteristic of the country lying west of the Coast Range of mountains. In our travels west we have finally located in this quiet retreat, seemingly separated from the outside world. But God in his mercy has designed that all should hear the truth, so after being here a few weeks it became known that we spoke in public, and that the views we set forth were vastly different from what they were accustomed to hear. Hence being a new thing, we were subjected to a series of questions, and the infidel part of the community, which is not a small proportion of the people here, loudly called upon us to sustain that book from which we obtain our faith. So we were invited to give our views to the public, with the understanding first that our faith should be a consistent one, one that their minds could comprehend, and our hope a hope of real things; after which we promised to prove that the Bible was a consistent book, and God's word.

With this understanding we commenced our work, speaking first on the kingdom of God, and the saints' inheritance. By this time Brother R. H. Sherrell of Seattle, came to my assistance, and ably set forth our views concerning these matters, and sustaining the authenticity of the Scriptures. Thank God our labor was not in vain. Brother Sherrell immersed three before he returned home, since which time six more have put on Christ by baptism, and we have every reason to believe that a number more will yet embrace the truth.

The blessed part of it is that we had the honor of burying with Christ in baptism Brother and Sister Woodhorn and their son, a bright and talented young man, who have been arrowed [illegible] infidels caused by the [illegible] two current. [illegible] ability of his truth.

Our brethren here though young in the faith, are earnest and zealous workers, and we anticipate a glorious time in the future. We now number seventeen members, and will soon commence to build us a house of worship, the lumber being mostly given by Mr. A. W. High, who has boldly affirmed his disbelief in the Scriptures, and whose wife we have immersed. We have met however with some opposition by the Campbellite friends who have been reviewing our arguments. Such an interest has been awakened, however, that the members of this church have requested their Elder to give us a part of his time, and we will commence a reply to their views on the kingdom soon. Hope and believe the result will be good. Hoping to hear from our more able brethren in the east, and requesting their prayers in our behalf, we now close our brief letter.

May God's blessing rest upon all the dear brethren everywhere, is the prayer of your brother in the one faith.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 19.

Points.—Two classes taken of National accusations: 1. Political, social, and civil: a., this age closed. The religious or prophetic aspect; or, the Coming of Messiah's age view.

British Phase. — Propriety of the name.—Elements, growth and mission of Great Britain stated and outlined.

Prelude — Two classes of men are highly interested in our great national movements in the Easter Hemisphere: a. The worldly politician, who sees nothing but the present age and human aggrandizement. b. The prophetic student, who reads all their acts, revolutions, and developments by the light of revelation. The one knows no agent but man; no success nor any advancement that is not the product of his brain, and the work of his muscle; the other sees nothing but the plans and movements of the Almighty. Hence we have two widely distinct classes of national expositors. Jehovah is writing the doom of empires upon the palace walls of their monarchs; but their wise men read nothing to these characters, but ages of peace and prosperity. Hence Messiah's approach gives them no warning. Read the secular journals. What could be learned by the statesmen of those periodicals relative to Christ's return and his Kingdom? The alarm of Christ's approach may make a ripple upon the deep of human occupations, but, as the pebble upon the lake the wave it creates soon returns to its quite waters.

In our investigations we follow the natural [illegible] that God revealed

British Phase.—We have this great truth distinctly shown in all the Eastern national movements, that each nation puts a new phase upon the so-called Eastern question. This is particularly true of Great Britain whose origin, growth, and future mission, and its final destiny we purpose to show. Its name.—We have selected the name British, because it is the name of the empire, it being more comprehensive than English, or Anglo-Saxon. It will allow us to include her colonies:—

The name British, Briton is supposed to be Celtic from brit, painted, as the ancient Britons painted their bodies Blue. The term Britannicæ Insulæ, was applied by Julius Cæsar to the British Isles; Albion, (England and Scotland), and Hibernia (Ierne), Ireland. Aristotle B. C. 381–322, knew and describes Albion and Ierne. Ptolomy in the second century first called Ierne Little Britain, and Albion Great Britain. Such appear to be the origin of the present name of the British empire. We shall now hasten to consider the empire itself; building our remarks upon the basis of this cardinal truth, that God is the Originator, the Governor, and the Disposer of all nationalities "ruling," as Nebuchadnezzar, after the sad experience of Jehovah's supreme power expresses himself, "All the inhabitants of the earth (are) reputed as nothing: and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and (among) the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou? Dan. iv. 35.

1. We shall outline the British empire as it now exists. 2. We shall investigate its origin, and the race that has given it vitality. 3. We shall trace that people in their migrations and national growth. 4. The destiny or mission of the British empire will then be considered.

I. British empire as it now exists.—A small island (90,000 sq. m.) containing an area, less than one third that of Texas, has given birth to an infant which, through a series of years, has grown up into a being of such gigantic proportions, that, with its arms outstretched, it has drawn into its bosom the great globe itself. Such an effect must flow from an adequate cause. That little Island, with a fraction under 90,000 square miles (89,600 sq. m.) has now under its imperial domination eight million square miles, distributed over parts of every continent, and the ocean islands. An island that can give birth to such an empire, is worthy of the highest admiration. Let us walk about the island, and see where lies the secret of its power. Let us follow its coast outline, viewing its harbor system; pass over its mountain ranges, through its valleys, tracing its lakes and rivers, noting their characteristics, view the soil as adapted to vegetable products. Having examined its surface as to its natural features, let us descend below its surface and examine its geological structure, and the variety of its mineral wealth. Having outlined its physical formation and its natural resources, let us notice its monuments of human industry.

Let the reader place before him an accurate map of the Island of Great Britain while he reads and investigates the following sketch. Great Britain (the island) in pre-historic times was a part of the European, or German continent: now disjoined by a water passage (Str. of Dover), about 21 miles wide. It lies between 49 deg. 57 min. 30 sec. and 58 deg. 40 min. 24 sec. north lat. and 1 deg. 46 min. east long. and 6 deg. 13 min. west. The waters surrounding it are the North sea, English channel, St. George's channel, Irish sea, and the Atlantic ocean. Following its coast line from the Strait of Dover toward the east and north we pass the following physical objects of note-worthy interest. The coast line from Dover to the northern extremity of Scotland is very tortuous and exhibits an infinite variety of natural scenery. Its water outlets, its bold head lands, chalk cliffs, its low sandy shores, its numerous harbors, its inlets and firths, present to the eye of the coaster a perpetual kaleidoscope. He never tires of the endless changes in the objects of his delighted vision. The first noted river opening in the Thames, the natural drainage of 6,000 sq. m. 2. The Wash, the common receptacle of five rivers. 3. The Humber, the receptacle of the Yorkshire Ouse, the Trent, and some other small streams. 4. The Tyne. 5. Firth of Forth. 6. The Tay. 7. The Dee. 8. The Don. 9. Moray Firth. 10. The Dornoch Firth. Passing along the west coast line, we find the Clyde in Scotland, and the Severn, the great river of S. W. England. On the south and east, the river system numbers about four times as many, as on the west and north. The mountains and hills lie principally to the north and west. The south eastern division of the Island seems to be the portion designed for agriculture. The mountains and uplands gather the waters from the clouds. From these fountains flow the streams which irrigate the low-lands. The British Island, (containing England and Scotland) has one of the most perfect systems of drainage and irrigation to be found on the globe. This arises from its varied and peculiar surface configuration. When Jehovah constructs any continent or island, and furnishes it as a habitation for any part of the human family, he shapes and furnishes it for the special use of some one particular family. He certainly has the knowledge and the power to adapt the means to the end.

It is safe to say that Great Britain was once a European Peninsula. But, in the revolution of ages, it was designed to be a retreat for one special people, a quiet home. For that purpose, he cut it off from the main land, and made it into a beautiful island home, and furnished it with every necessary product and adapted it in all its attributes to the requirements of the intended occupants. The shape, bay, and the resources of the island sustain these remarks. It has been peopled by Europeans; and with these nations occupying north western Europe, such as France, Germany, and Denmark. It has had for centuries a large portion of its intercourse. Is there any thing in the structure and in the face of the land to prove that to have been its Maker's original purpose?

With the admission that the course of the rivers and of all flowing waters of any country indicate its general slope, place before you a map of Europe with its surrounding islands. Trace the rivers as they flow from their mountain sources to the North sea and to the English channel; bear in mind that harbors are generally made by, or are associated with the river systems. The French and German rivers flow towards the mouths of the principal British rivers, demonstrating the fact that these countries face each other. Their harbors follow the same law of intercourse. Why not admit that those countries were thus purposely constructed? The principal rivers and harbors of Ireland follow the same law. The Clyde in Scotland and the streams of north Ireland follow the law of commercial intercourse.

Ireland has one large river that flows towards the south and west, the island of Great Britain has one large river; also, flowing in the same direction—(the Severn).

By what agency has Great Britain been made to look Europe in the face? Its geological structure will reveal the agency. The earth's crust (some 50 miles thick) is composed, principally, of layers deposited in minute particles from water where they were held in solution. The law of gravity would require the strata thus formed, originally to be horizontal. What would have been the result had they remained in their original, unbroken, horizontal position? Would the waters have been gathered into seas and oceans? Would there have been any dry land or any rivers? The sinking and upheaving of the earth's strata, were, therefore, about the first of the progressive changes of the earth to render it a living home for air-breathing animals. Breaking and tilting the strata, so as to form various angles with the horizon, was God's method of gathering the waters into "seas," and of draining the "earth."

For a more definite illustration of the Divine method of drainage and irrigation let us examine the geology of the island of Great Britain: commencing with its first geological period (Laurentian system, the most ancient rock exposed,) as it was originally deposited. It was then the bottom of the seas which are now its boundaries. Such was its position during the ages of deposits of Cambrian, Silurian, and the lower strata of the Carboniferous measures. (During the coal measure deposits it was, in part, alternately above and below the ocean surface. Through the periods of the Permian, Triassic, Lias, Oolite, Wealden (fresh water deposit) Cretaceous, Pliocene, and Pleistocene measures, while this part of the earth's crust (89,600 sq. m. was being prepared for air-breathing animals, and especially for man their highest type, it was covered with the ocean waters.

Being furnished with all of its mineral resources, it is detached and elevated permanently above the sea: tilted up from the n. n. w. so as to dip toward the s. e.: facing Germany, from which country it was principally to be peopled. A vertical plain passing from the under surface of the crystalline gneiss of the Laurentian system in the east, south eastern coast on the North sea, upward to the coast, will show a section in which may be seen a sample of all the geological strata. British rocks form the typical series of the earth's strata." No country of equal size, can be said to equal Great Britain in mineral resources. Passing from the Hebrides n. w. of Scotland, along the western shores of Sutherland and Ross where the Laurentian rocks appear, we step on to the Cambrian rock platform in Cumberland and travel on that series through Anglesey, and North Wales; these rocks are slate-stones, gritstones, and slates. From this platform we step on to the higher platform, called the Silurian, one of great extent. It is developed mostly in South Wales, and is composed of immense layers of shales, slate, and sandstone, with limestones. The British area spread over a large portion of Scotland, except the large troughs of more recent deposits in Central Scotland. This formation contains the lead mines of Wanlockhead and Leadhills. Leaving this platform, we reach, in our upward progress, the Carboniferous platform, which contains the coal strata and principal iron ores. The extend from Bristol channel to Cheviot hills, including 15 detached coal-fields. Its sandstones, and limestones are of great value. We next step on to the Permian platform of magnesian limestone, and sandstone, both valuable for building purposes. Going south eastward we rise on to the Triassic, Lias, Oolite, Wealden, Cretaceous, Eocene, Pliocene, and Pleistocene deposits, on the coasts of Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, and Kent. Such a geological structure has the Almighty seen fit for some wise purpose, to give to this little island. He has laid its foundation deep. "The earth (is) the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; and the world, and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon (under) the seas and established it upon the floods." Psalm xxiv.

THE EIGHTH DAY.

The Day of Deliverance and devotion to God.

There may be very few who have ever traced out the profound import of the ordinances and events that distinguish "the eighth day." Their significance may transcend all human conception. Let us notice those most marked, pertaining to the life of man and beast, for "this present world," and perhaps of "that which is to come."

1. "The first born of thy sons thou shalt give to me; likewise shalt thou do with thy oxen, and thy sheep." Ex. xiii. 2; xxii. 29, 30. But "all the first born of thy sons thou shalt redeem." Ex. xxxiv. 18; Num. iii. 40–51.

2. The first born sons were circumcised, consecrated, on the eighth day to God, and the first born of cattle and sheep were to be "seven days without the dam," and on "the eighth day thou shalt give it me." Ex. xxii. 30.

3. The lepers and the unclean were subjected to a special process of cleansing seven days, but it closed on the eighth day. These poisonal cleansings were for health and comfort, Lev. xiv. and xv. and extended into the eighth day. They breathed and embodied mercy, which required the eighth day, as still more fully unfolded in [illegible] was [illegible] Sabbath," which was seven days of course on the eighth day, Lev. xxiii. 11, foreshadowing the resurrection.

4. The outcome and crown of the grand national and memorial festivals of Israel, belonged to the eighth day. Lev. xxiii. 33–39; Num. xxix. 35; 1 Kings viii. 66. 2 Chron. vii. 9; Neh. viii. 18; Christ in John vii. 37, and Rev. vii. 9–17, seem of that same character.

On the eighth day also the triumphant ceremonies at the consecration of the Jewish temple were observed. Then the grand Hallel (Hallelujah chorus—Psa. xcvi–xcviii) was chanted and amplified with all the majestic music of harp and cymbal, that aided in sounding the praises of God—all as if in anticipation of the final anthem in "the song of Moses and the Lamb." Rev. xv. 1–4; xix. 1–6. The Jubilean year after the seven sabbatic years—forty-nine years—was "the eighth year."

Thus the full value of all the eighth day services, from the leper's cleansing to the Jubilee, may transcend all human apprehension, but to avoid mere verbiage, allow me to note further the climax in the wondrous significance of "the eighth day" of the gospel:

6. John the Baptist and the blessed Jesus were circumcised, Luke i. 59; ii. 21–32, and the gorgeous prophesy of Zacharias was uttered, and Simeon's record of salvation—a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people Israel, were on the eighth day. On this line up see the further fullness and blessedness of the eighth day events.

7. On the last day, that great day of the feast, (the eighth) Jesus stood and cried to our longing, thirsting humanity to come to himself, for living water." John vii. 37.

On that eighth day, which was the first of the week following, he rose from the dead, the "Victor." Matt. xxviii. 1–9. Nay further; it was on the same eighth day, (after the seven Sabbaths, forty-nine days) that we reach the fiftieth day, the Pentecostal out pouring of the Spirit. The inauguration of gospel ministry, and the first fruits of the heavenly harvest into the kingdom; when "the glory of the Lord shall fill the whole earth, and all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest."

Our Sabbatarian brethren may think these facts may tend to take the wind out of their sails, but "the first day," Acts xx. 7–11; 1 Cor. xvi. 2, was on the weekly reckoning of Israel "the eighth day." Let the facts stand. Believers may drink in the freedom of the victor's joy.

Please note.—The seventh day has its own place, which no other truth can disparage. But the personal and national cleansings noted in "the example of shadow of good things to come." Heb. viii. 5; x. 1, are made to culminate and consummate on the eighth day. Then on that day, our first day, we have the resurrection, the Pentecost, and our great apostle to the Gentiles, with the disciples gathered to break bread. Acts xx. 6, 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

Hence we walk in their steps, and so far in their spirit, while the seventh day service has neither altar, sacrifice, or officiating priest, or gospel precept! not one! Let us be wholly Christian—complete in him who is the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth. Rom. x. 4, 17; Col. ii. 10–24.

J. B. COOK.

"GUILTY BEFORE GOD."

"All the world guilty before God." "All shut up under sin." Gal. iii. 22. (Diaglott's rendering).

The Court of Heaven has set: the culprit man, has been tried, he has pleaded his case; it has been lost, and sentence has been passed.

Guilty! in awful capitalized letters stare him in the face, and sounds the death-knell in his ears, like one in a great prison-house he is shut up under sin. He has been "sold under sin," is a captive, a prisoner: sin reigns over him. He obeys it, but obeys it unto death. He is "dead in his sins." Col. ii. 13.

"Guilty, before God," "dead," in the eyes of God,—alas! poor man, what can you do? There you are; the doors are shut upon you, sin have no fines that can redeem, or worth that can justify. You may plan and scheme, and try to cover yourself with beautiful garments; [illegible] that will be [illegible] right in God's eyes, but on bringing them to him, they "are all filthy rags." Sin has made you naked. You may be very kind; your gifts may bless the poor; you may glory in that you wrong no one, defraud no one; you "speak the truth with your neighbor," no vile words pass your lips; you do not swear nor steal nor commit adultery. Your temper is controlled by your will.—Other men call you good. They praise you in the streets, and eulogize you in their verse. In their eyes you are rich, you have a good character; an unblemished reputation.

But oh! that sentence! It stands there still! "Guilty, before God." The righteousness that you have put on, is self-righteousness. All the good things that you have done, have been done to please yourself. You have wanted men to call you honorable and upright. The pride of standing high in society, has been your motive of action.

If you have thought of bring saved, it has been that these things would save you,—that God would not condemn you to death, when you have done so many things that were right. "Somehow," you have thought, "you would come out all right in the end." You have been appealed to, to accept God's terms—but have answered; "that you were as good as you ever expected to be," that "you never expected to join any church," nor "to be any better prepared to meet the great Judge of all."

Now, look at the matter calmly and seriously. Consider your ways, weigh your doings. Are you not, in talking in this way, setting yourself up against God? Are you not putting your will in direct opposition to his will?

He has made a law of pardon: in obeying that law, you become righteous, are brought into church relationship with a great brotherhood of obedient ones, and are prepared thereafter, by a course of discipline, for an inheritance with the saints in light. Have you obeyed that law? Have you been pardoned? Are you "free from the law of sin and death?" Dare you say that you are? "No! even no?"—and yet, "hoping that all will be right in the end!" How can you? how dare you? Cannot you see that God is only "the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus?"—that it is only "through faith in his blood, that you can have remission of sins that are past?" You may be righteous in your own eyes, but you are not righteous before God, you have not "the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ."

You are guilty — guilty, and "the wages of sin, is death." Yet you can be pardoned, by coming to the law of pardon. Those mighty hinges to the door of sin's prison-house can be made to swing back; you can be free. You have only to cry, for mercy from a truly repentent heart; and, nailing your old master, sin, to the cross, being buried by baptism into death, rise to walk in newness of life.

Baptism is God's law of pardon, you, as the guilty one, come to him there, asking, pleading, that he forgive.

He says "Yes! He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Do you believe him? Do you believe, that without shedding of blood there is no remission? Then will you not rest night nor day till that cleansing tide has washed away your sins.

Your doubt, your disobedience is guilt. God is not "willing that you should perish," but he wants you to feel and act as if you wanted to be saved—to show by your actions, that you believe him.

He says that the waters of baptism are like the ark that saved Noah,—that, in a figure—they now gave us. Yet you say, "that this is untrue, that it is not at all essential to be baptized," thus making God a liar.—Is not that sin? Are you not even thus condemned, —refusing the riches of his grace?"

Question yourself. Year after year he has waited, call'g, stretching out his arms to save you,—showing you the way. Age is creeping upon you: some of your heads are already silvered by passing time. In all of those years, how many of your thoughts have been his? How much of your time?

Have you given him the gift for which he asks? Have you given him yourself? Then do it now. Let no excuse keep you away from God. Let there be peace between you.

Oh! I pray you to accept the offered Savior. Be touched by the atoning blood, know you are healed, know you are forgiven.

There is only one door, one way, one name, one Savior.

Come and be justified freely, that God's great gift of eternal life may be yours in the coming ages of bliss and glory.

"Within the shadow of God's love
Lies doth transcendent thrill to pain
Faith veils earth's sorrows to its light
And straightway lives above the pain.

We are not lovers then; we share
The spotless gladness of the Son,
Not conquered, but victorious we;
Conquered and conqueror are one."

S. ROXANA WIXOM.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

To whom it may concern:

"O Jonathan! thou wast slain in thine high places, I am distressed for thee my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me, thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." 2 Sam. i. 26. "Love is as strong as death." Song viii. 6. "With their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness." Ezek. xxxiii. 31. "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Matt. xxiv. 12. "Let love be without hypocrisy." R. V. "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love: in honor preferring one another." Rom. xii. 9, 10. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. xiii. 10. "Faith which worketh by love availeth," "but by love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. v. 6, 8, 13, 14, 22, 23. "Let brotherly love continue." Heb. xiii. 1. "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." "He that loveth not, knoweth not God: for God is love." "Beloved, if God so loved us we ought also to love one another." "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." "He who loveth God loveth his neighbor also," and converse-ly. 1 John iv. 7, 8, 11, 16, 21. From your brother in love to all the brethren in Christ,

M. B. MORSE.

As a feature of the proposed commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther, it is proposed to restore the old Castle church at Wittenberg, upon whose doors the famous theses against indulgences were nailed in 1517. The building is in a state of general decay and neglect.

Selections.

CHRIST IS RISEN INDEED.

The theme of the apostles was not the death, but the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The death was thrown into the background: the resurrection was the luminous fact. They did not appeal to men's fears by threats of penalty, nor to their sympathies by pictures of love's suffering, but to their hopes and expectations by testifying to a triumphant and risen Messiah to return again and reign. His resurrection was the one tremendous fact in their thought. This was the miracle which attested the truth of Christianity; they rarely referred to any other. This was the fact that demonstrated the power of Christianity; and it was of Christianity only as a living and conquering power they spoke.

I do not know that it can be said that the church has made too much of Christ's crucifixion; but certainly it has made too little of his resurrection. When Paul said, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified," he certainly did not mean that he determined to preach about nothing but the crucifixion. The whole history of his life, the reports of his sermons, and such remains of his letters as have come down to us, negative this common, but narrow interpretation. The central theme of all his teaching, the One in whom and by whom the world was to be saved, was the One whom Jew and Roman had conspired ignominiously to crucify. This fact, that the world had rejected him, Paul never forgot, and never let his hearers forget; but it was not this aspect of the Messiah which he made most prominent. He preached a Messiah crucified by Jew and Roman, but demonstrated by [illegible] rection and ascension to [illegible] dom of God and the [illegible] God. Paul was the triumphant messenger of a triumphant King. Is it not true that "We soldiers of an injured King

Are marching to the tomb."

The soldiers of a King victorious are marching to victory over death and sin. It is to no funeral procession, but to a triumphant one the apostles summoned recruits. If one doubts this, let him open the book of Acts and read one after another of the apostolic addresses there recorded.

The atonement is the central fact of the gospel; but the atonement is not merely the remission of the future penalty of sin because another has suffered in our stead. It is the whole divine plan of Christ love bringing the wandering child back from his far country to his Father's roof again; it is the truth that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself; in Christ when teaching on the mount of beatitudes, when feeding the five thousand by the shore of Galilee's beautiful sea; when wrestling with the spirit of a world's sin and sorrow in the garden; when his ebbing life flowed out in the darkness which settled over Calvary; when he rolled away the futile stone and broke the fragile seal, and rose from the tomb in which love had laid him when fate had done its worst; when he ascended, and the shechinah which had glowed in tabernacle and temple, and over Bethlehem's plains, received him out of the apostles' sight, while he lives in the heart of heaven and in the hearts of his disciples, bringing them into oneness with God even now and here; when he comes back again in some future revelation in the same shechinah which enveloped him when he departed. All this is Christ's atoning work, and to the apostles its seal, if not its consummation, was not the cross nor the tomb, but the resurrection and the ascension. Christ's life is like the cloud which glowed with heavenly glory on the one side, but was darkness on the other. And we too often stay upon the dark side, and call in vain on others to put themselves beneath the oppressive shadow under which we needlessly live. It is the risen Christ who is the power of God unto salvation. I think it would be easy to show, if time and space permitted, that every revival era of the church has been an era in which Christ's resurrection, living power and promise of return have been prominent in the minds of preacher and of people.—Lyman Abbott.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 7, 1883.

P. O. ADDRESS—Mrs. Davis' address is — Mrs. A. E. Davis, Jerusalem, Palestine, Syria, Turkey in Asia, care of the American Consul, United States notes can be used in Jerusalem. A letter to her costs five cents postage and must not exceed a half ounce in weight. Persons that want to remit something to her can do it direct as above. Remember that correspondence costs her something. We are sending from time to time. We thus answer some questions. Mr. B. Steinhart's address is precisely the same; with change of personal name. It requires about a month for a letter to go there.

THERE never has been a crisis in the world's history more important than the one we are just about entering. Apostate Rome and Antichristian Islam are no longer the great dominating powers of the world. The "Times of the Gentiles" do not extend very far into the future. Jewish restoration has already commenced, and the reign of Messiah and the times of restitution are the soon coming events. The transition time will be a time of unprecedented calamity. What we have just now to say in this paragraph is—that papers of the character of THE RESTITUTION are the kind needed. Papers that herald the coming of the Lord and the establishment of his kingdom on earth, should be liberally supported, and widely scattered. Our brethren have been doing well, but let us keep doing. Our little sheet is going to many through the liberality of our friends. A few copies are finding their way round the world. As a missionary some scattering numbers go to the Eastern Hemisphere, and some to the Southern Zone. It is now read where our Savior lived, and taught, and performed his wonderful miracles—and where apostles preached. We are glad to learn that it is appreciated. Let us keep to the work. We can send it to other names half round the world as we have means. Some tracts, too, are needed in the far away climes. Work while the day lasts.

THE CALIPHATE.

In reading some remarks in a journal now on the table before us, we are [illegible]ularly struck with some ob[illegible] reporting the death [illegible]ch Statesman, Gambetta. [illegible] the effect that his decease "removes one of the greatest obstacles to the revival of Imperialism in France;" and the other, which is more germain to our topic, states confidently that his death "materially smoothes the way to the consolidation of British Power in Egypt." The question as to whether, when the Turk is driven out of Europe, there will be a revival of the Caliphate is said to be answered in the affirmative by all classes in the East. That England will not relinquish the advantages she has acquired by the late war in Egypt is admitted as a foregone conclusion. To hold the control of the Suez Canal, so vital to British interests in India, England must become the dominant power in Egypt. Napoleon clearly saw the advantages of gaining the ascendency in the land of the Pharaohs, "By seizing and holding Egypt, I grasp and command the destinies of the civilized world," was the pithy statement that shows the comprehensiveness of his plans when he invaded that country.

By the death of Gambetta, and owing to internal divisions and troubles since his death, France is in no condition to carry out the plans of the Great Emperor, or to interpose an insuperable obstacle in England's way in carrying out the designs of the French warrior. It is said that in the political complications that now so embarrass the Great European Powers, the easiest solution of the difficulties would be to let the Ottoman Power be driven out of Europe, leave England in possession of Egypt, give Russia a strong hold in Asia Minor, arrange that France and Italy shall have portions of Northern Africa, and give Austria and Germany compensating portions of the Turkish dominions, and thus readjust the boundaries of kingdoms. What would grow out of the downfall of Constantinople as the seat of Turkish empire would almost certainly be the re-establishment of the Caliphate. It is now argued that it would be policy for England to aid this movement, and by becoming the protector of the Caliphate obtain a general political influence over the 175,000,000 followers of the Prophet. Thus when the European Turkish Empire is no more, its controlling power over the hosts of Islam would simply pass into the hands of a British Power in the land of the Nile. The direction of Islamism could only be exercised through the intervention of a Mohammedan Headship—the Caliph. This political supremacy would open the way for a Railway system in the rich lands of the Delta, as well as through the valley of the Euphrates and Tigris, and, above all, fully prepare the way for the restoration of the exiled tribes of Israel to the land of their fathers.

FROM JERUSALEM.

On the 4th day of last November we forwarded a letter containing $13—which was made up by Jno. Harrison, Mrs. Adair, and Wm. Reed of Owen Sound, Ont.—to B. Steinhart, teacher of the Jewish Orphanage in Jerusalem. Today, March 6, we received the following reply in acknowledgement, which we place before our readers:

JERUSALEM, Feb. 7, 1883.

My Dear Sir:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. W. Reed's letter containing enclosures, and addressed and backed by you. I am thankful to you and the other kind friends of Israel for all help received towards the relief of my poor starving Russian brethren residing here, and, as they are in great distress, I would beg that you would continue to exert your kind influence in their behalf amongst the wide circle of your acquaintances and friends. Any help received will be gratefully and duly acknowledged in the reports which I shall publish from time to time. I have written to Mrs. Adair and Mr. Harrison, and shall feel grateful and obliged if you will kindly have them sent to their addresses.

The acceptance by you of the inclosed trifling souvenir of "those Holy Fields" will also gratify

Yours truly and thankfully,
B. STEINHART.

MR. S. A. CHAPLIN:
Editor of The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind:

P. S. Please assure Mr. Reed of my thankfulness and appreciation of his kindness. B. S.

A beautiful view of the "City of the Great King" and others of several of the "Holy Fields" were inclosed, for which the kind sender will please accept our sincerest thanks. Here is another chance for some of our friends and brethren, who are able to do something for the suffering descendants of the Father of the faithful, to help the needy. Is it not possible that by the term brethren—Matt. xxv. 40—destitute Israelites may be embraced as [illegible] Gentile believers?

We also received a letter from Mrs. Davis, bearing date of Feb. 7, from Jerusalem. She contributes an interesting article for the young readers of our Youths' Column, which we expect to give them under the proper head next week. It will interest older readers as well. In an accompanying note among other things she says:—"I received both your kind letters by the same mail, also the inclosed $5 [this was sent through us by Mrs. W.] for which please accept my warmest gratitude, as well as for all other favors so kindly rendered. . . . I wish you could see [these sacred places] with your eyes. I have always hoped you would come here, and still think you will. . . . There is a great stir here among the religious community. . . . Before this reaches you the flower cards for Mrs. W. [who sent the $5] will be on their way—spring flowers too. I am gathering them every day and I am sure she will be pleased with them." These few extracts are taken from a somewhat longer letter, and embrace the particulars, as to her thankfulness, the active religious feeling, and the early flowering spring time in Palestine. Her letter for the Youths' Column next week will be comparatively lengthy and quite interesting. Should like to see Jerusalem, but do not expect it in this age.

PALESTINE.

In our Oriental Sketches [illegible] this week, taken from J. L. Porter's narratives of Syria's Holy Places, we have an account of Jerusalem as it appeared "only a few years ago," Porter says of the city at the time of his visit:—"Jerusalem has no suburbs. There is no shading off of the city into the country—long streets radiating from a centre, then straggling houses, and villas, and gardens, such as we are accustomed to see in English towns. The moment you pass the gates of Jerusalem you are in the country—a country open, bare, without a single house, and almost desolate, etc."

Now this has all been changed. There is a new city growing up outside the walls. And this new city is represented as much more pleasant for homes and residences than the old city within the inclosing walls. True, the old historic associations will always impress the mind when the beholder contemplates the locality where the worship of a dispensation centered in and [illegible] sanctuary inhabited by the Divine [illegible] of Presence, and the site of that fallen [illegible] trained to appeal to the brethren and sisters in America, irrespective of creed, and difference of opinion on church government, and side issues; to join me and kindly allow me to be their almoner in disseminating these truths among those Hindoos, who, having been taught in the English schools and colleges in this country, are competent to read and understand the arguments on these glorious themes.

The pulpit is dead closed against us, and no newspaper here would live that advocated these truths, and the most liberal church in Madras—the Church of England—is fast going over to Rome, for, excepting owning allegiance to the Pope, the majority of the Church of England's priests (?) are fully Romanists. And the Non-conformist churches are so wedded to their creed that they will not read anything that is believed to have passed through our hand. There are just a few exceptions to this, which makes us still hope on. There are about half a dozen of us in Madras who are willing to make a stand for the Lord and his truths, but we are, I am sorry to say, very poor in this world's goods, and with the exception of Col. Armstrong have not much of this world's learning, so I ask you to help in this matter. I should like to get some pamphlets showing, from a Scriptural standpoint, the reasonableness of the faith we have in our Savior, who is the "Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace"; but I want the truths to be represented for the enlightenment of those who do not believe in our Bible, as while the Bible is freely and exhaustively referred to, I should like as much of heathen testimony as possible to be brought forward to substantiate what has been advanced from our glorious word of the living God.

I believe that Elder H. L. Hastings has been publishing some tracts for infidels, and although I have not seen one of them, yet I should think that something of that kind, but with special reference to those who do believe in Hindoo deities, could be advantageously written. A thousand of Bro. Hastings' tracts could be disposed of in a week to the boys and young men attending the schools and colleges in Madras. Now I believe that there is a great amount of latent talent amongst the brethren and sisters in America, so I appeal to you who can write on the subject to do so, and you who cannot write, but have means to print what is written, to [illegible] Mind, it is not [illegible] secure individual [illegible] government employ, but would be either a bower of wood or a drawer of water for the Lord's cause. And to this end I have given the means resulting from the sale of the books that Bro. Brown sent me, to a native brother named Paul, who has held all those truths for years, and practices medicine in herbs, to open a small shop in one of the main throughfares in a native part of Madras, leading to the general market, and I propose establishing a lending library at this place, and while Paul is gratuitously healing the poor, and dispensing his medicines for the body, he could overlook the keeping of this library and tract depot; so I want you to send to Bro. J. D. Brown, of the Bible Banner office, Philadelphia, Pa., all the books, pamphlets, papers, and tracts, bearing on these subjects, old and new, which you feel able to spare, for the purpose of stocking the same.

Bro. Paul says that the native boys learning English read with avidity the tracts that he gives them; and the natives of this country being of an inquiring, argumentative turn of mind, I do not doubt that a library such as suggested would take very well with them.

I have, for some months past, been getting portions of the subjects dealt with in the Banner and the books supplied by Brothers Brown and Wellcome, translated into Tamil and entitled, "Bible Banner," and in this way the truth has found its way into the hands of many native Christians. But these poor people are so much under the influence of their orthodox pastors and leaders, that a great difficulty is found in getting them to read on the subject.

Bro. Masillamani, who selects and translates for me, says that the subject has quite taken hold of the people of South Travancore. I wish I could say as much of Madras, but I cannot.

You will have some idea of the bitterness of feeling that exists when I tell you that I have thrice been refused baptism during the last ten years, simply because I believe that "man born of a woman hath but a short time to live," but that he or she that will be born of spirit will endure forever; and that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Hoping that these few lines will help to move you to assist me in this matter, I remain yours very affectionately in the Lord Jesus. J. Spence, Gunpowder Factory, Madras, E. India.

A REPRINT.

Owing to typographical errors we reprint Prof. Gardner's translation of Deut. xxxiii. 1-3. In a note the Professor says in regard to the word Kades, that it is a proper name and should begin with a capital, and explains: "The idea in the passage (Kades) is this, The sons of Israel were assembled, myriads of them, at God's right hand where they ought to be—on the plain of Kadesh Barnea." The following is the corrected reprint:

"And this is the blessing with which Moses a man of God blessed the sons of Israel before his end. And he said, The Lord is come from out Sinai and hath appeared unto us from out Seir, and hath hastened down from out Mount Pharan Kades with myriads at his right hand, angels along with him; and hath spared his royal people, and they all have been sanctified under thy (Israel's) hands, and these are under thee (Israel). And there was received from his words a law which Moses enjoined upon us; an inheritance for synagogues of Jacob. And there will be in (or unto) the Beloved a ruler (archon) when rulers of royal people have been gathered together along with Israel's tribes."

The translation from Isaiah is corrected by reading—"I have trodden thus down"—"trodden this down;" and "clad their blood down into earth"—"into the earth," as below. Isa. lxiii. 1-6 is as follows:

"Who is this that cometh from out Edom? with a redness of garments from out Bosor? So imposing in kingly array, with a violence that accompanieth strength? I discourse of righteousness and a court of salvation. Why are thy garments red and thy under garments as though from treading a wine-press? I am full of one that hath been trodden down; and of the nations is there not a man with me? and I have trodden this down in my anger, and crushed them as though earth, and led their blood down into the earth. For a day of requittal hath come upon them, and a year of redemption is at hand. And I looked and there was no helper, and I looked attentively, and no one interposed to defend, and my right arm delivered them, and my anger made them halt; and I trod them down in my wrath, and I led their blood down into the earth."

THREE POINTS.

THE MOTHER CHURCH.

How much we hear about the Mother Church in our day. Indeed the early fathers talked about the Church of Rome as the Mother Church, and many of the lesser church organizations of our day refer to the Roman Church as the mother and the pope and the priests as fathers. The Scriptures plainly intimate that there is no Mother Church, but neither Rome nor Babylon is referred to. "But Jerusalem which is above is free which is the MOTHER OF US ALL." So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman but of the FREE. Gal. iv.

EYES WINDOWS TO THE SOUL.

Theologians frequently refer to the eyes as windows to the soul, and impress upon their admirers that the soul looks upon the outer world through the eyes as man looks through a window. The Scriptures make use of the figure, but in a different way. "The light of the BODY is the eye! If therefore thine eye be single, thy WHOLE BODY shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil thy whole BODY shall be full of darkness." The figure is most impressive and shows the great importance of complete consecration to the truth. See Matt. vi. 22, 23.

DEATH THE GATE TO ENDLESS JOY.

Poets and expositors have referred to death as "the gate to endless joy," and that by means of death Christians are to gain the final and complete victory.

The Word of God makes frequent mention of the word "gates" but never refers to death as the "gate to endless joy." Hezekiah says: "I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years." Isa. xxxviii. 10. The Psalmist says: "Have mercy upon me, O Lord; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the GATES OF DEATH!" Psalm ix. 13.

There is a gate of righteousness—a gate of heaven, and a gate of hell (hades) "which shall not prevail." The gate to endless joy is not yet open, but it shall be opened when he comes who has broken asunder the bars of death even, as shown by the apostle in the following words: So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?

The resurrection, then, and not death is the gate to endless joy. H. V. R.

BLOOMFIELD MILLS, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:

Thinking that some of the readers of THE RESTITUTION would like to know my whereabouts for the last few months, I take my pen to inform them that I have been in York state, where I am at present, but expect to return to my home (in Scotland, Ct.) soon, D. V. I am now in central New York surrounded by snowdrifts. I came here to proclaim the "Gospel of the Kingdom" to the people who heard me in '78. The weather and travelling have been very unfavorable since I came, so that I have held but twelve meetings in three months. It has snowed 52 days in that time, besides rain storms. It is no wonder that the country is flooded west if they have had as many storms in that section of country. "Distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, and men's hearts failing them, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

If we have not entered upon that day, what must it be when it does come? It is fearful to read the record of the trouble and the terrible disasters of the last two months, thus far; what will it be at the same ratio, before this year ends? The astronomical prophecies are being fulfilled surely, and the predictions of God's prophets likewise. Isaiah says: "Behold the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. And it shall be, as with the people, so with the Priest (or Prince), as with the servant, so with the Master," etc. The language of our Savior comes to my mind when I hear of the destruction of life, by accident, (as it is called): "Think ye that they were sinners above all men? I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall likewise perish." Then the great question is, What is meant by perish? Is it to die and go into the grave for a few years, then come forth to inherit eternal life? I confess I do not, and cannot, so understand the Book.

I have before me, lying on the table, a monthly, entitled, The World's Hope. In that magazine is an article by Dr. J. Fondey, M. D., headed, "Reformation After Death; or Will the Wicked (dead) Finally Attain Salvation?" Then he goes on to prove that they will all finally be saved. He says: "But not only is the whole race to be redeemed, but Scripture teaches that fallen angels, Satan, and his demon hosts, are to become reconciled to God also," and quotes Phil. ii. 10, 11; and Col. i. 20, for proof. If that is the truth, I must confess that I have got much to learn yet, and much to unlearn; for I have read: "All the wicked will God destroy." In the 9th Psalm, 17th verse: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." Are they to receive the same reward, even life? Jesus says: "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age) and the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." John iii. 36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life." "Give me understanding that I may live."

Brevities.

An edition of 11,000 copies of Gospels in Zulu, recently printed at the Bible House, has been put at the disposal of the American Board, for sale and distribution in Southern Africa, by the American Bible Society.

Disasters are reported in China and Japan. The island of Formosa has been visited with a series of earthquakes which has wrought great destruction to property and life. The small mountain Futago, about fifty miles from Yokohama, transformed itself into an active volcano on the night of January 22d, and deluged the neighboring villages with masses of rock and lava. The mountain has never before been known to be in a state of eruption, and this locality has not been visited by such volcanic disturbances since the famous Fujiyama ceased to be active, 168 years ago.

Deep sea-soundings in the Atlantic, off St. Thomas, by the United States Coast Survey steamer Blake, have recently obtained a depth of 4,561 fathoms, or 27,000 feet. The greatest depth heretofore found was by the Challenger, in the same vicinity, where the lead sank 3,802 fathoms before it touched bottom. The object of the Blake's cruise was to complete the soundings necessary for a chart of the bottom of the ocean—that part lying to the northward of the Bahamas, and between Bermuda and the Bahamas, not having been satisfactorily explored. At the great depth obtained, the temperature of the water, as indicated by the ingenious thermometer which accompanies the lead, proved to be 30 degrees. Specimens of the bottom, which were secured, showed a soft brown ooze, with evidences of fauna.

There has been great rejoicing in Basutoland over the arrival of the complete Sesuto Bible. The translation has been in progress many years. The Gospels of Mark and John were first printed. Next the four Gospels and the Acts were bound up together, to which, in process of time, the Epistles and Apocalypse were added. Then books of the Old Testament were brought as rapidly as possible, and now the whole Bible is printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. When M. Mahille left Basutoland to supervise the printing, Simeon, an aged native catechist, prayed that God would grant him this grace that he should not die till he had seen with his own eyes the complete Bible. This grace was granted him, and, as he and his good old wife clasped the whole Bible, for the first time, they exclaimed "We owe all to this book," and gave a large thank-offering to be used in starting a new out-station, to be called "The Bible Out-station."—The Independent.

Earthquake shocks have been unusually numerous in this country since the beginning of the year, and the latest, which was felt in Rhode Island and Connecticut on Tuesday night, was so close at hand that the question, what would be the result of an earthquake in New York, may not appear untimely. There is not much reason to fear disaster from such shocks as these which have recently been felt in various parts of New England, although undoubtedly weak and cracked brick walls would be endangered by them. But a very severe shock might prove serious in its consequences. Manhattan Island has heretofore escaped damage from this source, and as earthquakes seldom occur in regions in which their power has not been felt before, it is fair to conclude that we have not much to fear from this source. Yet it would be a mistake to suppose that serious earthquakes never occur in this country. It is sufficient to refer to the earthquake of Nov. 18, 1755, which overthrew brick buildings in Boston, and caused considerable damage through a large portion of New England, and to the earthquakes in the Mississippi Valley in 1811 and 1812, which caused some wonderful [illegible] country. Even so late as Oct. 19, 1870, there was a severe earthquake felt throughout most of New England and New York and as far west as Chicago, which was supposed to have originated in a volcanic centre northeast of Quebec.—*N. ### To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To replay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $600. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

B. S. DWIGGINS, President.

RESTITUTION.

HELEN M. MORE.

Another day is over with the fading of the light,
Weary I lay my burdens down and bid the world goodnight;
The shadows on the hill tops come and go,
While in the West the sun is sinking low.

High in yon dark blue heavens the stars shine, one by one,
Clear in its silver splendor, rises the radiant moon,
Silent I raise my heart to thee in prayer,
Light of the world that shineth everywhere.

The murmuring of the ocean falls faintly on my ear,
Where the waves are rolling inward in the distance, low and clear;
O thou who once didst still the waves of Galilee,
Now in my waking hours, bring peace to me.

Towards thy watch towers, O Jerusalem, I turn my weary eyes,
Weary with a fevered longing for the fields of Paradise,
Where the roses and the myrtle, rich and rare,
Deck thy fair fields, and blossom everywhere.

O fallen City of our God, thy children scattered wide,
Shall once again be gathered back unto thy loving side,
And all Ezekiel's solemn vision be
A type of faithful love—faithful in thee.

STUDIES IN "KEY-WORDS."

That the Greek word psuchee is the exact representative of the Hebrew nephesh, we have sufficient proof in the fact that in quoting Psa. xvi. 10, in Acts ii. 27, psuchee is used as the inspired Greek translation of nephesh. In the phrase "thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," the Hebrew for "soul" is nephesh, and the Greek is psuchee. Also in the phrase "a living soul," the Hebrew for "soul" is nephesh, and the Greek psuchee. Compare Gen. ii. 7, with 1 Cor. xv. 45. Now, having shown that the nephesh is not immortal, it follows that neither is the psuchee.

Commencing on page 145 of "Key-Words," we find psuchee rendered "soul" 58 times, "life" 40 times, "mind" 3 times, "heart" twice, "you" once, "us" once; but never, in any of these places, is it called immortal. While it frequently means the life, it is often used to express the whole man, as, for example, when one inspired writer says, "what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul" and another varying the language but maintaining the sense says, "what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away." Compare Matt. xvi. 26, with Luke ix. 25. When a man has lost himself all that there is of him is lost; hence, his soul, in this place, is equivalent to his entire being. So in the expression "I will very gladly spend and be spend for you," the Greek of "you" is huon tuon psuchon, which, literally means, "the souls of you," 2 Cor. xii. 15. I would remark, incidentally, that this throws light on Rev. xx. 4; for if "the souls of you" means simply "you," in this place, why should not "the souls of them" mean simply "them" in that place? Thus, it would read, "I saw them that were beheaded." As psuchee often denotes the self or whole person, so does its Hebrew equivalent: thus, "I have behaved and quieted myself" (margin, my soul, Hebrew, my nephesh). Psalm cxxxi. 2.

The doctrine of a future life is taught in the entire Bible, but more especially in the apostolic writings, and hence, if the soul were possessed of immortality, or eternal life, we would expect to find it expressly asserted in these, if nowhere else in the Bible. But instead of this we find them most plainly stating that immortality, or eternal life, is to be sought for, is still a matter of promise, is for none but the redeemed, is obtainable only through Christ, and is to be received at the resurrection. Rom. ii. 7; 1 John ii. 25; John xvii. 2; Rom. vi. 23; 1 Cor. xv. 54.

After I had affirmed in Kentucky several years ago, that the Bible nowhere says the soul is immortal, one of the hearers came to me, with what he evidently regarded as a shrewd argument, saying, "But neither does the Bible anywhere say that God is immortal, does it?" I referred him to where God is called, "The King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God" (1 Tim. i. 17). I suppose he was seeking to establish the very inconsequent conclusion that if the immortality of God is not affirmed in Scripture, but left to be taken for granted, so may also the immortality of the soul be left as a matter to be taken for granted. By that single test, however, the crafty objector was confused and "put to silence."

As psuchee is the only word in the New Testament that is rendered "soul," so sheol is the only word in the Old that is rendered "hell." From what has already been shown concerning these two words the reader may readily perceive what outrageous violence would be done them to say that "a psuchee in sheol" means an immortal disembodied entity writhing in a fiery prison of endless torture.

Many popular writers affirm that the soul, whether righteous or wicked, remains, as a disembodied entity, in sheol (Greek hadees) until the resurrection. Thus, for example, Alexander Campbell defines hadees as "the receptacle of separated spirits, whether good or evil." Critical Notes, xxi, in his Appendix to the New Testament, 1832. Edward's Encyclopedia, 1848, under the word "hell," defines sheol and hadees as "the world of departed souls in general; without any distinction, in ordinary cases, between the good and the bad, the happy or the miserable." The Commentary of Jamieson, Faussett, and Brown, at Gen. xxxvii. 35, defines sheol as "the place of departed souls. And Young, the Concordance writer, says, in "Homiletic Monthly" for Oct. 1881, "All souls, without exception, go to sheol or hadees."

Now, taking these writers, and all who agree with them, on their own confession that the soul of every one, good or bad, goes into sheol, is it not their solemn duty, for the sake of truth and consistency, to confess that it goes into unconsciousness? since the Bible so plainly says, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol." Eccles. ix. 10. Mark with what emphasis the words are multiplied,—work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Are not these enough to embrace all kinds of conscious existence and activity? Could you add another word to these four without redundancy? The same state of unconsciousness is affirmed in the expression, "sheol cannot praise thee," for sheol there means those in sheol; and hence, the Greek version (Septuagint) here renders the word, oi en aidee, "those in hadees." See the Hebrew and Greek of Isa. xxxviii. 18. Now, when God's word says those in sheol "cannot" praise him, and man's word says they "can" praise him, it is our duty to say, "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Rom. iii. 4.

The Psalmist says, "I will sing praises unto my God while I have my being." Psa. cxlvi. 2. But if he has gone into sheol where he "cannot praise," follows it not that, till the resurrection, he has ceased to "have any being?" Soon, however, his "being" will be restored, at the great command, "Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust," Isa. xxvi. 19; then the long tquence in his melody will be over, and his psalmody resumed with sweeter voice, to be interrupted no more forever. Some, however, imagine the Psalmist to be still living and praising God, for I lately heard a distinguished Baptist preacher say that the patriarch Joseph "is literally alive, for all live unto God." But, "all live unto him" was said not in proof of a disembodied existence but "that the dead are raised." Luke xx. 37, 38. It means that, in the sight of God who has power to raise the dead, and in whose sight the future is visible, those whom he intends to raise "are not dead but sleeping." Luke viii. 52; Jno. xi. 11, 14. Future things are frequently spoken of as present, by him "who quickeneth the dead and calleth those things which be not as though they were," or "things not being as being," ta mee onta os onta. Rom. iv. 17. When, therefore the Lord says his people "live unto him," the expression is similar to "the that believeth on me hath everlasting life," that is, he shall have it, for "this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." Hence, the faithful believers live "in hope of eternal life," Jno. vi. 47; 1 Jno. ii. 25; Titus i. 2.

So plainly is hadees a state of unconsciousness, that the Septuagint, or Greek version, uses it as equivalent to silence:—"The dead praise not the Lord; neither any that go down into silence" (Hebrew, dumah, in which we may trace the root of the English dumb, and dumbness): "Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost (margin, 'quickly') dwelt in silence" (Hebrew, dumah), Psa. cxv. 17; xciv. 17. For "silence," in each of these places, the Septuagint has hadees. I may here remark that the Septuagint was very frequently quoted by the apostles, which is one of the highest honors that any translation can receive.

THE TERMS zaar AND eskaree—GRACE AND APPROBATION.

I propose in this article to show how sadly these two terms, in their relation to each other as well as in their mutual relation to fundamental doctrines of Scripture have been misunderstood, and will take as my text ees to the 24th verse of the 2nd chapter of Luke:

"Glory to God on high (in highest places) and peace on earth; among men eskaree (approbation, moral complacency, in a legal sense, satisfaction)." Old Version, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Douay, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will."

The thinking reader will see at a glance a diversity of meaning in these three readings as wide as the poles apart, and it is hardly worth my while to point out their logical sequences of doctrine. Suffice it to say that they are both gross mistranslations and perversions of the meaning of the text, as I will endeavor to show you by an etymological analysis of the two words zaar and eskaree. The first is a verbal noun from the verb zaro. Second aorist stem, to wish others well, to feel well disposed towards. Aorist 1st person singular. I have become well disposed towards or have wished others well. What is my state of mind then? Good will favor, or kindness, is it not? Well, that is the meaning of this word "grace," a positive good-will that seeks some sort of expression towards its object. Therefore we find the form zaar the usual word of greeting among friends, and as we begin a letter with dear so and so, the Greek began his letter with zaar or zaarei. Now we know from the general teaching of the Scriptures that God is a God of love and that his grace or good-will has always existed, in fact that he is the author of good-will, and we would not naturally expect the angels to be announcing, as though it was something new, the fact of God's good-will on the occasion of God's greatest manifestation of this good-will to man, and we do not.

We find a much more important fact however, stated in the use of this term eskaree. God has all along up to this time had occasion in all kindness and mercy and long-suffering and truth to reprove mankind in the aggregate as well as the individual man. But now with his all-seeing eye he sees at least one man whom he can fully approve and in this one man as a new federal head he sees a new race of men whom he can also fully approve, and this is the thought of God that the angels would express in the word eskaree. This word is also a verbal noun derived from the verb eskaro, and means to think well of, or, when used as a legal term, to be satisfied with, or, in a general sense, to approve. What is my state of mind if I have thought well of or become legally satisfied with or have in a general sense approved of a person or thing? Moral complacency, legal satisfaction, or general approval, is it not? Every experienced teacher or parent, actuated by good motives, I think will clearly perceive the differences between the two states of mind as expressed in these two terms zaar and eskaree and will see how a person may all the time have and be fully actuated by the positive good-will expressed by zaar and not have a particle of eskaree. There must necessarily be a responsive appreciation and doing of the requirements of a benefactor on the part of a beneficiary before there can be from the very nature of their relation to each other, either approval or satisfaction on the part of the benefactor.

And this is what the song of the angels expresses. God's beneficent good-will towards man at last appreciated and its requirements fulfilled in the Christ. And what are its requirements but the working out of this highest beneficence in all of man's relations to this life and the life to come, namely, in supreme love to this benefactor God and just and equitable and merciful love to brother man?

My doctrinal and theological readers will not need to be told how important a correct translation of this and other passages where this word eskaro occurs, if they would have right conceptions of God's character or would start with right premises to work out the beneficence of God's plan of salvation and redemption, and I will say that this word eskaro and the verb eskaro are prophetic words used in the sense above stated all through the Old Covenant Scriptures as well as the New, and in nearly every case the true meaning is perverted, as for instance in the 3d chapter of Matthew, 17th verse, "And lo a voice from heaven, saying, this is my Son, the Beloved, in whom I am satisfied (a much stronger expression than "I am well pleased.") Again in Mark 1st chapter, 11th verse, "And there came to pass a voice from heaven, thou art my Son, the Beloved, in whom I am satisfied."

Think for a moment of man's legal relation to God as a righteous judge of all the earth and take Paul's statement of the case from the standpoint of law alone. We have already all, every one of the race come under the condemnation and a righteous condemnation too. Judgment then had been rendered and the verdict of condemnation officially promulgated had it not? If so there remained for the guilty race nothing further than what the law designates as the "taking out of the execution and satisfying the judgment." Remember that this word is a legal term and that the song of the angels is the intelligence they bring from this righteous Judge of all the earth and from the court of heaven to this guilty and condemned race that the execution has been stayed and the judgment satisfied. Is not this "tidings of great joy to all nations?" Is not this a gospel indeed? And who provided the way of escape and who devised the plan? Who but this God of love, this righteous Judge, this heavenly Benefactor, he who is just and the justifier of every one who believeth in Jesus. We see then how faith in the hands of an almighty Benefactor becomes the means to work out our justification, "and if justified, then sanctified, and if sanctified then glorified," more than saved merely.

BURLINGTON, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

I am living on a neat little farm four and one-half miles from Burlington, Coffey Co., Kan., and am shut off from church privileges. I wish you would state to the brethren in Kansas, that I want them to write to me so I can find them, for I intend to sell out and get near some of like faith. We have a fine country here, but it is lacking the one thing—teaching the things pertaining to the kingdom. We have fine range, good soil, good schools, good rail road facilities, fine water and timber, and wheat yields well. I dislike to leave this county very much, but will do so if none of our faith come here soon. If any of the speaking brethren come this way, or any one of like faith, I shall be glad to have them call on me. If any think of moving here write me first, and I will write them or meet them at the depot.

Yours in hope of eternal life in the kingdom of God.

The power to do great things generally arises from the willingness to do small things.

As water runs down from the swelling [illegible] down together in the low [illegible] grace flows not but into humble hearts.

Man's teachings change so often that there is never time for them to be settled; but the Lord's word is from of old the same, and will remain unchanged eternally.

Man proposes, but God disposes; man resolves, but God dissolves; that which man expecteth God rejecteth; for the word of the Lord standeth forever, but man passeth away and is not.

Our Father! grant us patient grace
To trust thee where we cannot trace;
Waiting for heaven's full light to tell
The dear Lord worketh all things well.

Kind words produce their own image in man, and a beautiful image it is. They soothe and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his unkind feelings. We have not begun to use them in such abundance as they ought to be used.

As we cannot gather a rose and scatter its petals to the winds of heaven without some of the perfume resting on our own person, so we cannot do an act of kindness to another, without some portion of love's essence resting upon ourselves.

Your work is a personal work. Assemblies and societies cannot do it for you. The servants will not give up their accounts at last in squads or companies; each must stand alone; every man must "give an account of himself to God." So much life, so much energy, so much intellect, so much physical vigor, so much influence; so much education; so much money, so much opportunity, so much light, so much truth, so much blessing from the Lord—now what have you done with it all?

If the poor human heart is full of cares and troubles such as come to every life, if the soul is crushed almost to the earth by the heavy burdens, if every nerve and fibre groans with agony, there is no sweeter and surer relief than to fly to the sacred presence of him who never fails to lift the load of sorrow from the suffering one. If the path of duty is lost to the tear-blinded eyes, if the wanderer is bewildered amid the shadows of the way, how oft has all been made plain by the sweet soul-communion with Jesus! Oh, ye who are "weak and heavy burdened," ye who are sick and wounded in life's great battle, ye who with bleeding feet are journeying up life's rocky steep, seek for this holy privilege of communion with God's blessed Spirit, and he will bear the burden for you.—M. J. Holt.

Little by Little.

Little by little the time goes by—short if you sing through it, long if you sigh;
Little by little—an hour, a day,
Gone with the years that have vanished away.
Little by little the race is run,
Trouble and waiting and toil are done!

Little by little the skies grow clear;
Little by little the sun comes peer;
Little by little the days smile out
Gladder and brighter on pain and doubt;
Little by little the seed we sow
Into a beautiful yield will grow.

Little by little the world grows strong,
Fighting the battle of right and wrongs
Little by little the wrong gives way,
Little by little the right has sway;
Little by little all longing souls
Struggle on nearer the shining goals.

Little by little the good in men
Blossoms to beauty for human ken;
Little by little the angels are Peoplebetter of good in life;
Little by little the God of all
Lifts the world nearer his pleading call!

How to be Nobody.

It is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it. Go to the drinking saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now; just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime play dominoes, checkers, or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books. If you read anything, let is be the dime novel of the day; thus go on, keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you will be nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkard or a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging about saloons just ready to graduate and be nobodies.—Watchman.

Lost Willie.

A poor boy employed in Scotland to keep sheep was overtaken on the hills by a severe snow-storm. Long and bravely he kept up, and tried to drive his flock toward home by taking note of the land-marks he knew. All in vain; the snow fell fast, and before night all traces of roads and paths were lost, and poor Willie found himself alone in the hills with his sheep.

As night wore on the fatal drowsiness began to creep over him, beyond his power to resist, and without a scrap of shelter he laid himself down among his sheep to sleep and die. With a smothered prayer for help he fell asleep, and as he lay there, more sheep came and huddled around him. Strange as it may seem, the warmth from their bodies kept him from being frozen to death. A party from home went in search of him, and they found him surrounded by a dozen old sheep, whose instincts had saved his life. In keeping themselves warm they had kept warmth and life in him; and he lived many years to tell this anecdote of his boyhood's peril, when lost on the wild northern hillside.

Material Love.

A mother's love is deep, abiding and peculiar. The child, as soon as born, is taken up into her tenderest and most generous sympathies, and lives, as it were, a part of herself. This peculiar affection is as extensive as the race, for it is found among savage as well as civilized people. This affection was strikingly manifested by an Indian woman who had lost her child. Unable to find her own child, she entered the home of a white family, and, taking in her arms the pretty baby, lavished upon it her wealth of treasured sympathies. The mother was surprised at the peculiar exhibition, and sprang forward to rescue her child, when the poor Indian gathered up her blanket as one would a sick child; and, after clasping it to her arms, uttered a low, mournful cry. Tears ran down her cheeks as the white mother put her pretty babe back into the Indian's arms. She passed her hands over it very tenderly and gratefully and departed. In a week she came again, bringing a peck of ripe, wild plums, and the next time two buffalo tongues. She asked permission, by signs, to kiss the baby, and it was granted. Then she departed, and never came again.

Crystals.

The Greek word krystallon means ice. When transparent quartz was discovered it also was called krystallon, as it was supposed to be ice frozen so hard that it could never be melted. The word crystal is properly applied only to transparent quartz. This substance is found in large masses, and many beautiful and costly ornaments are made of it. Nero had a crystal goblet which he dashed into pieces when he heard that he had been deposed. The Japanese make round balls of crystal which may be bought in our stores or seen in museums. Quartz crystal is usually seen in small pieces of a definite shape, called crystals. The perfect crystals have the shape of a long, hexagonal prism, terminating in two hexagonal pyramids. Quartz crystals can scratch glass, but not without losing their points.

Metals and minerals are often found in regular, angular forms, these are called crystals, though the material may be opaque. Crystals of ice or snow, or frost-work on the window, assume forms of ferns, elaborate stars, etc. Sometimes a snow-star of six points drops three alternate points. Again the flake may be a simple prism.

As crystal is named from the Greek krystallon, so glass is named from the Latin, glacies, both words meaning ice. Glass is artificial crystal, being made of pure quartz, or silex. Every mineral has its peculiar crystaline shape. That of salt is a cube. The formation of crystals by chemical affinity, is among the greatest wonders of science. Breathe on a window on a frosty morning, so as to melt a small circle of frost-work, and watch the motion of the fernlike rays—from the circumference, with slight curves to the centre. In a similar way were all crystalline rocks formed, being dissolved in hot water and suddenly cooled. In cooling the mass contracts sometimes lining a hollow geode, or ball of rock apparently solid with beautiful crystals plain or colored. Some crystals are very large as the column joints of basalt or some of the beryl crystals.

There is a close resemblance between the jewels in the highpriest's breastplate, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, and the twelve foundations of "the holy city, New Jerusalem," seen by John on Patmos. Wiser heads than mine may try to explain these beautiful descriptions. They may have a literal meaning. If not, it is only because the reality far transcends the power of human language to describe it. There is an inherent meaning in various colors; as green—the softest, and therefore the most abundant hue—the emblem of peace as seen in the emerald "rainbow round the throne." Blue—the color of the pure sky—is always called true blue, the emblem of fidelity. Red—the color of blood—suggests war, stirs the imagination, and typifies the blood of Christ. White is the symbol of purity.

We select gems for their shape, hardness, color, purity, reflecting power, and their rarity. They are thus symbols of many Christian graces, and of the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" reserved for the righteous. John saw the streets of the city as "pure gold, like transparent glass."

"In silence, on the sea of glass,
Heaven's numbers without number stand.

While in that song all voices blend,
Which, once begun, shall never end."

"Blessed are they that wash their robes that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city." Rev. xxii. 14, Revised Version.—Messiah's Herald.

THE ABIDING WORD.

No army ever survived so many battles as the Bible; no citadel ever stood so many sieges; no rock was ever battered by so many hurricanes and so swept by storms. And yet it stands. It has seen the rise and downfall of Daniel's four empires.

Assyria bequeathes a few mutilated figures to the riches of the British Museum. Media and Persia, like Babylon, which they conquered, have been weighed in the balance and long ago found wanting. Greece faintly survives in its historic name. "'Tis living Greece no more;" and the iron dome of the Cæsars is held in precarious occupation by a feeble hand.

And yet the book that foretells all this survives. While nations, kings, philosophers, systems, institutions, have died away, the Bible now exercises man's deepest thoughts, is examined by the keenest intellects, stands revered before the highest tribunals, is more read, sifted and debated, more devotedly loved, and more vehemently assailed, more defended and more denied, more industriously translated and freely given to the world more honored and abused, than any other book the world ever saw. It survives all changes, itself unchanged; it sees all things decay, itself incorruptible; it sees myriads of other books engulphed in the stream of time, yet it is borne along triumphantly on the wave; and will be until the mystic angel shall plant his foot upon the sea, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever, that time shall be no longer. "For all flesh is as grass and all the glory of man as the flower of grass."—Gospel Teacher.

OBITUARY.

DIED,—Feb. 20th, 1883, at Lowell, Lake Co., Ind., in the 74th year of his age, Bro. Chester L. Ketchum.

Brother Ketchum was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y. Came west and settled first at South East Grove, Lake Co., Ind., afterward moving to the town of Lowell, in the same county, about 17 years ago, where he died after a long and patiently endured illness. He leaves a wife in very feeble health but strong in hope, also two sons and one daughter to mourn his loss. He was an intelligent, devoted and consistent believer in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Humble, patient and Christ-like in his demeanor. Much beloved by his neighbors for his integrity of character and moral worth. To the little band of faithful waiting ones there his loss will seem almost irreparable; to whom the writer tried to administer words of comfort in the presentation of a final victory over death, when he who is our Life-Giver shall come. There was a large and seemingly appreciative audience present. His life work is done. He now sleeps with the silent dead. May the day be so much longed for, soon dawn, when it shall be said, O grave where is thy victory.

THE EVERGREEN SHORE.

We are joyously voyaging over the sea,
Bound for the evergreen shore,
Whose inhabitants never of sickness complain,
And never see death any more.

Chorus—Then let the hurricane roar;
It will the sooner be over;
We will weather the blast, and we'll Land at last,
Safe on the evergreen shore.

We have nothing to fear from the wind and the wave,
While under our captain's command;
And our hearts in the midst of all dangers are brave,
For Jesus will bring us to land.

If the winds and the waves our Commander control,
For sending can settle his will;
And his voice, when the thundering hurricane rolls,
Can make the loud tempest be still.

In the thick murky night, when the stars no light lend,
Soon forth beat a glimmering ray,
Then the light of his countenance, brighter than day,
Will drive all our terrors away.

Let the high-heaving billows and mountainous wave,
All fearfully over-head break;
There's not one to whom we can comfort and save:
Keep down, stormy waves, forsake.

[The above Hymn was selected by Mr. Carey, formerly organist Mentmore, and published in THE EXHIBITION some three years ago, as containing it of sufficient merit for another insertion, I present it for that purpose; especially for the gratification of some of her relatives in Ohio.—Jos. ## PHASES of the EASTERN QUESTION.

There are several complications in what is known as the Oriental Question. The nature of one of these embarassing difficulties, that beset Islamism at this critical period of its history is aptly set forth in an editorial of the N. Y. Independent of Feb. 15, 1883. The throne of Pan-Islamic power may yet be located in the Moslem's holy city—Mecca. Read this article with care and watch developments.

Read also, in connection with the article below, another following—"The Jew and the Eastern Question," taken from Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

THE CALIPH OF ISLAM.

There is a Sultan of Turkey; there is a Caliph of Islam. The Sultan of Turkey is not necessarily Caliph of Islam, although he has been since, 305 years ago, Sultan Selim I. compelled Caliph Mohammed XII. of Cairo, to yield to him the title. From that time the Caliph, or spiritual head of all Islam, has not been of the family of Mohammed, of the tribe of Koreish, nor even of Arab descent. He has been a Turk, and has held the title of Caliph simply by right of force. Because he possessed, as Sultan of Turkey, the highest civil power in the Mohammedan world, his claims have been allowed to be also the Pope of Islam.

The Sultan holds Turkey only by the active military support of Christian Europe. Ever since the Crimean war this has been confessed. Even lately, a single European power has, in a short campaign, released the greater part of what was European Turkey from the hold of the Sultan. If England and France were to take off their hand, Russia would in a year seize Constantinople and Asia Minor, and drive Sultan Hamid to Mecca. But Mecca would not receive as Caliph the man who could not maintain his power as Sultan.

Already it is England that maintains the caliphate at Constantinople. But for England, Arabi would have been master of Egypt, and soon after recognized Caliph; for, though Hamid gave him qualified civil diplomatic aid, as a Moslem fighting the infidel, yet Hamid well knew that Arabi, victorious and powerful, would as certainly supplant him as the head of Islam, as would Mohammed Ali have done it, but for European intervention.

Then Europe decided who should be Caliph, and Europe does it now. This does not satisfy the Mohammedans of Egypt, Tunis, Arabia, scarcely of Turkey. It is as if China and Japan were to decide who should be Pope of Rome. Pan-Islam knows that Turkey is weak, and that Hamid is Caliph not by the grace of Allah, but by the grace of the Giaour. Pan-Islam feels the humiliation; and, if left to itself, the Shereef of Mecca, who is of the lineage of the Prophet, or any Mahdi who could claim the title, would be gladly recognized as the spiritual head of the Moslem world. It is only lately that the Shereef was deposed by the Turk because he desired to be Caliph, and another was put in his place. The Turk is not loved by the Arab. Give the Arab a chance, and he would be free from the Turk.

But Sultan Hamid holds on with great tenacity to his religious power. Unlike Abdul Aziz, he is a pious Moslem, and cares more to be Caliph than Sultan. It is not his ambition to make Turkey great and prosperous, but to [illegible] Pan-Islam, as Servia, England, Arabi would have been [illegible] by diplomacy. Hence the plots in Tunis, in Egypt, in India. Hence he sits in his palace and dreams of the victories of the Faith of the Prophet. Meanwhile there are no reforms in Turkey; no believer is punished that murders a Christian; now fanaticisms and outbreaks against Christians are encouraged; Christian churches can get no firmans; Christian books can scarcely be printed even in a Christian language; no Mussulman would now dare abjure his faith; and the counselors of the Sultan are not the ministers of the Porte, but the astrologers, eunuchs and holy men of the palace.

Meanwhile Islam gains no benefit while Turkey suffers that Islam may be exalted. The Caliph could do nothing for Tunis against France, nor for Egypt against England. He is dishonored before the Islam he claims to lead.

Why should Europe still support his spiritual claims? Grant that the Sultan shall rule in Constantinople over Turkey, why uphold him as the chief plotter of outbreaks among two hundred million Moslems? Why not let the Shereef of Mecca take the honor which he aspires to, and tell the Sultan that he will be held responsible by Europe, as the Khedive of Egypt is held responsible by England, for the good government of his Turkish dominion? Only let England lift her protecting hand from Hamid, and Mecca would become the spiritual center of Islam. There is good reason to believe that here is the best solution, for the present, of the Turkish question.

THE JEW AND THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Mr. Laurence Oliphant, whose name has been so prominently associated with the scheme for the Jewish colonization of Palestine, contributes an interesting article recently to the Nineteenth Century, on the above subject, in which he says:—"It is a remarkable circumstance that at the close of the nineteenth century the two political problems which press most urgently for solution should be essentially religious in their origin. Modern civilization has been startled by an outbreak of Christian fanaticism against Jews, and of Moslem fanaticism against Christians, attended by outrage and violence that would have disgraced the Middle Ages, and threatening disaster still more serious. In the one case the diplomacy, and in the other the enlightened sympathy and benevolence, of the most advanced nations of the world have been invoked, and charitable committees and political conferences have been called into operation in the vain hope that moral pressure, backed in the case of Russia by large pecuniary donations, and in the case of Egypt by a naval demonstration, would suffice to grapple with difficulties which have their root in the passionate instincts of superstition and ignorance that defy all the panacea of civilization, whether they be political or humanitarian. Either one of those politico-religious conflagrations recurring singly would have given Europe enough to do." The fact that they have burst forth simultaneously certainly constitutes one of the most notable signs of the times, and it is equally remarkable that both draw our attention to the East, whence the great coming denouement of prophecy will be evolved. "That the Jewish and Moslem questions are destined to out and re-act upon one another has been already proved," Mr. Oliphant thinks, "by the refusal of the Porte to allow Jews to emigrate to Palestine." The influence of passing events; moreover, is very different in the case of the two races and creeds. "The Moslem, instead of yielding to the influences of civilization, only has his fanaticism aroused by them. Totally unable to adapt himself to them socially or politically, he finds himself in the presence of a force, the insidious character of which he is unable to resist, and beneath which he instinctively feels he is destined to succumb, if he cannot successfully oppose its advance by the sword. Hence we have the idea of a jehad, or religious war, engrafted in his nature; he is trained from his earliest childhood to a hatred of the Giaour, and cherishes through life the hope that the day may come when an opportunity may arise for giving it forcible expression. The Moslem feels that his history lies in the past. Sullen and dogged, his highest consolation rests in the belief, for which he has prophetic indications, that, like Samson, his end will be to pull the temple of Christendom about his ears, and bury himself in its ruins. The Orthodox Jew believes, on the contrary, and is no less supported in that belief by the assurance of his sacred books, that those ruins are destined to prove the foundations of his future greatness and triumph; and, in order to this consummation, he feels that the utter destruction and religious exclusiveness of his race must be preserved. Hence it is that the orthodox Jews of Russia and the East of Europe have manifested a strong opposition to the desire of their more advanced Western co-religionists to promote a mass emigration to America, and have inaugurated a counter-movement in favor of a return to the East, which has seized upon the imagination of the masses, and produced a wave of enthusiasm in favor of emigration to Palestine, the force and extent of which only those who have come in contact with it, as I have done, can appreciate."

"It is a remarkable fact," adds Mr. Oliphant, "that while indifferentism, materialism, Agnosticism, and other phases of sceptical thought are undermining the old forms of belief in Christendom, faith was never more fervent, or religious sentiment more active, among Moslems and Eastern Jews, than it is at present: in the one case fomenting a Jehad or holy war, directed by Islam against Christendom, and in the other a national exodus out of Christendom into Islam. Thus Christendom finds itself between the two fires of Monotheism, both directed at it by Asiatic races. It comes into conflict with one because that one refuses to receive Western civilization, and with the other because Western civilization refuses to receive it. The Moslem prefers to die rather than be exploite by the Christian, and the Christian murders the Jew rather than be exploite by him. . . . Thus it is that, at the close of the nineteenth century, three great religious forces of the world find themselves face to face—two of them armed and equipped for the fray, and determined to test their views of moral and material progress by the arbitration of the sword; and the third, feeble in outward seeming, scattered, unarmed, and despised by both, yet prepared, when the way is cleared for them by the clash of rival creeds, to raise from their ruins inspired with new-found vigor, and prove to the world that, if the final solution of the 'Eastern Question' involves the doom of the Moslem, it opens up his destiny to the Jew."

THE JEWS OF BAGHDAD.

The Israelite, of Mauvice, quotes from the latest work of the well-known Hungarian Orientalist Professor Vambery, entitled, "Pictures of Customs from the East," the following account of the Jews of the great city on the borders of the Euphrates: "Bagdad, which the Jews look upon as ancient Babylon, is the largest Jewish colony in the East, after Constantinople and Salonica. In this pashalik alone there are 20,000 sons of Israel, and the times of the Psalm, 'By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept when we remembered Zion,' apply there no longer, in so far as the Bagdad Jew enjoys many privileges which his less fortunate co-religionists in other parts of the East envy him. His occupations are pretty much the same as they were in the days of the Kalifs, with this difference, that they have shrunk down to smaller proportions. Great merchants have been turned into traders, physicians into quacks and druggists, who still practice secret and mysterious crafts so much in vogue in the East.

"The Bagdad Jew also attends to some handicrafts in which he has acquired a certain amount of skill. He is still pent up in a ghetto, yet he shows more self-confidence than the Jew does in any other part of Turkey. The Jews of Bagdad speak Eastern Spanish no longer, but Arabic, which is mixed up a good deal with Hebrew words, just the same as the Jews of Persia speak Persian with a large admixture of the tongue of their fathers. Both sections profess to be descendants of those who remained behind when the first captivity had come to an end, and in the south of Iran I met with some families that laid claim to a patrician origin, and as a sign of it continue speaking Hebrew with some Persian words added to it. The present condition of the Bagdad Jews is not unfavorable, and there is one man living among them, one Daniel, a banker, known as the Rothschild of the Jews of Asia, whose influence is paramount in the commercial world of the East."

THE FALSE PROPHET.—SENDS THE EGYPTIAN, UNDERTAKES TO REDUCE THE MAHDI TO SUBJECTION.

CAIRO, Jan. 20, 1883.—In spite of the couleur de rose assurances of the Anglo-Egyptian officials, it seems that the situation in Kordofan and Darfour is now more desperate than ever. Private dispatches from the Soudan enables me to assure you that the recently reported defeats of the Mahdi or False Prophet are, to say the least, premature. Together with the black troops, who, after being dispersed last September at Tel-el-Kebir and Damietta were again united and sent to Khartoum, there are over twelve thousand regular Egyptian troops now in the Soudan. But this completely equipped army, instead of winning battles—as was expected and reported—is held at the present moment completely in check by the active and warlike Central African Messiah. Moreover nearly 8,000 Egyptians have been attacked at a place called Abou Harrax, thirty miles from El Obeyad, the capital of Kordofan, by the False Prophet at the head of some 20,000 negroes. The Egyptians at the first onslaught laid down their arms, and welcomed the Mahdi as their chief and were forthwith incorporated as the "left wing of his bodyguard." The influence of the Mahdi is spreading like wildfire. His followers march about the Soudan like the Salvation Army—praying, preaching and exhorting. Tens of thousands of negroes who were before mere Pagans, have now become stalwart Moslems, with all the fire and fanaticism that belongs to a newly adopted faith. This new blood is now making itself felt, and renewed preparations are being made in Cairo not only to prevent the wave of invasion from coming north of Khartoum, but to prevent the doctrines from taking root in Egypt.

In view of the critical situation in the Soudan I held the following conversation with the famous Zebehr, the conqueror of Darfour, and after the Mahdi, the most remarkable man the Soudan has yet produced. His appearance is suggestive of a fine fierce panther. As we sat upon the divan I asked Zebehr, "What do you think of the English officers going to the Soudan?"

"They will do more harm than good. Half of them will fall sick as soon as the rainy season comes (May) and the well half will only be nurses for the sick half."

"If they send you to fight the Mahdi would you take any English officers with you?"

"No. Instead of them I should take about thirty or forty ulemas from the Azhar. These holy men would preach the true religion and the Mahdi would be nowhere."

"How many soldiers has the Mahdi under his immediate orders?"

"About two hundred and fifty thousand."

"When will the Egyptian troops attack them?"

"Not until the rains begin in Kordofan and Darfour."

"Why not before then?"

"Because until the rains come there is no water and no food."

"In spite of all the difficulties and the overwhelming disparity of numbers, you are confident you could put down the rebellion in three months?"

"Within three months after my arrival in Kordofan I would pledge myself to send the head of the Mahdi as a present to Lord Dufferin."

"Do you think that Gordon Pasha could put down the rebellion?"

As I put this question I opened the title page of "Colonel Gordon in Central Africa," and showed Zebehr the portrait of Gordon.

"I hate Gordon Pasha. It was he who induced me to come to Cairo where I have been kept a prisoner ever since. It was Gordon Pasha who has ruined me."

Saying this the dusky warrior fell into a tremendous passion, and taking the volume from my hands spat upon the portrait in the frontispiece. Zebehr then relapsed into a stern silence and could not be induced to talk any more. N. Y. Herald, Feb. 26.

THE STRUGGLE FOR ETERNAL LIFE.

The following extracts from French authors are taken from a book sent us by E. Potavel D. D., of Geneva, Switzerland, bearing the above title. They show that the human intellect is rebelling against the horrible dogma of eternal torment. The reaction in Europe, especially on the continent, has been toward a dismal infidelity. The sad conclusion has been taken for granted, without investigation, that Papal creeds represent the Bible doctrines on human destiny, and, hence, revelation is scorned, and rejected as unworthy of the least attention. Some, however, are coming to a knowledge of the truth, and learning that Romanism is not Christianity.

THE FRUITS OF THE TRADITIONAL DOGMA, AS POINTED OUT BY FRENCH SECULAR WRITERS.

"It is undeniable that the Church would show great ignorance of her own weakness if she were to allow certain doctrines, especially the doctrine of eternal torment, to be freely discussed. Since she wishes man to believe in hell as firmly as they believe in redemption, to dread the unappeasable wrath of God as surely as they trust in his boundless love, she acts prudently in imposing silence upon the whole matter. Nevertheless, the following results ensue:

"The orthodox (all that are left of them) blindly believe the most utter contradictions, and hold a mixture of glorious truth and unintelligible error in the simultaneous existence of God and hell. On the other hand, a large and constantly increasing number of people refuse to believe in eternal hell, and refuse also to believe those truths which are bound up in the same system with the hideous fiction. The latter believe that the lips which teach such obvious falsehood can teach nothing that is true; while the former think that no error can come from the source whence such consoling truth proceeds. The deplorable education which for centuries has fallen to their lot renders them unable to discern between truth and falsehood in one and the same system; they take it as it is offered to them, as a whole, and reject or keep it as a whole; for to their minds there is no possibility of separation between the doctrines which compose it. Both courses of action are bad, and neither the one nor the other brings peace to the soul, with regard to this momentous question. I have never met with an orthodox believer who did not own that he shuddered with horror at the thought of eternal vengeance; while unbelievers cannot but dimly feel a longing after a future life, and an aspiration after something higher than the sins and sorrows of earth. Thus does truth speak to every heart, and fill it with uneasiness until its voice be understood. The orthodox believer says involuntarily, 'God is cruel'; but remembering the Church's authority, he takes the thought for a suggestion of the Devil, and goes tremblingly to his crucifix to renew his vow to a merciless God. On the contrary, the sceptic says in his heart of hearts, 'There is a God, and the wicked shall be punished'; but he stifles the thought, he crushes the idea of Divine justice in his soul; because he has always been taught to associate it with raging flames and endless cruelties, which would soften the heart of a tiger and make stones weep over the fate of the lost."—L'Enfer, par Aug. Callet, p. 337 to 340.

"Setting aside all considerations of popular welfare and of the spread of enlightenment, I would appeal to the clergy solely in the interests of the Church. Veil on behalf of that Church whose foundations are even less stable than they seem, I declare that it is time to abandon the fables, bugbears, and legends of Christian mythology, and to adhere simply to the precepts of practical religion.

"But I fear it is hopeless; for priests, especially Roman Catholics, will never relinquish a treasured doctrine till it crumbles away into dust between their fingers.

"Nevertheless, they cannot ignore the state of popular feeling; and this dogma has been silently withdrawn into the background. Formerly preachers used to dilate incessantly on Satan and hell, as if they had just been there. They entered into minute particulars, such as the names and attributes of various demons. A Jesuit even announced a refinement on eternal combustion. 'The lost,' he said, 'would get used to it in time, and to prevent this the fire is put out for twenty-four hours once in a century.'

"Now-a-days the topic is nearly obsolete; but it is with great reluctance that the clergy have ceased to represent the lamb of the gospel as the tiger of the Inquisition."—Les Guepes, par Alph. Karr, 5th Nov., 1871.

JERUSALEM.

"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." Psa. xlviii. 2.

It is not strange that my first night on the Mount of Olives was sleepless. Though the preceding night had been spent in the saddle, and the preceding day in fatiguing travel, yet the vision of Jerusalem, which I had that day seen for the first time, remained so vivid before my mind's eye, that it banished all thought of sleep and all sense of fatigue. For hours I lay absorbed in the stirring memories of the distant past, which holy scenes had called up and invested with a charm of reality. Mount Zion,—Moriah, crowned of yore with the halo of the Shekinah glory,—Gethsemane, bedewed with the tears, and stained by the bloody sweat of the Son of man,—Olivet, where Jesus so often taught and prayed,—they were all there, each with its wondrous story written as if in letters of light. Longing for the morning, I once and again rose from my bed and threw open the lattice. The stars hung out like diamond lamps from the black vault of heaven, shining with a sparkling lustre unknown in our hazy west, and revealing in dim outline the walls and towers of the Holy City sleeping peacefully away below.

I was specially favored during my first visit to Jerusalem. An old friend had rented a little tower high up on the western side of Olivet, commanding a noble view of the Holy City and the surrounding country from Bethlehem to Mizpeh. It was one of those square turrets which in recent, as in ancient times, proprietors sometimes built in their vineyards as residences for keepers and temporary store-houses for fruit (Isa. v. 2; Matt. xxi. 33). Here I took up my quarters, and from the open window or the terraced roof, at all hours, day and night, I gazed on that wondrous landscape. During the soft, ruddy morning twilight,—at the full blaze of noonday,—in the dead stillness of night, when the moon shed her silver rays on the white walls and roofs of the city, my eyes were upon it,—never wearying, never satisfied, but ever detecting some new beauty in the form, some fresh spot of sacred interest or historic renown. While I live I can never forget that view of Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives.

Morning dawned; and with my kind host, to whom every spot in and around Jerusalem was familiar, I ascended to the terraced roof. Behind Olivet, on the east, the sky was all aglow with red light, which shot slanting across the hill-tops and projecting cliffs, and upon the walls and prominent buildings of the city, throwing them up in bold relief from the deeply shaded glens. No time could have been more opportune, no spot better fitted for seeing and studying the general topography of the Holy City. The whole site was before me, distinct and full, like a vast and beautiful embossed picture. At our feet, along the base of Olivet, was the Kidron, a deep and narrow glen, coming down from an undulating plateau on the right, and disappearing round the shoulder of the hill on the left; its banks terraced, and dotted here and there with little groves and single olive trees. Directly opposite us was Mount Moriah, its bare, sides rising precipitously from the bottom of the Kidron to a height of some two hundred feet. On its summit, is a rectangular platform, about thirty acres in extent, and taking up fully one-half of the eastern side of the city. It is encompassed and supported by a massive wall, in some places nearly eighty feet high, and looking even higher where it impends over a ravine. This platform constitutes by far the most striking part of the city. It is unique. There is nothing like it in the world. Its history, too, is wonderful. It has been "a holy place" for more than thirty centuries. Its Cyclopean walls were founded by Solomon. Upon it stood the Temple, in whose shrine the glory of the Lord so often appeared, and in whose courts the Son of God so often taught. It is still to the Moslem el-Harem esh-Sherif, "the noble sanctuary," and, next to Mecca, the most venerated sanctuary in the world. The platform itself—simple, massive, and grand—is a striking object; but the buildings it contains greatly contribute to its beauty. In its centre, on a raised area of white marble, stands one of the most splendid mosques in the world, octagonal in form, encrusted with exquisite tiles of gorgeous colors, and surmounted by a graceful dome. From its area the ground slopes away to the encircling ramparts in gentle undulations of green turf, diversified with marble arcades, gilded cupolas, fountains and prayer-niches; and interspersed with venerable cypresses, olives, and palms. At the southern end is a large group of stately buildings, including the Mosque el-Aksa, once the Church of the Virgin; and round the sides of the platform are cloisters, here and there covered with domes, and surmounted by tall minarets. The quiet seclusion of this sanctuary, the rich green of its grass and foliage, the dazzling whiteness of its pavements and fountains, the brilliant tints of the central mosque, and, above all, its sacred associations, make it one of the most charming and interesting spots on earth.

Just behind Moriah the Tyropœan Valley was distinctly marked by a deeply-shaded belt, running from north to south through the city. Beyond it rose Zion, higher and longer than Moriah; in front, a confused mass of terraced roofs, tier above tier; farther back are seen the white buildings of the Armenian Convent, like an immense factory; more to the right the new English church; and in the background, crowning the hill, the massive square keep of the Castle of David. The southern section of Zion is now outside the city wall; and there a high minaret and cupola mark the tomb of David. From it the hill sinks into the Valley of Hinnom in steep terraced slopes, covered with vineyards, olives, and corn-fields. As I looked, a moving object in one of the fields rivited my attention. "Haste, give me the glass," I said. I turned it upon the spot. Yes, I was right; a plough and yoke of oxen were there at work. Jeremiah's prophecy was fulfilled before my eyes: "Zion shall be ploughed like a field." xxvi. 18.

Along the further side of Zion runs the deep glen of Hinnom, which, turning eastward, sweeps round the southern end of the hill and joins the Kidron at En-Rogel. These two ravines form the great physical boundaries and barriers of Jerusalem; they completely cut it off from the surrounding table-land; and they isolate the hills on which it stands, and those other hills, too, or hill-tops, which as the Psalmist tells us, "are round about Jerusalem." cxxv. 2. These natural barriers also served to confine the city within regular and definite limits—to prevent it from sending forth straggling suburbs and offshoots as most other cities do; hence it was said, "Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together." Psa. cxxii. 3.

A high battlemented wall encompasses the modern city. It runs for half a mile along the brow of the Kidron valley, facing Olivet, then turns at right angles and zigzags across Moriah, the Tyropœan, and Zion to the brow of Hinnom. The whole circuit is two miles and a half. The city was always fortified, and the walls and towers formed the most prominent features. Hence the language of the exulting Psalmist, "Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her bulwarks." Jerusalem has no suburbs. There is no shading off of the city into the country—long streets radiating from a centre, then straggling houses, and villas, and gardens, such as we are accustomed to see in English towns. The moment you pass the gates of Jerusalem you are in the country—a country open, bare, without a single house, and almost desolate. Not a green spot is visible, and not a tree, save here and there a little clump of gnarled, dusky olives. Rounded hill-tops, and long reaches of plain, strown with heaps of grey limestone, extend from the walls far away to the north and south. There is no grandeur, beauty, or richness in the scenery. It is bleak and featureless. Hence the sad disappointment felt by most travellers on approaching Jerusalem from the west and north. They can only see the serried line of grey Saracenic walls extending across a section of a bleak, rocky plateau. But when I stood that morning on the brow of Olivet, and looked down on the city, crowning those battlemented [illegible] by those deep and dark [illegible], I involuntarily exclaimed,—"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, the city of the great King." Psa. xlviii. 2. And as I gazed, the red rays of the rising sun shed a halo round the top of the Castle of David; then they tipped with gold each tapering minaret, and gilt each dome of mosque and church; and at length bathed in one flood of ruddy light the terraced roofs of the city, and the grass and foliage, the cupolas, pavements, and colossal walls of the Harem.—No human being could be disappointed who first saw Jerusalem from Olivet.—J. L. Porter, A. M.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 20.

Prelude—What has Christianity to do with natural science and profane history? God the author of the book of nature, the chief actor in profane or secular history—Two books with one author—Island of Great Britain—Its resources further examined. Its surface or topography. Its temperature — Rainfall — Its soil — Its productions—Its mineral resources. Its people—Their occupations—Their character—Their national greatness and power—General summary.

Prelude.—It is often asked by persons of some devotional ideas, What has Christianity to do with the natural sciences? Especially with that "infidel science," called geology? Would it not be more consistent with a high Christian profession to make use of the Bible alone? Prejudice, in its own estimation, is a very sharp critic, and exceedingly wise; in many instances, however, its censures are the result of ignorance.

What is geology? It is a near relative of geography. The one has his office and field of labor on the surface of the earth; the other beneath its surface. Geology examines the earth's rock structure, and its general configuration and build-up, while geography confines himself to the surface of things. Both sciences are angels of light, whose mission requires them to declare the power, goodness and wisdom of the Creator. Why fear such beneficent angels? The Bible commences with the science of geology by enunciating its fundamental truth, that the earth's materials were created by God (Elohim). It then describes God's work in shaping it and fitting it up for the abode of living organisms; gives the history of their creation and of man as the earth's residing power. The facts of geology are often noticed in the Scriptures. (See Psa. xxiv. and Job.) It is said that infidels make geology contradict Moses. True, but do they not make the Bible contradict itself? What Bible truth has not been more abused than the principles of natural science? No science should be answerable for its abuse, either through ignorance or design. It is objected that geology and Moses do not agree as to the earth's age. This, we deny. Moses does not give the age of the geological materials out of which the earth was constructed; only that, in the beginning they were created, after which they were fashioned into a globe called "Earth."

How long between the creation and construction, is not stated. The objector will please tell us, from the record of Moses, what space of time elapsed between the act of creation—Gen. i. 1.—and the building of the earth out of those materials—Gen. i. 2—to end. All admit that the creation of the materials must be first. The time, how long, not being stated, does not, therefore, contradict geological time. God is as truly the author of geological science (true principles) as he is the author of the Bible. God, by human agents and by his Son, spoke his revelations, which, by man, have been collected into a single volume called the Bible; but the book of nature, containing the record of his eternal power and Godhead, he has issued from his own printing establishment. Man, as a type-setter and publisher is liable to error; God, never! The one volume is suited to "Babes and sucklings;" the other to the Christian in his manhood. Many Christians have singular prejudices relative to the utility of secular history in explaining the fulfilment of prophecy. They hold that the Bible alone must be its interpreter. This view is correct only in part. It will not hold good in regard to those prophecies, whose accomplishment belongs to a period which extends beyond Bible history; such as a part of the metallic image, the fourth beast of Daniel, the standing up of Michael, the return of Israel and Judah, the signs of the advent, and the Apocalypse, and Christ's predictions of his return, and Paul's man of sin. The Bible cannot contain any historical record of their fulfilment, since no part of the Sacred Scripture has a later date than about A. D. 96.

Christ evidently enjoined upon his disciples the study of history. For he says, "When ye see these things then know." How could they discern without close investigation? And what could they search but the history of passing events. To show when, where, and how prophecies have been fulfilled requires close and protracted investigation of national history. Any one has knowledge enough to say that a prophecy is to be accomplished. The one is a theory of labor; the other is the theory of indolence. To decide correctly, however, as to the prophecies yet unfulfilled, requires a knowledge of all past history of those nations, in any manner associated with the people of God. A history which contains a pure and perfect record of facts as they have transpired during the Christian era, are as authorative as the historic books of the Bible: for each would be a perfect record of facts as they took place. In the Old Testament we have many books of history, such as Genesis, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 Samuel, 2 Samuel, 1 Kings, 2 Kings, 1 Chron., 2 Chron., the Acts of the Apostles, and the four gospels. These are called inspired records, or records free from error in their statements of facts. Books of history, composed the record of events that have transpired since A. D. 96, so far as they agree with the chain of facts, would be equally as authorative with the list from the Bible. What matters the private opinion of the historian if his record is true? Parts of the Bible were uttered by wicked men, and their doctrines are false, yet the record is true. Job's friends belong to that class.

Gibbon and Hume are called infidels; yet their records of facts as they transpired are truthful. It is no flight of fancy to say that God can make an infidel testify to the truth. In the days of Christ's first advent the demons gave true testimony, "Jesus, we know thee, the holy One of God." And if a demon could speak the truth, why not an infidel? Authentic histories are sufficiently accurate to demonstrate the fulfilment of prophecy.

Island of Great Britain.—We shall examine its mineral resources. We have seen that the island is furnished with all the geological strata, so that it is furnished with all the mineral wealth of each formation. The mineral wealth: 1. In this island are found salt in 1880, 2½ million tons; value at $6,000,000; 2. Iron pyrites 60,000 tons, value, $600,000; 3. Zinc, 25,000 tons of ore, producing of metallic zinc, 7,000 tons, valued at $504,000; 4. Lead and silver from the same ores of the paleozoic rocks, 82,000 tons of ore, containing 61,500 tons of metal, worth 6½ million dollars; from which were obtained 521,300 ounces of silver, valued at $521,000; 5. Copper from Cornwall and Devon, 105 mines, producing 85,000 tons of ore, yielding 5,100 tons of metallic copper, valued at $1,500,000; 6. 9,000 tons of tin, value $3,000,000: The tin mines of Cornwall, Devon, and Scilly Isles have been worked 2,500 years, and have been the richest tin deposits in the world. Tin was taken from these mines for Solomon's temple; 7. Iron ore is obtained from all the coal measures as well as from older formations. In 1881 the number of tons obtained from the whole island amounted to 19,000,000 tons, valued at $32,000,000. The principal ore is an impure argillaceous carbonate of iron; 8. Coal; In 1880, from all the mines were raised 140,824,021 tons. It is stated that the coal deposits of Great Britain would last 100 years, should there be consumed 1464 million tons a year. This calculation includes the entire coal for the depth of 4,000 feet.

The coal and iron are called the sinews and muscle of Great Britain. The British island, though in the western counties hilly and somewhat mountainous, is called level. There is a pleasing variety in its landscapes. Its climate is one of the most even (free from extremes) in the world. Its system of irrigation and drainage very superior. It is in the possession of the first class of natural advantages. Its physical resources have aided the British nation to climb to the summit of national grandeur. The agricultural products have now reached, annually, to the sum of $400,000,000; reckoning live stock, more than $2,000,000,000.

Her manufactures (textile) are in cotton, woolen, worsted, flax and silk. 7,000 in number; with horse-power, 540,000; hands employed, 1,000,000. Her imports and exports $3,372,615,271. Gold and silver bullion and specie, about $200,000,000. The British shipping.—In 1875 there were 20,614 sailing vessels and 4,160 steamers registered under the merchant shipping act. In 1877, there were 12,093 miles of railway open in England and Wales; 2,770 in Scotland. Her army is vast, numbering in all parts of the world, 933,933. Including regulars, army reserves, militia, yeomanry cavalry, and volunteers. Her navy is the most powerful of any on the globe. She has 61 ironclads, about 200 steam vessels, and 110 sailing vessels. In 1879 there were in commission 265 vessels. She is mistress of the seas, and encircles the earth with her armies. Her institutions are constructed on a most magnificent scale. Her cities are noted—her London is one of the world's wonders. Her powers, physical, moral, social, religious, civil and political, are nowhere surpassed, if equaled.

The British Museum is the pride of the empire. It combines the curious and the wonderful of all ages: what mind can grasp in a lifetime the mental resources of its departments? What a variety in its contents! 1. Its printed books; 2. Its maps; 3. Its manuscripts; 4. Its prints and drawings; 5. Its oriental antiquities; 6. Its Greek and Roman antiquities; 7. Coins and medals; 8. British and Medieval antiquities and ethnography; 9. Natural history; 10. Zoological department; 11. Botanical department; 12. Geological department; 13. And its mineralogical department. Such is its interest to all classes of minds that 43,000 persons have passed through the building in a single day. We close our remarks on this little Island by the following by two noted authors:

"England! this other Eden; demi-paradise; this fortress built by nature for herself, against infections and the hand of war; this happy breed of men, this little world; this precious stone set in the silver sea, which serves it in the office of a wall, or as a moat defensive to a house, against the envy of less happier lands; this blessed plot, this earth, this England."

"England, which with Wales is no larger than the states of Georgia, stretches, by an illusion, to the dimensions of an empire. The innumerable details, the crowded succession of towns, cities, cathedrals, castles, and great and decorated estates, the number and power of the trades and guilds, the military strength and splendor, the multitudes of rich and remarkable people, the servants and equipages,—all these catching the eye, and never allowing it to pause, hide all boundaries by the impression of magnificence and endless wealth. To see England well needs a hundred years; it is stuffed full with towns, towers, churches, villas, palaces, hospitals, and charity houses. In the history of art, it is a long way from a gromlech to a York Minster; yet all the intermediate steps may still be traced in this all-preserving island. The climate is warmer by many degrees than that to which it is entitled by latitude. Neither hot nor cold, Charles II. said, 'it invited men abroad more days in the year and more hours in the day, than any other country.' The frequent rain keeps the many rivers full and brings agricultural productions up to the highest point. England has plenty of water, of stone, of potter's clay, of coal, of salt, and of iron. The land naturally abounds with game; immense heaths and downs are paved with quails, grouse, and woodcock, and the shores are animated by water-fowl. The rivers and the surrounding sea spawn with fish. There is the drawback of the darkness of the sky: the London fog sometimes justifies the epigram on the climate, 'In a fine day, looking up a chimney; in a foul day, looking down one.' England is anchored at the side of Europe, and right in the heart of the modern world. The sea, which according to Virgil, divided the poor Britons utterly from the world, proves to be the ring of marriage with all nations. As America, Europe and Asiatic, these Britons have precisely the best commercial position in the world."—Emerson.

"Britain is a miniature of Europe. Shares her mountains, Snowdon in Wales, Helvellyn and Skiddaw in Cumberland, the Highlands in Scotland. She has her lakes, the smiling meres of England, the crystal lochs that mirror Ben Nevis and Ben Lomond and their brethren. She has the picturesque dales and caves of Derbyshire, the fair plains of Warwickshire, and Surry, and Buckinghamshire throughout the realm. Westmoreland and Cumberland she has a pocket Switzerland. Her mines in Cornwall, Staffordshire and Northumberland soon furnish all the great question, coal, lead, tin and copper. Her quarries are abundant. Her soil yields bounteous harvests. Her manufactures bring all nations in her debt. Her commerce exceeds that of any other people, and she is the grand mart of the globe. The keels of her merchantmen furrow all seas, and the smoke of her steamers darken every maritime sky, and plying between her and her colonies, invest the world."—Cottage Cyclopedia.

Brief Expositions of Primary Texts.

"Lord I believe, help thou my unbelief." Mark ix. 24; Heb. ii. 2. The awkward and obscure idea conveyed is that unbelief needed aid; but one use of the word help is relieve. As help my headache means relieve my headache—lameness or pain.

"To them that are without law, as without law (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ)." 1 Cor. ix. 21. Read "because under law to Christ." Thus the Gentiles converts to Christ were not without law to God, because Christ's mission work was to bring men back to the worship of God, by converting Christ "they turn from idols to serve the living and true God," as revealed and preached by Christ. 1 Thess. i. 9–10.

"And again when he bringeth his first begotten into the world, he saith let all the angels of God worship him." Heb. i. 6. This "again" applies not to another prophecy of the first advent, as in our version; but to Christ's second coming. Read "when he (God, ver. 1) bringeth his first begotten into the world again (the second time, Heb. ix. 28) he saith, let all the angels of God worship him."

The paternity of Jesus has been strangely mistaken. Let us read:—"Gabriel was sent from God . . . to a virgin, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David, and the virgin's name was Mary." Luke i. 27. Note; Gabriel's mission was directed only to Mary. She was the only person addressed by the angel, and hence Joseph was noticed as if incidentally and for an ulterior purpose, relative to the family where Jesus was to be nourished and brought up. Let us read it contextually: "Gabriel was sent to a virgin, of the house of David, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph; and the virgin's name was Mary." Here all is grammatically plain and consistent with her Son's being Heir to "the throne of his father David," ver. 32, because "he was made (born) of the seed of David according to the flesh." Rom. i. 3; Gal. iv. 4. Again: "David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up the Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 22–36.

Let this suffice, though some more of confirmatory testimonies might be quoted. Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4; 2 Sam. vii. 12–16; Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6, 7. David's place is as distinctive and determinate as that of Abraham, in the paternal ancestry of the Messiah. Hence, when God sent forth his Son made (born) of a woman, he was made (born) of the seed of David, and the fruit of his loins. Then this "woman" is Mary, the virgin mother, and the distinguished daughter of David, Matt. i. 21–25, etc., whose son Jesus is, the proper Heir to "the throne of his father David."

The word "made" (born) so often used of Jesus' birth is absolutely and unmistakably plain. It applies only and altogether to "the virgin"—Mary—the seed of David—his immediate maternal ancestor. Matt. i. 18–25; Luke i. 27–32.

His divine Fatherhood and Sonship is asserted over twenty times, and the pronouns designating father and son over fifty times, making over seventy times, in one chapter, John xiv. Quite enough to satisfy and gratify all "the heirs" of the Abrahamic promise, by faith in the Lord Jesus. Gal iii. 24.

Lovingly for the truth.

P. S.—Both Weethee's articles in paper of Feb. 24 is more than grand. It is sublime! No one, it would seem, can read it with a believing heart, and not be raised above the one-sided view of the judgment, or kingdom crisis. Those Scriptures are too important to be suppressed. Too full of glory to God and good will to men to be rejected. A living faith feels that there is none too much gospel. Nay in such grand unveilings there can be no more for faith to desire. Amen.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 5.

WALKS THROUGH THE CITY.

In the eastern wall there is but one gate, and all the paths from Olivet and Bethany meet there. Instead of entering, however, we turn to the left, and soon reach the square tower on the north-east angle of the Haram. The enormous size of the stones in the lower courses of the masonry—some of them being more than twenty feet long—and the moulding of their edges, prove that the building was founded not later than the time of Herod, and probably much earlier. It was one of the external defences of the fortress of Antonia, where the Roman garrison was "quartered," and in which was Pilate's "Judgment Hall" where our Lord was condemned. Now, alas! . . . . The shattered and half-ruinous houses of the Jewish quarter are away up on the left, clinging to the precipitous side of Zion. A tortuous path, encumbered with filth, and noisome with the putrid remains of cats, dogs, camels, and other animals, winds through this scene of desolation. As we pass along, we cannot but recall the words of Micah, for his prediction is fulfilled before our eyes:—"Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest." (iii. 12). At length we reach the south-west angle of the Haram, and feel amply repaid for a toilsome and unpleasant walk. The masonry here is even grander than that of the other angle, and the "corner-stones" are still more colossal; one measures thirty feet by six and a half. This angle stands on the brow of the Tyropœan valley, which separated Moriah from Zion, but which is now in a great measure filled up with rubbish.

Some forty feet from the angle, on the western side, are three courses of colossal masonry projecting from the wall, and forming the springing stones of a large arch. These stones have within the last few years attracted no little attention, and given rise to no small amount of controversy. And this is not strange, for they are unquestionably a remnant of the bridge that once connected Moriah and Zion. Calculating by the curve of the part which remains, we find that the span of the arch must have been about forty feet, and five such arches would be required to cross the Tyropœan. That the bridge existed in our Lord's time we learn from Josephus. It is also mentioned during the siege by Pompey twenty years before Herod was made king. The exact date of the fragment still remaining, cannot, of course, be precisely fixed. One thing, however, is certain, that it is coeval with the massive foundations of the southern angles of the Haram. One of the three courses is five feet four inches high, the others are a little less. One of the stones is twenty-four feet long, another twenty, and the rest in proportion. The Cyclopean dimensions, and peculiar character of the masonry, indicate a far higher antiquity than Herod the Great, and would seem to point back to the earliest age of the Jewish monarchy. We read in 1 Kings vii. 10, that the foundations of Solomon's temple were formed of "costly stones, even great stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits . . . . And the great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones." In three passages of Scripture a remarkable "ascent," or "causeway," is mentioned, leading from the palace to the temple, and specially intended for the use of the king. 1 Kings x. 5; 1 Chron. xxvi. 16; 2 Chron. ix. 4. May we not identify this "ascent" with the "viaduct" which, according to Josephus, connected the royal palace on Zion with the temple court? Such a monument of genius and power might well make a deep impression on the mind of the Queen of Sheba in that remote age; and thus a new interest is attached to the story: "And when the Queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house he had built, . . . and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord, there was no more spirit in her."

What a train of associations, holy and historic, and what a crowd of feelings, joyous and sorrowful, do these few stones awaken! Over the noble bridge which they supported, marched in solemn splendor the kings and princes of Israel, to worship God in his temple. Over it, too, humble and despised, often passed the Son of God himself, to carry a message of heavenly peace to a rebel world. Upon its shattered arch the victorious Titus once stood, and pointing to the burning temple behind him, made a final appeal to the remnant of the Jews on Zion to lay down their arms and save themselves from slaughter by submission to Rome. Now, temple, bridge, and palace are all gone! Within the precincts of the temple-court no Jew dare set his foot; and on the site of the royal palace the wretched dwellings of that poor despised race are huddled together in misery and in squalor.

The Place of Wailing.—Entering the inhabited part of the old city, and winding through some crooked filthy lanes, I suddenly found myself, on turning a sharp corner, in a spot of singular interest,—the "Jew's place of wailing." It is a small paved quadrangle; on one side are the backs of low modern houses, without door or window; on the other is the lofty wall of the Haram, of recent date above, but having below five courses of bevelled stones in a perfect state of preservation. Here the Jews are permitted to approach the sacred enclosure, and wail over the fallen temple, whose very dust is dear to them, and in whose stones they still take pleasure. Psa. cii. 14. It was Friday, and a crowd of miserable devotees had assembled—men and women of all ages and all nations, dressed in quaint costumes of every country of Europe and Asia. Old men were there,—pale, haggard, careworn men, tottering on pilgrim staves, and little girls with white faces, and lustrous black eyes, gazing wistfully now at their parents, now at the old wall. Some were on their knees, chanting mournfully from a book of Hebrew prayers, swaying their bodies to and fro; some were prostrate on the ground, pressing forehead and lips to the earth; some were close to the wall, burying their faces in the rents and crannies of the old stones; some were kissing them, some had their arms spread out as if they would clasp them to their bosoms, some were bathing them with tears, and all the while sobbing as if their hearts would burst. It was a sad and touching spectacle. Eighteen centuries of exile and woe have not dulled their heart's affection, or deadened their feelings of national devotion. Here we see them assembled from the ends of the earth, poor, despised, down-trodden outcasts,—amid the desolations of their fatherland, beside the dishonored ruins of their ancient sanctuary,—chanting, now in accents of deep pathos, and now of wild woe, the prophetic words of their own Psalmist,—"O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled. . . . We are become a reproach to our neighbors, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us. How long, Lord? Wilt thou be angry for ever?" Psa. lxxix. 1, 4, 5.

"Oh, weep for those that wept by Babel's stream,
Whose shrines are desolate, whose land a dream;
Weep for the harp of Judah's broken shell;
Mourn—where their God hath dwelt, the godless dwell."

THE RESTITUTION.

O. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 14, 1883.

A CAIRO despatch says that the Fetish Prophet lately suffered a defeat in a conflict with Abd-el-Kader Pacha, losing 2,000 men.

PRINCE GORTCHAKOFF died at Baden Baden on Sunday, March 11, at the advanced age of 85 years. He was one of the most noted men of the present century.

THE Phrenological Journal for March is at hand, and is a number replete with instruction on the particular science of which it is so able an exponent.

THE returning of colonies of Jews to Palestine is one of the most notable events of the times in which we live. With restored Jewish nationality Gentile domination expires. Gentile exaltation is measured by the times of Jewish depression.

SINCE our last issue we have been called from home to attend two funerals; and as these took place in localities some miles distant, we lost two days away—thus depriving us of time to write editorially, or to fully examine manuscript contributions, or letters on business.

THERE have been some Socialistic demonstrations made in Paris within the last few days. It is reported that the Bonapartists headed a meeting on Friday last. The probabilities are that there will be exciting times in France before this year closes.

A FOREIGN paper now before us says: "It is thought that Russia and Austria have arrived at a common understanding—with the tacit consent of Germany—upon the Turkish question, and that this bodes no good to Turkey. Austria is also credited with much activity in Macedonia, sowing the seeds of annexation."

WILFORD'S MICROCOSM comes duly with the month. It has very peculiar views respecting some of the great leading doctrines of scientific philosophy which have long been thought as perfectly settled and to the proofs of which the capitals Q. E. D. have been appended with undoubting confidence. Its dissent from theories questioned is firm and outspoken. The views propounded in this serial on the constitution and destiny of man are no less peculiar and unique. Though not converted as yet to its peculiarities we admire the journal for much contained in its columns. It will create a stir in scientific ranks. Send it along.

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS AS A TYPICAL KEY TO CHRONOLOGY.

Taking up the thread of our subject where we left it at the end of the third article on "Time, Number and Rhythm," we now come to a practical application of what some of our readers may have thought a dry and abstruse argument. To them I would say, however, that I have been giving you on a religious theme, what has always been claimed by sceptics to be impossible, and so far as I know, admitted so to be by all metaphysicians, religious or otherwise, and that is, a mathematical demonstration in the realm of religious philosophy. Moreover, I believe it is commonly admitted that Euclid or Davie's Legendre or the Calculus are not light reading for the average intellect. But the positive scientists have been for a long time clamoring for at least one argument in the realm of religious philosophy that was not based upon a prior reasoning, and I have thought fit to answer their prayer. But to our present theme.

What is the age of this "Cosmos of the heavens and the earth" of which we have been treating in our last articles? This is a practical question, I think, and one of general interest to the public at large, religious or irreligious. If we can develop this from the Book of Numbers by a natural arithmetical process of reasoning and can determine the Mosaic "days" of creation, something of interest even to the positive scientist, will have been developed.

My object thus far has been to outline the relation which time and number sustain to each other in the cosmos according to law, whether this law be understood to be God's law or nature's law or simply law of some kind, and to show that this Book of Numbers is itself cosmical in the arrangement of its parts. It consists of thirty-six chapters which treat of the experience of a people under the conjoint leadership of a supreme head and a mediatorial man, the time of this experience being given as forty years. If the time of this experience had been thirty-six years, corresponding to the cosmical arrangement of the chapters containing this experience in detail, the problem would be much simpler and the demonstration more apparent. Now we found that the whole of time as related to this cosmos denoted numerically would be expressed by 1 to 9 according to the Arabic notation, and I want to say right here that the law of the Greek letter notation is the same, as only nine of the letters of the alphabet are used in the first series, and the law of the conjunction of series is the same as in the Arabic notation.

We found moreover, that 1 to 8 of time numerically expressed was appropriated for God's own specific work of creation bearing only the 7, 8, and 9 for man's experience under God or law or whatever else you choose to call it; as religious people we call it God. Then man's whole experience under God and in time is numerically related to the whole of time as 1 to 3 or expressed fractionally, 8-9 equals creation, 3-9 equals God's and man's conjunct employment. Reducing the fractions to their lowest terms we have 2-3 and 1-3. Then the forty years—a type of this conjunct experience—stands in some sort of a numerical typical relation to these numerical expressions, 1-3 of time and 3-3 or the whole of time. If the experience were man's alone the relation would be simply that of 1-3 to 40. But being a conjunct experience of God and man or of two persons, the relation would be numerically denoted by 1-3—1-3 of two tens etc. of 40 equals 2 6⅔ equals 2.666⅔ expressed decimally and 1-2 of the same would be the appropriate numerical expression for man's experience viewed by itself as thus far determined equals 1.333⅓.

But we have already demonstrated in previous papers that the decimal-point is the appropriate expression as determined by the numerical symbol 10 for the point of conjunction between God's and man's experience. Then all that belongs to God individually will stand where God stands at the left of the decimal-point or point of conjunction when God's time is considered alone, and as God's time includes man's time, the conjunct expression already obtained above will be some appropriate fraction of the whole of God's time. But by placing the decimal point, thus, three places to the right, we have (2666⅔ being that expression) changed the related value existing between the two typical expressions, and they now stand related to each other as 1 to 1000, and man's one-third in relation to God's one-third when considered conjointly and in relation to the whole period of time as 1-6 to 1-3. Then we have in this 40 years of the Book of Numbers a numerical expression which is a type or pattern or numerical period which stands in relation to another period (the 1 to 9 period) as 40 divided by 1-2 multiplied by 1-8 multiplied by 1-1000 equals 24000-1.*

But we have already found that 1-3 of God's and man's conjunct experience was 2666⅔. Therefore the whole of God's and man's conjunct experience will be 2666⅔ multiplied by 3 equals 8000 and God's creative experience alone being expressed by 2-3 of the whole or (6-9 of the 1 to 9) the appropriate numerical expression for it will be 2666⅔ multiplied by 6 equals 16000. And one of man's periods when viewed alone or as related to one of God's and man's conjunct periods being as 1-8 to 1-3 its appropriate expression will be 1-2 of 2000⅔ equals 1333⅓ and six of these periods or 1333⅓ multiplied by 6 will equal the whole of man's experience in time numerically expressed equals 8000, which added to God's creative experience makes 16000 plus 8000 equals 24000.

From the creation of Adam, then, to the end of time as related to this cosmos of the heavens and the earth, we have found, by a process of natural reasoning from given data, to be 8000 years, true solar (probably) years, not approximate lunar years, composed of six equal periods, during which man under the conjunct divine leadership and stamped with his image is to be conformed to him in likeness (or character), that is, these six periods are progressive and formative, in fact periods of evolution.

Now the chronology of the Bible according to the Septua. from Adam to Christ's first coming, is about 4800 years, and from Adam to Methusela 1287 and from Methusela to the flood 955. From the flood to Phaleg's period, during the 1st distribution of the earth referred to in the "Song of Moses" occurred some over 600, and from this distribution to Abraham some over 600. Again in Matthew we learn that from Abraham to David was a period of 14 generations; from David to the Babylonish captivity another period of 14 generations; and from the Babylonish captivity to Christ another period of 14 generations. Now reckoning 81 and a fraction years to a generation, we have singularly enough for this whole period from Abraham to Christ 1338⅓ years, and one of these periods of 14 generations 444 1-9 years. Now substituting our typical chronology for these historical periods as given, and solar time for lunar, in which these are probably given, and we would have:

|---|---|
| Adam to Methusela | 1333⅓ |
| Methusela to Flood | 1000 |
| Flood to Phaleg and 1st distribution of the earth | 666⅔ |
| From distribution to Abraham | 666⅔ |
| Abraham to Christ | 1333⅓ |
| | 5000 |

Then, according to Daniel xii. 7, which reads, "that it was unto a period of periods and one half of a period, at the consummation of the dispersion," supposing that the periods here spoken of are these six progressive or formative periods in man's experience the time from the 1st coming of Christ to his 2nd coming would be one of these periods and 1-2 of another, and we would have from

|---|---|
| Christ's 1st Coming | 1333⅓ |
| To Christ's 2nd Coming | 666⅔ |
| Christ's Millennial Reign | 1000 |
| | 3000 |

The whole of man's experience in time, 5000 plus 3000 equals 8000 and following this the consummation of the saints or "the rest that remaineth for the people of God" referred to in Hebrews 4th chapter. CHAS. GARDNER.

P. S.—I am asked by letter from S. R. W. whether in Dan. viii. 14, the word is the same as the one in Exodus xxv. 17. It is not. In Daniel it is tsaw and in Exodus it is kaw-pawr; and whether "cleansed" could not properly be rendered "justified." It could not. The word used is tsaw-dak which is a Levitical word with a strictly Levitical meaning of cleansing or purification. "Purification" is one thing, and "justification" is another. I will say further that the time as here given in the Septua. is 2100 days instead of 2300 in our version, and as bearing upon the typical time given above, I will say that history shows that the point of time at which Daniel stood when he saw this vision was about 139 or 40 years before the 1st coming of Christ. Now according to the type it ought to be 2400 years from this same point of time to the 2nd coming of Christ as the reader will see by looking back at the table above given. I will try and give hereafter a translation of a portion of this 8th and the 12th chapters of Daniel with appropriate comment thereon, and will endeavor to answer S. R. W. more fully in that article.

PALESTINE IN 1882.

The condition of Palestine during the past year is reported by the U. S. Consul, at Jerusalem, Selah Merrill, to have been one of general prosperity—the rains having been abundant and the crops excellent. In Jerusalem, Jaffa and Hebron there has been an increase of population, amounting to 7,000, of which Jerusalem has received 4,000, Jaffa about 2,000, and Hebron 1,000. This is chiefly due to Jewish immigration, and, since the immigrants belong to the poorest classes and have fled to Palestine to escape persecution, they cannot be regarded as a substantial addition to the material resources of the country. The government, indeed, has issued an order prohibiting the landing of any more; while very many of those who came have gone back, and large numbers of those who remain are in distress. With the increase of population has come an advance in food and rents, the prices of which rule about 25 per cent higher than last year. An unusual demand for wheat was created by the Egyptian war; but as the supply was correspondingly large, it did not cause any considerable fluctuation in prices. Cattle and sheep raising, which is now practically prohibited by the order of the Government forbidding the exportation of live stock, might become an important industry in Palestine, were this prohibition raised. The hills and deserts of the country, unavailable for other purposes, would afford excellent pasturage for millions of sheep, for which a ready market could be found in Egypt and other adjacent countries.

Palestine is still the prey of the tax-gatherer. Its small and impoverished population contributed in 1881 in direct taxes to the Turkish Government 8450,000, not a dollar of which or any other money was spent upon internal improvements. During the same period the fees of the carriage-road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, which is in a shocking condition, amounted to £7,875, only a small portion of which was devoted to keeping the road in repair. Notwithstanding all its disadvantages, Jerusalem is reported to be in a flourishing condition, and to have received during the past year a marked impetus in building operations. Consul Merrill states that he has himself obtained permits for sixty-five new houses during the year, and as one permit often covers a block, these figures do not adequately represent the amount of building that is going on. In the last five years he notes a remarkable growth, especially in the environs of the city. "Small and neat, or large and beautiful houses," he says, "have sprung up, and gardens of fruit and shade trees have been planted, so that the suburbs are beginning to present an aspect of comfort and thrift."

Unfortunately these new buildings do not represent a proportionate growth of material wealth, since most of them are put up by Jews on borrowed or on gifts of money from Europe. Fully one-half of the people in the city, it is stated, subsist on charity, and offer very little encouragement to those who are looking towards Palestine as a possible market for commercial operations. "The Arab, in spite of successive years of prosperity," writes Mr. Hardegg, the Consular agent at Jaffa, "remains a poor man. He has neither the habit nor the desire to accumulate wealth, or even to lay up anything for future necessities. Honorable and enterprising American firms have distributed liberally at the agency valuable catalogues of their manufactures, and they will understand that the process of introducing such goods as they advertise—which would be of great benefit to the people of this country could they be brought into use here—is a slow one, when it is stated that two-thirds of the 12,590 inhabitants of Jaffa go barefoot all the year round, dress like the Philistines of old, and do not yet know the decent use of a pocket-handkerchief. Even the single steam-mill, introduced fifteen years since, stands in solitary majesty, eating up one-half of the 600 tons of coal imported last year into Palestine."—N. Y. Observer.

The royal mummies, not long since discovered at Deir el Bahari, were found crowned with wreaths of flowers and leaves of plants still in such perfect preservation that they could be analyzed and their species, as known in science, clearly made out. Lists of these recovered varieties have been published. Now Mrs. Amelia B. Edwards, a well-known [illegible] upon the time and accident of Egyptian antiquities, 'calls attention to a passage in the works of Athenæus which seems to throw some light on these remarkably preserved garlands. Writing of Naucratis, which was his birthplace, Athenæus states that the two chief manufactures of this town were porcelain and wreaths of flowers. These wreaths, described as made of myrtle and also of "flowers entwined with filaments of papyrus," were in his time largely exported to Italy, where they were much sought after by the ladies of Rome. Such flowers and plants were, therefore, dried and made up in wreaths for exportation, as likely to Egypt as to Italy; and it is not unreasonable that in the time of Athenæus this was an old industry which might have been in vogue before the vault of Her-Hor was finally closed. It is certain that intercourse existed between the natives of the Greek Isles and the Egyptians for a century before the XXIst dynasty. Furthermore, among the faded blossoms buried with the priest Nebseni there was found a specimen of the Parmelia furfuracea, lichen indigenous to the Islands of the Greek Archipelago, which is sufficient to show a Greek source for, at least, some part of the floral offerings: and it may not be too much to infer from this single circumstance that the funerary garlands with which the piety of Her-Hor and his descendants adorned the remains of their ancestors or predecessors were specimens of the Greek art and industry celebrated by Athenæus. —The Independent.

Arabi Bey, in his exile in Ceylon, is learning English, in order, as he says, to know what the newspapers are saying about him. He and his fellow exiles are anxious not only to have their children well educated, but are perfectly willing to have them educated by the English. What is stranger still, they desire that their daughters shall have exactly the same advantages as their sons. When told that the Bishop of Ceylon had established a good school, they at once expressed an intention of sending their children to it. They were quite willing, they said, that their daughters should be instructed in Christianity, which was itself a good thing, and, as their children were well grounded in the Koran, it was impossible they could become Christians at heart, for God was good and they fully relied on the virtue and power of the Koran to keep their children in the true faith, but educated they must and should be.—The Independent.

MUMMY-FLOWERS.

Several of the royal mummies discovered last year at Deir-el-Bahari were, it will be remembered, found garlanded with flowers, those flowers being for the most part in wonderful preservation. M. Arthur Rhone, in a recent letter to Le Temps, has described the extremely curious way in which these are woven. They consist of the petals and sepals of various flowers detached from their stems, and inclosed each in a folded leaf or either the Egyptian willow (Salix safsaf) or the Mimosops Kummel Brucr. The ornaments are in rows the points being all set one way—and connected by means of a thread of date-leaf fibre woven in a kind of chain-stitch. It all resembles a coarse edging of vegetable lace-work. Among the flowers thus preserved are the bright blue blossoms of the Delphinium orientalis, or larkspur; the blue lotus, or Nymphæa cærulea; the white of Nymphæa lotus, with pink-tipped sepals; the blossoms of the Solanum Ægyptiacum; and the orange-hued flower of the Carthamus tinctorius, or safflower, so largely employed as a dye by the ancient inhabitants of the Nile Valley. The dried fruit and dried yellow blossoms, of the Acacia Nilotica is likewise present; and mention is also made of the blossom of a species of water-melon now extinct. The foregoing are all interwoven in the garlands in which the mummy of Amenhotep I was elaborately swathed. With others of the royal mummies were found fine detached specimens of both kinds of lotus, the blue and the white, with stems, blossoms, and seed-pods complete. Still more interesting is it to learn that upon the mummy of the priest Nebiochi, maternal grandfather of the King Pinotem II. (twenty-first dynasty), there was found a specimen of the lichen known to botanists as the Parmelia furfuracea. This, what is indigenous to the islands of the Greek Archipelago, whence it must have been brought to Egypt at or before the period of the Her Hor Dynasty (1100 or 1200 B.C.) Under the Arabic name of "Khebu," it is sold by the native druggists in Cairo to this day.

"TURN YE."

Very few persons, even the most depraved, would be willing to admit if the question were put to them that they are permanent travelers on a road to ruin. [illegible] acknowledge that their habits were bad and their moral purposes iniquitous; that they drank, or swore, or stole, or lied, or were ill-tempered, or idle, or impure, or even admit that they were growing worse all the time; but they would nevertheless, if really compelled to consider the question, believe or at any rate say that they believe, that somehow or other, at some time or other, not far distant, things would take an upward turn. But just here lies one of the most fatal fallacies of sin. Things do not take a turn unless the individual makes them do so; and reform is quite sure to grow harder rather than easier as the hours and days and years hurry on. There is no slipping up hill again and no standing still when once you have begun to slip down, and yet the same hope which many a man and woman has of escaping is the hope of slipping up hill on some lucky day which a more propitious future shall bring. The sooner one finds out that deliberate sinning is not to be followed by accidental salvation the sooner will it be ready to respond to the call of the Holy Spirit.

An Endless Story.

The story of Jesus Christ, from, the manger to the cross, from the Jordan to the Mount can be dwelt upon perpetually and not be exhausted. It is, as the apostle says of our Lord, "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." It is a spring that never ceases to flow; an ocean always full. If we select any one event in the Savior's history, any vital doctrine of the gospel, and begin to dwell upon its substance its connections, and its lessons, how the lines of thought and duty and interest stretch away; reaching from the depths of a sinful heart to the final inheritance of the saints; sweeping perhaps from one eternity to another; now ranging in the footsteps of Jesus, in the places where he taught, or dwelt, or suffered; and now hearing his parables and witnessing his miracles; and then lingering at the sacraments of the church and then contemplating the world to come, the Judgment, and the final awards. Sometimes we are alone and sometimes in a crowd; sometimes with demons; and sometimes with angels; sometimes on earth, sometimes in Heaven; but always with Christ.—Christian Secretary.

Exegetical.

Notes on Two Texts.

The Editor recently asked the opinion of Prof. J. R. Boise, D. D., of the Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, Ill., in reference to the following questions:

1. In Matt. xvi. 26, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" and is the force of the passage "What can be regarded as an equivalent for the soul?" in which case the passage would set forth the unspeakable value of the soul; or does it mean, "What can a man give as a ransom for his soul (if lost), in which case the passage would set forth the hopelessness of the ruin of the soul, if it were once lost?"

To this inquiry, Dr. Boise replies:

I think antallagma (antallagma) means "as an equivalent for." It is from anti "over against," and allagma, "a thing exchanged;" and that is from allasso "to change," (not "to ransom.") "A ransom for" is lutron. 1 Tim. ii. 6; or lutrosis Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45, (from luo loose, release, ransom).

2. In Heb. xii. 1, "Laying aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us," does "the sin" mean "sin" in general, or does it mean "the particular form of sin," to which we are liable?

He replies:

Ton euperistaton hamartian (ten euperistaton hamartian) would mean in classic Greek, "the easily besetting sin." As the adjective has the attributive position, I am inclined to adhere to that rendering. "The easily besetting sin," constantly referred to in this epistle, was that of apostacy. It may, however, refer to any sin to which a person is particularly liable.—National Baptist.

Brevities.

Mr. Dennis, the British antiquarian, has bought the site of the temple of Cybele, at Sardis, Asia Minor, and great hopes are entertained of the discoveries among the ruins.

There are thirty-two Protestant churches or chapels in Spain, of which six are in Madrid, two in Barcelona, three in Seville and the rest chiefly in the western resort towns. The native Protestants number about 28,000, mostly among the poor.

The throne to be used at the Czar's coronation will be of black oak, richly carved in antique Slavonic patterns, and will cost over $9,000. The canopy will be supported by columns ten feet high, and will be ornamented by the imperial eagle and a scroll work bearing the fifty-six coats of arms of the Governments of Russia. Crimson velvet hangings, embossed in gold, will shelter the imperial chairs, which will stand on a dais. The Czar's military suite will consist of 318 persons, of whom 12 will be of the imperial family.

In many parts of Switzerland are often found smooth flat stones, evidently hand polished, and covered with dots, lines, circles, and half circles. The origin and use of these stones, known among country people as Schalensteine, has long been a mooted point among the learned. Some have thought they were charms, others that they were meant to commemorate the dead, or that the signs on them were undecipherable hieroglyphics; but it has been reserved for Herr Rudiger of Bollech, in Solothurn, to suggest a theory concerning them which seems to meet all the necessities of the case. The Schalensteine, he says, are topographical charts, as a comparison of them with any modern map of the districts in which they are found will show. The engraved dots correspond with existing towns and villages, the lines with roads. Even the fords and mountain passes are indicated. Herr Rodiger has examined many of these stones from various parts of the country, and he possesses a collection, picked up in Solothurn, which form together a map of the entire canton. Another significant circumstance is that the Schalensteine are mostly found at intervals of about two hours (say six miles) from each other, and at spots where roads meet.

A MEXICAN PYRAMID.

The pyramid which is the most memorable relic to antiquaries on the American continent lies a few miles to the west of Pueblo, Old Mexico, and has been visited by every traveller of note who has interested himself in the antiquities of the country. It rises sudden and unassociated from the midst of the plain, built in pyramidal form of adobes, or large unburned bricks, and though mutilated and overgrown with trees, the massive base and four stories of the monument are nearly entire. Humboldt describes it as a work of such magnitude and vastness as, next to the [illegible] of Egypt, approaches nearest to the mighty relations of nature. Its height is 172 feet and the sides of its base 1,355, being 275 feet lower than the great Pyramid of Cheops and 627 feet longer. The brick material is interspersed with layers of stone and plaster, and the four stories connected with each other by terraces. These again are ascended from bench to bench by regular and oblique flights of steps, cut by the old Spaniards, as a way to the little chapel on the platform dedicated to the Virgin of Remedios. In straightening the road from Mexico to Puebla, it became necessary to traverse a portion of the base, when the section laid open an interior chamber, built of stone and roofed with beams of cypress. In it were found skeletons, idols of basalt and a number of vases curiously varnished and painted.

The appearance of a huge exploding meteor in Virginia on Sunday morning, March 4, closely resembling in the direction of its flight, its apparent size, the effects produced by its explosion and even the color of its light, the two great meteors which within the last three weeks have startled the inhabitants of southern New England and of Mississippi, is significant. It shows that the earth is now in a region of space where large meteoric bodies in unusual numbers fall within its attraction. The question is suggested whether these meteors may not be stray members of the meteoric train of the great comet of last fall. It is known that comets are followed by flocks of meteors, and that the showers of falling stars in August and November are caused by the passage of the earth through swarms of small meteoric bodies which revolve in the orbits of two well-known periodical comets. The head of the great comet last fall appeared to be divided into two or three portions, and fragments of cometary matter were seen in its neighborhood at various times, indicated that it had been partially shattered either by the tremendous divellent forces called into action during its exceedingly close perihelion swing around the sun, or by some unknown force. Some huge holes which made their appearance in the surface of the sun just after the comet's perihelion passage, were attributed to the downfall of fragments of the comet or of members of its train of meteors. If it should turn out that the great meteors which have recently entered our atmosphere, and whose fragments have doubtless reached the earth's surface, really belonged to the retinue of the great comet, it would be most interesting to possess such tangible relics of a celestial body which for two months was the most brilliant, attractive, and wonderful object in our skies. —*N. ### DEATHS.

KORP.—In Plymouth, Ind., Feb. 16, 1883, Joanna Alice Korp, aged 19 years, 2 months, and 4 days.

This was the little invalid sister that we had to convey from a bed of sickness to the river on Nov. 16th last, and baptize. Her obedience under the trying circumstances resulted in that sweet peace of mind that robbed death of its terrors. The little sufferer now sleeps in Jesus.

ZEHNER.—At Wolf Creek Mills, Marshall Co., Ind., March 6, 1883, Matilda V. Zehner, wife of M. B. Zehner, aged 45 years, 3 months, and 16 days.

Sister Zehner embraced the gospel in 1862 and was baptized by Brother H. Barnhill. Her life was peaceful and quiet, and her demeanor very exemplary, and her memory is cherished by all who knew her. A husband and five children mourn the loss of a kind companion and a loving mother.

PARKER.—A few miles south of Wolf Creek Mills, Marshall Co., Ind., March 10, 1883, Hattie Parker, wife of Russell Parker, aged 21 years, 6 months, and 19 days.

Our Sister Hattie, as we have been informed, embraced the gospel hope and yielded the obedience of faith a few years ago. The young wife has left a disconsolate husband to weep over his bereavement, and an infant of days to learn its irreparable loss in the sorrowful times of the future.

The Editor attended each of the above funerals, and preached Jesus and the resurrection.

Editor Restitution:

In my article on Arkansas, I suggested the purchase of half-fare tickets from St. Louis, issued to intending emigrants. This could be done a year ago, but I have been informed that it is not the case now. However it would do no hurt to make the effort. Several families have come to this vicinity, and such is the mildness of the climate, I shall be surprised if a good many do not come. It is beautiful spring. May the Lord direct all aright until the kingdom has come.

Yours Truly,

THE TRUE CHURCH.

JOHN L. WIRE.

For centuries the waiting Bride
Has lit her altar fires,
And watched for the morningtide
To light the eastern spires.

Has longed to see her absent Lord,
Whose love inspired her song;
And leaning on his faithful word,
Has battled with the wrong.

Through all the dark and cloudy day,
And through the lonely night,
The lamp of faith illumed the way
With more than earthly light.

And true as needle to the pole,
Has kept her eternal aim
Intent upon the final goal,
With glory all ablaze.

Has stood amid the angry storm;
And borne affliction's rod
When death in ev'ry frightful form
Had barred the path she trod.

Her blood in torrents has been poured
On Rome on hill and plain,
Mt. fell by fire and by the sword,
And were th. felon's chain.

Beneath uncounted altars she
Has mixed the martyr cry,
For vengeance on the Papal See—
For [illegible] on high!

Full deep she's drunk the bitter cup;
But this inspiring thought—
That with her reigning Lord she'd relax.
Made sweet the bitter lot.

And still she waits while shadows fall
Across the way she treads,
For Christ to break the mortal thrall,
And crown immortal heads.

Oh gladness-day! so near at hand—
That scatters all the gloom,
That hangs on thick'ning ev'ry land
And over the silent tomb.

AN OPEN LETTER TO VERY DEAR FRIENDS.

Dear Nephew and Niece:

We were glad to again hear from you; to learn of your continued well-being and prosperity. Our health remains much the same as usual, though age begins to silver our hair, and bring in its train the ills and infirmities incident to our time of life. Times are close and money scarce and the money hard to get hold of. We have not seen more cramping times financially, at any time in Kansas—not even in 1874—than we have experienced this winter.

I received the copy of a paper entitled The Stumbling Stone, which you sent me, requesting my opinion in regard to its teachings. I have carefully perused it and find many things to commend, and also, some that certainly are unsupported by Bible testimony. The editor sharply condemns the "sects" professing to rely on the plain statements of Scripture for a basis of faith and practice, and yet, teaches some things diametrically opposed to that blessed word. Thus, in his answer to J. T. Bliphael, he says, "There is more hope of heaven for one who says it is right to steal," etc., and again, in the same article, "There is more hope of heaven a thousand fold for all the world's sinners than any such as forget God's law to justify divisions of his church." This is sufficient to show that "heaven" is his great objective point as the reward for the righteous, while the opposite is taught by inspiration. Let us see: Isaiah says, xlv. 18, "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited." Again, David in the Psalms, xxv. 12, 13, "What man is he that feareth the Lord? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose; his soul shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the world." Solomon declares, "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and ungodly." Prov. xi. 31. Jesus says, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5; and when John, the revelator, as he is sometimes called, heard the seventh angel sound his trumpet, he says, "and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever." Rev. xi. 15. See also the song of the redeemed as recorded in Rev. v. 9, 10, "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Daniel says, "And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," vii. 27. See also the promise made to the overcomers of Rev. ii. 26, 27, and, the promised reward to the disciples as recorded in Matt. xix. 28, and Luke xxii. 29, 30.

What shall we say more? God's plan in relation to this beautiful earth and its inhabitants is one of the greatest that has ever been contemplated by men or angels. The subject of the kingdom of God, (the reward in reservation for obedient believers in the gospel) is the central point, the key-note of all revelation. Every fact in relation to God's revelation to man is subservient to it. For its establishment, the earth was, in the beginning, brought into existence; the successive ages of the world (cosmos) have passed into, and become part of geological history. Man was created; God's purpose was revealed to man; the Abrahamic promise (the only gospel) was made; the kingdom of Israel was brought into existence and overthrown, as the prophets prophesied. For this purpose Christ Jesus was conceived, born and lived; for this cause he suffered and died, and to this end God raised him from the dead. It is the burden of all his teachings while here on earth both before and after his resurrection, and the ultimatum of all the apostles taught.

The kingdom of God is the grand river-bed that will carry forward the waters of life, till the grand consummation is reached in its complete establishment, and completness, with the Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords, on Mount Zion. Each pulsebeat of the great heart of God Almighty is responded to by all things, organic and inorganic, animate and inanimate, to promote its welfare, and prepare for its coming. Even the intended wrath of men as displayed in the tres. of armies and the clash of arms, but hastens the advent of the glorious period. The glories of heaven belong to God alone. Those, who in ancient times desired to reach heaven, were confounded by a confusion of their languages, and it seems to me, today, the theological confusion of tongues is dependent on the same cause. It was declared by Peter (See Acts ii. 34), "For David is not ascended into the heavens." but that, "he is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." ii. 29. Christ told the Pharisees, chief priests and officers, "yet a little while I am with you, and then I go unto him that sent me; ye shall seek me and shall not find me, and where I am thither ye cannot come;" Jno. vii. 33; and he bears the disciples; those loved ones who had followed him in his labors and sufferings,—likewise, "Little children," says he, "yet a little while I am with you, ye shall seek me and shall not find me, and as I said unto the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say unto you." If neither the Jews, who were the natural branches of the Abrahamic tree, nor the disciples, his immediate followers and the sharers of his life-joys and sorrows, who had been specially chosen to publish the glories of his future earth-reign, nor David, the man after God's own heart, were allowed to go to heaven, how shall we, poor, erring mortals of this day and age of the world, expect to succeed in effecting an entrance into that celestial reward.

Please look over your Bible, and if you find a promise, "no man saith the Lord,—promising a home in heaven as the reward for obedient living to God, please inform me at once, as I cannot find any such.

I am delivering a series of discourses at our school-house on the parallelism between the Bible teaching, and the teachings of the sciences of geology as shown in their respective records of creation. The subject is broad, wide and deep, but through a knowledge of God's truth, I think I can fully see the end from the beginning. "Truth, though crushed to the earth will rise again" and stand forth in immortal vigor and diffuse its light over all the earth, to the suppression of error and the honor and glory of God. I should like to open up God's beautiful book of the ages to you if I had the time and opportunity, and show you his finger marks all along the aions of the past, as well as in the present, and all the promises of the upcoming future, as displayed through God's telescope,—the Bible, science and profane history. I would be pleased to reply to some other statements of that editor, and possibly may do so at a future time. I gather that he ignores water baptism entirely and that the Holy Ghost leads and directs true believers in all their affairs of life. If I am incorrect please so inform me. We join in sending love and well wishes to you all.

Affectionately, Your Uncle and Aunt,

J. K. and E. E. THOMPSON.

Abraham and His Two Sons Isaac and Ishmael. Types of Future Heavenly Things.

I have found it good for a little season to tarry in the plain of "Mamre," where the Abrahamic tent was pitched, Gen. xiii. 18, for there it is written, "Abraham had two sons—the one by a bondmaid, and the other by a free woman." Gal. iv. 22. Paul declares, "That was not first which is spiritual but that which is natural: and afterward that which is spiritual," 1 Cor. xv. 46, the natural having been a shadow of good things to come, — or heavenly things, Col. ii. 17; therefore it is necessary that we should glean all the natural, before we can possibly unfold the spiritual. "Mamre" signifies "rebellious or bitter." After Abraham had obeyed the Lord in forsaking his kindred and father's house, Psa. xlv. 10, the Lord promised he would make of him a great nation, Gen. xii. 2, and also of the son of the bondwoman will I make a nation, because he is thy seed. Gen. xxi. 13.

"Hagar" which signifies a "stranger" or one who "fears" was to become the mother of this nation, — a child born after the flesh, Gal. iv. 25, as it is written, "They which are the children of the flesh these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed," Rom. ix. 8; notwithstanding he was a child of purpose even as Isaac. Hagar was the free woman's gift to Abram: thus we see the natural first, or law of carnal ordinances imposed on them until the time of reformation. Heb. ix. 10. She was a figure of that which Paul calls the "ministration of death," 2 Cor. iii. 7; and her child — the great nation bound by the Sinaitic law or the Jerusalem that now is and is in bondage with her children. "Sarai" signifies a mistress, who not comprehending the wonderful purpose of God, became antagonistic to the bondmaid which caused her to flee into the wilderness. There an angel of the Lord found her by a fountain of water in the way to Shur, Gen. xvi. 7, or that which beholds, symbolical of the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. Zech. xiii. 1. "The angel said unto her, 'Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence camest thou? and whither wilt thou go?' She said, I flee from the face of my mistress; but the angel said, 'Return to thy mistress and submit thyself under her hands, for I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude.'" The angel named the child Ishmael, or God shall hear. The "one who feared," named the angel "thou God seest me." And the springing well where the angel left her, was named "the well of him that liveth and seeth me", between Kadesh or "holiness," and Bered or "hail." In this we have a beautiful type of John iv. 14. The well of water springs up into everlasting life—whom the children of the bondwoman "shall with joy draw waters out of the wells of salvation," Isa. xii. 3. Ishmael was born, and when (thirteen years old, was circumcised—receiving in his flesh the seal of the everlasting covenant, which represented also a cutting off. Gen. xvii. 13. It is written, the word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision, saying, "Fear not, Abram, I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward." Then the Lord brought him forth abroad and said, look now toward the heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said thy seed be. It was at this time, when Abram's eye of faith grasped the purpose of God in this star-order of seed that his belief was counted to him for righteousness, Gal. iii. 6. When God blessed Isaac, dust and sand was not mentioned, but the stars only. Gen. xxvi. 4. Abram in his great desire for an heir would have chosen Eliezer, or the help of God: but the heir must be one born out of due time when nature had ceased her work, and all the impulses of the flesh had decayed. For there sprang even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars in the sky in multitude. Heb. xi. 12. Therefore a seed born after the spirit was Isaac—or the joyous laughing one. When he was promised Abram laughed, Gen. xvii. 17; also Sarai who declared God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me. Gen. xxi. 6. As Isaac was, so are ye children of promise. Gal. iv. 28.

When the Lord commanded Abram to look heavenward and tell the stars, it must have been in the night—unfolding to him the many who should be gathered out of the nations, during the Gentile night of darkness: those having turned many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars of the firmament, and when Abram beheld the spangled heavens, brilliant with God's glory, in symbol he saw multitudinous Christ; for he was not commanded to look at a single star — such as the bright morning and the beautiful evening star. Abram in becoming father of this heavenly order of seed,— a true figure of "the Jerusalem which is above,"—had to have his name changed to Abraham, for he was not only to be a father of families, but a father of a great multitude of kings and princes. Sarai's name was also changed to Sarah, which signifies "princess of the multitude." You will perceive the letter "h" is introduced in both names, which seems to have imparted royalty to both Abraham and Sarah.

When the angels of God were on their errand of destruction to Sodom, the joyous message was left in the tent of faithful Abraham, that a child should be born, Matt. i. 21, and a son given who was named from the womb, Gen. xvii. 19; of whom it is written, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not and to seeds as of many, but as of one and to thy seed, which is Christ. Gal. iii. 16, 21. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." When the promised one was weaned from the natural, Abraham made a great feast, Gen. xxi. 8; when no doubt the chosen one was made manifest, at this feast, spread by the Father of the faithful, and the free woman or mother of us all,—the mocking began, and the casting out soon followed. A development of the woman's seed brought enmity;—these two boys were nourished in the same tent, both having Abraham for their father, —but the two mothers, who represent ecclesiastical systems were far different; Abraham perceived not that he which was born after the flesh persecuted him born after the spirit. But Sarah, or "the Jerusalem above" said, "Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free." Gal. iv. 30. It would seem as though no great feast was spread for Ishmael although he was the older born, no doubt Hagar told him this, but encouraged him with the hope, he being the first born,—to him belonged the inheritance. At the gospel feast, the great feast of faith, when the antitypical Isaac was manifested, the mocking began, and the casting out soon followed.

When Beauty was sold for thirty pieces of silver, these "Bands" or the Commonwealth of Israel bound together by the Sinaitic law, was soon broken asunder. Zech. xi. 10-14. The glad tidings of a promised one, was not mentioned to the free woman, until the child born after the flesh was married with the cutting off—but when the great feast was spread, and the standard of seed was made manifest, the tent of the free woman could no longer hold the child of bondage. "Mamre" then became the scene of rebellion, which seems to have brought bitterness to Abraham, but when he perceived the wonderful purpose or design of God wrapped up in Isaac, "he prayed to the Lord saying, O that Ishmael may live before thee!" I have heard thee concerning Ishmael, he shall live in the presence of his brethren, was the answer. After this the Abrahamic door was soon closed against the "bondmaid" and her son: a pitcher of water, and a morsel of bread was all that was given her. Again she seeks a refuge in the wilderness; but no angel of the Lord salutes her, "no fountain of living water," no "well of him that liveth and seeth me" met the searching eye of the outcast wanderer: the pitcher is empty, and not a drop can she find to cool the feverish lips of her dying child; hopeless and full of grief she casts him under a shrub to die alone; and at a distance she watches him, while the angel had declared "should become a multitude who could number." Shall the outcast, die in the wilderness,—having the seal of the everlasting covenant in his flesh,—with faithful Abraham's prayer and Jehovah's promise? surely not. Hagar could not find "the well springing up into everlasting life," for she represented that which genderetli to bondage,—which could not give life, for "it made nothing perfect," and only "the water of life from the well of him that liveth and seeth, could restore the dying boy, and none but the angel" of the covenant could comfort poor weeping Hagar by opening her eyes to see the well of life, for to the dying boy it was life-giving waters. God hath heard the voice of the lad, said the angel to Hagar, and of him I will make a great nation. The place where his thirst was quenched was called "Paran," which signifies an ornament of beauty. My brother have we not in this history much spiritual food? Is not this an exact outline of all the children of the bondwoman who are dying, but not dead, — naturally are they not in this condition? Even she law has cast them forth to die alone, like Hagar did her child. The water of life was nigh her, but she discerned it not, for blindness in part hath happened to Israel. But when her eyes were opened she saw the water of life and gave the precious draught to her dying one. You will mark, my brother, an angel was always near Hagar administering aid and comfort. For the law was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator (Moses). Also at the twelve gates, representing the twelve tribes — we perceive twelve angels, but no angel is represented in the twelve foundation stones. When the outcast seed of Jacob bound by the Sinaitic covenant shall again revive —it will be by the cleansing influences of the fountain of salvation—then the wilderness shall indeed be an ornament of beauty, of faithful Abraham, that is

ISRAEL AND THE PROMISES.

Race of the hoary centuries! children of captivity!
Soon for thee up erst dawns of marvellous fruitfulness!
The heritage of Salem's sons no tyrant's will can sever—
Jehovah's oath encircles it—and to thy seed forever.

What if beneath affliction's load thy soul is crushed to earth;
Successive ages fail to catch the sound of Zion's mirth;
Wait in thy sacred canon for the inviolate decree—
Thine enemies shall yet discern that "I have loved thee."

Who that reverses the pages of thine illustrious story,
Blumis sting the shadowy past with glimpses of thy glory,
Feels not the sting of bitter shame that thine oppressors dare
To claim the faith of one, himself, great David's heir?

O Israel of the ages, "loved for the fathers' sake,"
For Bible enchanting future expectancy awakes;
Hath not all this befallen thee, the weary road thou so trod,
"That thou might fear that glorious Name, the Lord thy God?"

Perchance the straitness of thy path, thorns thorny yet to come,
May turn thy "pillow of wandering foot" soon to be no more thine home;
Where exiled Judah, purged from dross, no longer will remain
A scattered stranger in the earth, but gathered in again.

For thee the world is waiting, yea, for thee the cycles roll,
Till the "fullness of the Gentiles" moves to jealousy thy soul;
Till Israel, in heaviness, shall hail her long sought Guest,
And, with the vision satisfied, be evermore at rest.

SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

When the blue-grey clouds begin to gather in the sky and more towards each other, though we may as yet have perceived neither flash nor sound, we know that a storm is impending, and that the quiet hills and valleys will soon be startled by the forked lightnings and by heavily pealing thunder. "Ye hypocrites," said our Lord to the Pharisees, "ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?" He spoke thus of his first coming, the signs of which are not nearly so fully depicted in Scripture as those of his second.

What, then, will he say to us if we fail to discover the secret of God in the things which are taking place around us, when we have so wonderful a commentary whereby to explain them? Even the statesmen, philosophers and thinkers of this world are expecting great changes in its social and political condition. Surely, then, it becomes us to search and see whether the ceaseless preparations which are everywhere apparent, the tendency of opinions in matters civil and religious, and the generally unsettled and frequently lawless state of Christendom, do not show that the last times of our age have come; that the world will shortly be confronted by her despised but rightful and all-powerful King; and, therefore, that his church—the living and the dead alike—no longer may but most speedily be summoned to meet him in the air.

Were we floating on a broad river which at no great distance was hurling itself in mighty cataract to a lower level, what should we infer when we found that we were being borne along more swiftly by the quickening stream, when we perceived an ever-increasing agitation in the waters around us, and began to hear mingling with the tumult the sound of a deeper roaring? Should we not at once understand that we were already within the rapids caused by the terrific fall?

And have we not exactly described the present condition of the stream of time? For both the prophets and the Lord himself foretold a mighty catastrophe which will usher in a new age; a season of perplexity and trouble immediately preceding the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; a general disruption and disintegration of society, amid wars, tumults, and the most appalling calamities, to be followed by the glorious reign of the Prince of Peace.

And are not the signs of our approach to these predicted days of terror continually multiplying around us? Do not events, which were wont to float by in slow procession, now chase each other before our bewildered eyes with such rapidity that they pass away in months, or it may be even in weeks, instead of years? Have not the currents of public opinion ceased to originate merely in the schemes of a few princes and statesmen—and is not every country torn by antagonistic factions which drag the State, now in this direction, now in that? Nay, are there not also multitudes of private individuals, who have each his own nostrum for cure of all the ever agitating society by thrusting themselves into notice?

THE SPREAD OF KNOWLEDGE.

Doubtless one chief cause of all this confusion has been that very thing which the world regards as a cure for every evil—the spread of knowledge. For many of those who acquire "a little learning"—and the majority of mankind can do no more—are not slow to give proof that in very deed

"shallow draughts intoxicate the brain," and are wont, by a confident and persistent setting forth of their opinions, to lead astray those whose ignorance exceeds their own, and in this manner to confound the counsels of wiser guides.

Education of a certain kind has indeed become general; but, alas! not with the expected result, since morals seem at the same time to be degenerating in inverse ratio. For how common is the lack of truthfulness, and that not merely in commercial life, but in all ranks of society! And this evil does not only exist, but is recognized as at least a venial fault, if not an absolute necessity. The law, "Swear to thine own hurt and change not," has no popularity in the present age, and he who breaks it will find many advocates and defenders.

Meanwhile the growing impatience and irritability of men, arising from the indulgence of generations, the abuse of stimulants and narcotics, and the painful pressure and excitement of modern life, are beginning to manifest themselves in deeds of recklessness and violence, such as may be found in the records of any newspaper; while lawlessness and crime of every description are increasing, and, often assume shapes difficult to detect or punish.

TERRIBLE WARS IMMINENT.

And over all this sin and misery the giant forms of still more terrible woes are projecting their advancing shadows. Europe is armed to an extent hitherto unknown, and has been converted into a vast camp through the jealousy of the great powers, which are simply waiting for an opportunity of carrying out their aggressive schemes. The most cruel and bloody war of our days has lately terminated in a peace which can be no more than a lull in the storm; for the dreaded Eastern problem is still unsolved. Few are those who expect more than a brief respite before the air is again tormented with the rush of shot and shell, and polluted with the smoke of burning villages and homesteads. And even during the short armed truce in Europe, wars have been raging in Asia, Africa, and America.

REVOLUTIONARY TERRORISM.

Yet again, the spread of Socialistic principles among all the nations of Christendom, and the numerous secret leagues organized for their propagation, are giving statesmen grave cause to apprehend a revolutionary outburst which may shatter the whole framework of society.

Nor are physical commotions wanted to heighten the excitement. The last few years have been unusually prolific in violent storms and inundations destructive to property. Earthquakes are frequent, and the shocks, though at present comparatively slight, seem by their ubiquity to betoken a widespread disturbance in the bowels of the earth, which may culminate in some appalling catastrophe. Famines, too, have occurred in divers places; in different parts of India, in Persia, in China, in Morocco, and in several other countries, while various kinds of disease seem to be more than usually prevalent.

And there are scientific men who suppose that impending astronomical events will render the next few years dismally memorable, and by vitiating the atmosphere cause an outbreak of epidemics and pestilence, like the frightful visitation of the times of Justinian, or the murderous "Black Death" of the fourteenth century, which, as it swept through Europe, is said to have slain five-and-twenty millions of souls, and to have deprived this island of more than half of its inhabitants.

PREMONITIONS OF THE GREAT TRIBULATION.

Now all these things—and many others which might be mentioned, do indeed forbode disasters and whispered distress, but not necessarily the last tribulation, the final throes of the world. For earth has had her times of convulsion, suffering and change in former days. God's sore plagues—war, famine, pestilence, and the beasts of the earth, have often desolated her lands in past years, and yet the end has not followed. Nay, were we to feel the solid ground trembling beneath us and behold the mountains lifted up and cast into the sea, even such a sight would not in itself prove that the great day of the Lord had come.

Men have often forgotten this, and, when appealing to Scripture, have too frequently drawn their inferences from an exaggeration of one or more detached texts, instead of carefully considering all that the prophets have spoken. Hence there have been many false alarms and panics.

A FALSE ALARM IN THE NINTH CENTURY.

A remarkable instance occurred at the close of the sixth century. At that time men had become so accustomed to the domination of Rome that they believed her power could only perish with the world itself. And so, when they saw her apparently in the pangs of dissolution, with her lands wasted by war, famine, and disease, to such a degree that many once populous places had become pestilential through neglect; when they beheld her supplies cut off and not a few of her buildings destroyed by storms and inundations, they imagined that the world also had run its course, and that the last dread judgment was near at hand.

Gregory the Great was strongly imbued with this idea, and, in a letter to King Ethelbert, he thus expresses it: "We know from the word of Almighty God that the end of the present world is now at hand, and that the reign of the saints, which can never be terminated, is about to commence. And now that the end of the world is approaching, many things will take place which have not happened before. For there will be atmospheric changes, terrors from heaven, deranged seasons, wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places."†

And since there was an Antichrist required for the last days, Gregory was sure he had detected him in the Patriarch of Constantinople, John the Faster, who had just irritated the See of Rome by proclaiming himself Universal Bishop.

GROUNDLESS PANIC IN THE TENTH CENTURY.

Again, in the tenth century, there was a still more general panic. It was supposed that Satan had been bound from the time of our Lord's first appearing, and that, since the thousand years were almost accomplished, he was about to be loosed as a preparation for the last judgment. As the supposed time of this event drew nearer the terror of men became piteous. Some handed over their property to the monkish foundations, and set out on a pilgrimage to Palestine, whither they expected Christ to descend. Many actually bound themselves by solemn oaths to be serfs to the churches or monasteries, in the hope that, if they were found acting as servants to the servants of Christ, they would be more gently dealt with at the Judgment. Buildings were allowed to fall into decay, since it was supposed that there would be but little further use for them. And if there happened to be an eclipse of the sun or moon, affrighted crowds would fly to the caverns of the rocks, or to any other places which they thought might shelter them from the glory of the dreaded appearing.‡ But the year one thousand passed by; nothing happened, and the excitement subsided.

Now these alarms, and many others, sprang from crude and baseless arguments which do not for a moment endure the test of intelligent investigation. And their result was something more than the delusion of those who were affected by them, for they caused a general discredit of, and distaste for, the Prophetic Scriptures; since men are ever ready to cast upon the Word of God the blame of that failure which is solely due to their foolish and short-sighted interpretation.

NEED FOR UNDERSTANDING PROPHETIC TRUTH.

Our duty, then, is to take heed that we be not carried away by vain expectancy, of which there are too many in our day; but we must be still more careful to avoid the opposite extreme. It is better to be troubled by many false alarms than to be once taken by surprise. The inhabitants of the earth must awake some morning to find that the day of the Lord is present; and as a snare will it come upon those who have not understood the warnings of revelation. It is, then, our duty to pray for wisdom that we may understand, and for the power of the Holy Spirit that we may watch. Nay, could words be stronger than our Lord's injunction upon this point: "Take ye heed," he said, "watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning; lest, coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch!"

THE NEXT EVENT TO BE EXPECTED.

If we discover that the revealed counsels of God place before us the translation of the church as the next event to be expected; and, still further, that the present bent of human opinion, and the general condition and tendency of the world, are already in the direction of those apostasies, convulsions, revolutions, and judgments, which will affect men after the withdrawal of the Church; then we shall indeed have reason to believe that our age has entered upon its last days, and that those who would be Christ's at his coming have urgent need to keep their garments, lest he be suddenly revealed, and they be found naked, so that all men see their shame. —G. H. Pember, A. M., in Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

In a speech delivered at Aylesbury, Sept. 30, 1856, the late Lord Brougham is thus alluded to: "In another formidable element of distraction: "In the attempt to conduct the government of this world, there are now elements to be combined with which our predecessors had not to deal. We have not to deal only with emperors, princes, and ministers, but there are the armed soldier—an element which cannot take into consideration—which cannot see the bearings of things—which sees only the enemy before it, which has its eyes open to its front, which cannot see behind it, which cannot turn round to look at the consequences of its own actions, which cannot take into consideration any thing but the word of command, and which, if necessary, could produce a tag-rag."

†See Gregory's sermon on The Plague, and Gibbon, chaps. xliii. and xlv. From a passage of Procopius (Anec. lote cap. xviii.), quoted by the latter, it appears to have been calculated, in regard to the times of Justinian, that no fewer than 100,000,000 of human beings had been exterminated under the reign of the imperial demon."

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts i. 11.

For three years Christ preached on earth, teaching the multitudes who followed him of divine things, pointing out how he came to fulfil the law, and to be the teacher of a new covenant. One remarkable fact characterized his preaching, in speaking of the future, it was always of his second coming and of the judgment day. He never described the joys of the blessed, nor the horrors of the second death, he never tempted men with the glories of the New Jerusalem, or terrified them with glimpses of the corruption awaiting those who sow to the flesh, but always placed before them the time when he should come in his glory, to judge the world. In parting with his disciples he told them, "Let not your hearts be troubled. I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again and receive you unto myself."

For many years Christ's followers looked for his coming, until gradually the belief crept into the church that the second coming of which he spoke had no literal meaning, but referred to the hour of death, at which time he came to each individual to summon him to the bar of judgment. For centuries the mass of Christians believed this, and taught that Christ came to each one when earthly scenes were fading away, and that the judgment, and reward or punishment followed. As men began to study the Bible more earnestly, praying for divine guidance, as the darkness of superstition faded before the light of knowledge and freer thought, the literal meaning of Christ's own words became revealed. For orthodox churches accept this doctrine. The Episcopal church stands almost alone, in its creed, "I believe that Christ ascended into heaven; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead."

It is impossible to understand why professing Christians as a body object to the personal coming of Christ. To one who carries no theological chips on his shoulders to be guarded, and whose rule of life consists in loving God with all the soul, mind and strength, and his neighbor as himself, it would seem a fit and proper thing that Christ should come again to the earth, where he was reviled, scourged, spit upon and crucified, and should come in triumph with all his holy angels with him, should come as the acknowledged Son of God. A noted divine was asked, not long since, if he did not believe in the speedy personal coming of Christ. He replied, "No! I do not. I regard that idea as a device of the devil." That man's opinion is of little account, only as he voiced the belief of many professing Christians who have settled in their own minds what Christ will do, doing so in the majority of cases, because the church to which they belong believes so, and any other doctrine they call heretical.

That he will come to judge the world the Bible most emphatically declares. David sang long before this birth, "For he cometh, he cometh to judge the earth." Zechariah prophesied, "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee." Malachi said, "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?" David believed "our God shall come and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people."

Christ said to his disciples, "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." "And Jesus said, ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory." "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you." Such was Christ's oft-repeated promises to his disciples, "I will come to you." Not once did he speak of their coming to him at death. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." He wrote to the Philippians, "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." To the Thessalonians he said, "And to wait for his Son from heaven, which he raised from the dead, even Jesus." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." To Timothy he wrote, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."

Peter said, "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." John, the beloved disciple, wrote, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."

Not only do the Scriptures teach the second coming of Christ, but they also enjoin upon his disciples the duty of waiting for him, of watching for him, "as they that watch for the morning." The promise is only to those who are waiting for their Lord. "As it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." — St. Paul Daily Globe.

MARCH.

LUCIA M. MILLARD.

Soft March goes through the woods in spring:
Tells flowers to bloom and birds to sing,
With the tale of green he marks the trees,
Where mosses fauns contain wearer.

With golden glow he crowns the hills;
With kindling glow the heart startles,
He frees the streams enchained so long,
And makes their gurling like a song.

He tunes the wind's grand anthem high;
He opens the day's starry eyes;
He sweeps the green cathedral aisle,
And wakes the violet's sleeping smile.

Through the tall trees the blackbirds sing,
The warbling larks high heavenward wing,
While on the sea in tuneful peals,
The blackcap's silvery sweetness steals.

March is the name given to the third month of the year. According to tradition it was so named by Romulus, in honor of Mars—Lat. Martius—who, according to the legend, was father to Romulus, the reputed founder of Rome. It is the first month of Spring, and this season of the year was called by the old Saxons lencten, from lengan, to lengthen, from the lengthening of the days. We call this season of the year "Spring," because the leaves, grasses, garden and field vegetables, and flowers, "spring forth" at this time. The violet is a spring blossom. It is said that no perfumer has ever been able to extract its sweet odors. A lady writer says: "We might as well ask the star for its gold, as the violet for its sweet. Its ruthless claim it keeps and gives to all itself. The poet cannot give his heaven-born gift, and the violet imitates's pure sweet poem." March brings another flower, which one has said, was one of the first flowers that strayed and grew outside of Eden. This is the daisy. Shall we tell our young readers what this name means? Webster says the word is from the Saxon dæges-eage—which is "day's eye." In this month our readers will see peculiar looking things growing on the birch, the willow, the hazel, and the alder. These are called catkins, and to these singular flowers—for such they are—the bees go in the vernal sunshine to gather the pollen, or flower-dust, to fill the empty cells in their hives with what is sometimes called bee-bread. As we enter the new spring of the year let us try to all enter upon a new life.

Saving the Gospel.

"Have you ever heard the gospel before?" asked a missionary at Ningpo of a respectable Chinaman, whom he had not seen in his mission-room before.

"No," he replied, "but I have seen it. I know a man who used to be the terror of his neighborhood. If you gave him a hard word, he would shout at you and curse you for two days and two nights, without ceasing. He was as dangerous as a wild beast, and a bad opium smoker: but when the religion of Jesus took hold of him, he became wholly changed. He is gentle, moral, not soon angry, and has left off opium. Truly the teaching is good."—Word and Work.

Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained praise." A little child of three summers, absorbed with her playthings while a Christian lady conversed with her mother on the duty of personal piety, was so impressed that, when that lady called again, she hastened to tell mother, and with a face beaming with interest, exclaimed, "Mamma, that lady has come again to get us ready for God."

Everything of fame, wealth and glory must pass away. "But the things which are not seen are eternal." Like the tints of the summer rainbow, the bloom of the flower, and the resplendence of the sunset, fades the grandeur of earth. The foam sparkles a moment on the billow of ocean and is gone; the black chariot of Apollyon rolls on, crushing beneath its cruel wheels the splendor of man; and the gloomy banner of hades waves in triumph over the shattered domes of empire. Columns come crushing downward as time flings from his blade the full bloom of princes; but there is a glory which shall never fade, an empire on the Rock of Ages, which, when all evil shall have been entombed, shall be seen towering in sublimity and gleaming with the effulgence of "the eternal tabernacle."—G. R. Kramer.

FROM JERUSALEM.

JERUSALEM, Feb. 2, 1868.

Today, in company with my little friend and guide Charley, I went out to gather flowers. When we had gone about a mile away we looked toward the west and observed a dense black cloud. I told Charley that I thought we were going to be caught in a shower, and he thought so too. Well said I, what shall we do? He answered, "I think we can reach the school house."

We walked on briskly, and just reached an out house belonging to the school, when the storm struck. It proved to be a fearful scene; thunder, lightning, hail and rain. As we were standing there we observed a poor fellah woman sitting very quietly in the corner, and wondered why she was there. Very soon we saw a little troop of poor blind boys coming up the walk, all tied together with a rope. They were all quite wet through, having been pelted with the falling hailstones, and much frightened by the heavy peals of thunder. Some were crying and mourning sadly. My heart ached, I assure you, as I looked upon these poor boys. How I did wish that Jesus was here to give them sight; but I was powerless, could only pray "Thy Kingdom come."

Just at this point a man came up to me, and speaking in English, asked me if I was an English woman, I said, No, an American. He then told me that he was the teacher of the blind, and I then perceived that he was also blind. He said he became blind at three years of age, that he was born a Mohammedan, and was sent to the American Mission School at Beyroot, where he was converted to Christianity and educated for a teacher of the blind. I found him a very interesting man, and we had a long talk.

Just then Charley called my attention to a figure just within the gate. I saw the poor woman alluded to above. She was sitting in the same position and a lad had seated himself beside her; he was also stone blind. He was fondly caressing the poor woman, who the teacher told me was his mother. He said this poor lad became blind three years ago. He was the only child of this poor woman, her only comfort; he had been in this school two years, had not heard from his mother for five months, and began to think she was dead and to mourn for her. Said the teacher, last night he had a dream. He thought his mother came to see him. He told the teacher in the morning, asking, "If my mother is dead do you think I should have had this dream?"

The teacher answered that "Coming events sometimes cast there shadows before, and perhaps this was a good dream."

Well, about eleven o'clock his mother really did appear, after having traveled on foot and alone twenty seven miles to see her poor blind boy. She opened her little bundle, which she had brought with the mother's love, took from it a large cake, and some eggs, which she put into the boy's hands, and my little guide was astonished to see how eagerly he devoured this little home morsel. You see it was from home, from a kind mother's hand, and it was sweeter to him than any delicacy that we could have brought him.

I must tell my little readers that no scene has ever moved my heart with the varied emotions like this. A mother's love for her poor stricken child. She felt no fatigue, her love and joy at seeing her boy outweighed all other trials. For this poor Mohammedan woman, I prayed fervently, that when Messiah shall come he will remember her.

The teacher gave me a bouquet of beautiful wild flowers which were gathered by the poor blind boys. I could not make out how they did it, but they were welcome to my collection, I assure you.

I hope this little story, which is true, will interest my little readers, and I will try and write another soon.

May God bless you evermore.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 21.

Prelude—By what various families has the Island of Great Britain been ruled? Who are its Aborigines? Sketch its revolutions. Its British Phase. Trace the people that have given that nation its great vitality.—Anglo-Saxon family followed to their European home. Their early acts and particular characteristics.

Prelude.—By what various families, or races, has the Island of Great Britain been ruled? This Island, small as it is, has been the theatre of many bloody revolutions. Its ancient inhabitants were savages of the order of cannibals. Who were its aborigines? That term had its origin from the exploded idea, that man, like vegetation, sprang out of the earth; and that, originally, he grew up from many centres. The world has been peopled by one couple, and from one centre. After the flood, three families peopled the earth: those of Ham, Shem, and Japheth;—formerly said to be distributed as follows: Ham and his posterity settled Africa; Shem, Asia; and Japheth, Europe and its Islands. Further researches have modified this view very materially. The most ancient British population will form an exception to the above order of colonization, as we shall see in our investigations. The most ancient Britons were Shemitic. How ancient; and what were their tribal names, shall now be considered.

In the slow spread of population after the flood, Europe would not be occupied till centuries after the settlement of Asia; and then by nomadic races, rather than by a settled population. Britain, being an Island, would be still later in its settlement. From its location, it would be first occupied by families from Europe. Does history corroborate this statement? Who were the first inhabitants of Great Britain? And at what period did they occupy the Island?

The earliest population of the British Islands were called Kimmerians and Kelts. Who were they? Whence did they come? The Irish, Gauls, Welsh, Cornish, Armoricans, Erse, and Manks, are Celtic, (pronounced Keltic). It is enough, at present, to trace the Kymri, and Kelts, to their European homes; after that we shall follow them further toward the sun-rising.

This Nomadic race, before passing over into the British Island, was composed of various families: all exceedingly hostile to the settled class of mankind, called civilized: whom they fall at liberty whenever an occasion offered, to attack and plunder. They were the scouts and pickets of the original army of occupation—on earth's historics found the Kimmerians the most advanced in the northwest part of the European continent; and the Kelts in the southwestern portion of Europe. They had gradually moved towards western and northern Europe till they were stopped by the ocean. After occupying for centuries the extreme west of Europe, they passed over into Britain; and, finding it unoccupied, except by unbroken forests and donizon wild beasts, they gradually spread over the Island.

The original Britons were, therefore, Kimmerian or Keltic. They spoke the Keltic; the first of the three European generic languages.—the western, and consequently, the oldest. The middle European language is the Gothic or German; the eastern is the Sinvonic or Russian language. These three generic tongues form the parent stock of the European languages, and mark three distinct waves of western emigration. The members of the Keltic family are the Welsh, the Gaelic, the Irish, the Cornish, the Armoric, the Manks, and the ancient Gaulish tongue. The Kelts occupied the British Island some centuries before Christ (B. C. 700). The ancient Britons were conquered by the Romans; first, under Julius Cæsar; and by Agricola. It remained a Roman Province four centuries, during which domination it came under Roman civilization. It being abandoned by the Romans, it was invaded and conquered by the Angles and Saxons. During their dominion the island was exposed to the attacks of the sea-kings (pirates), from Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Still the Anglo-Saxon reign continued till their conquest by the Normans, or North men (Danes and Norweginns) A. D. 1013. It continued under Danish or Norse rulers till 1042, when it reverted into the Saxon hands of Edward the Confessor. It was restored to the Norse family by William the Conqueror A. D. 1066. The Norman French was made the legal language of the realm. From this time, and onward,—the Anglo-Saxon — was the ruling power of Great Britain. A Briton of the present British Empire is a mixture of all the Keltic and Gothic families; still we shall call him by the name of the governing race — Anglo-Saxon; — and still more definitely—Saxon.— The British or Saxon Empire.

We shall examine that family: 1. In its European home. a. Its infancy. b. During its age of sea-kings, or piracy. c. Its conquests in England and on the continent. d. We shall follow the family eastward to its exile abodes. e. Then trace it to its paternal residence. f. Then we shall trace the chronological order of its western emigrations. 1. Anglo-Saxon in his European home. Anglo-Saxon is a term compounded of Angle, and Saxon: of the Angles, a passing notice will be sufficient. Who were the Angles?

The Angles were Goths, Scythians, or Germans (a modern name). They belonged to the family of the Suevi. They first appeared to the Romans dwelling in the woods of north Germany, between the Weser and Elbe. They moved north, they settled in Schleswig between the Jutes and the Saxons. They worshiped "Terram Matrem"—Mother Earth (Tacitus) — the wife of Odin. In the fifth century, [illegible] the Saxons in their conquest of England, and gave their name to the Island, (Lat. Anglia, Anglo-Saxo). Englaland. The remainder of the tribe mingled with the Danes. The district of Angeln is their modern home—pop. 50,006; sq. m. 330.

As the Jutes were associated with the Anglo-Saxons, we append a note from the history of the Anglo-Saxons, by Sharon Turner, F. A. S., R. A. S. L., author of "The sacred History of the World." "But those allies of the Saxons with whom the history of Britain is most connected, were the Jutes and Angles. The Jutes inhabited Jutland, or Jather part of it, which was formerly called South Jutland, but which is now known as Slesswick. The little band first introduced into England by Hengist and Horsa, were Jutes. Their name has been written with all the caprices of orthography. (His note then follows): As Geatum, Giotas, Jutas, Getas, Gautani, Jotuni, Getae, Jutae, Vitae, etc. The "Vetus Chronicon Holsatiae," p. 84, says the Danes and Jutes are Jews of the tribe of Dan! And Munster as wisely calls the Helvetii, Hill-Vitae, or Jutes of the hills! The Angles have been derived from different parts of the north of Germany. Rugern, in Westphalia, was a favorite position, because it seemed to suit the geography of Tacitus; Anglern, in Pomerania, had good pretensions from the similarity of its name, and part of the duchies of Mecklenburg and Lunenburg was chosen out of respect to Ptolemy; but the assertion of Bede and Alfred, which Camden has adopted, has, from its truth, prevailed over all. In the days of Tacitus and Ptolemy, the Angli may have been in Westphalia or Mecklenburg, or elsewhere; but at the era of the Saxon invasion, they were resident in the district of Angeln, in the duchy of Slesswick.

The duchy of Slesswick from the river Leversou, north of Kiel, to Tobaksel, on which stands Colding; but that particular position, which an ancient Saxon author calls Old Engeland, extends from the city of Slesswick to Flensburg. Slesswick was the capital of Anglen, and was distinguished in the eleventh century for its population and wealth. On a note he says, "The Angli might be made the parents of the Jutes. That they were kindred nations is clear from the identity of their language. Our Kentish Jutes have always talked as good English as our Mercian, and Norfolk, and York shire Anglo-Jutes. Angles, and Saxons, seem to have been several twigs of the same Teutonic branch of the great Scythian or Gothic tree. Some dialectic differences of pronunciation may be traced, but no real diversity of language."—Turner.

We have said all that is necessary for a clear understanding of the relationships of the Jutes and Angles, and of their European location. We are now prepared to investigate the European history of the Saxons.

European home of the Saxons. As introductory remarks, we shall again quote the history of Sharon Turner:—"The Anglo-Saxons were a people who transported themselves from the Cimbric peninsula and its vicinity, in the fifth and sixth centuries, into England. They were branches of the great Saxon confederation, which, from the Elbe, extended itself at last to the Rhine. The hostilities of this formidable people had long distressed the western regions of Europe; and when the Gothic nations overran the most valuable provinces of Rome, the Anglo-Saxons invaded Britain soon after the Romans quitted it. The ancient inhabitants, and the progeny of the Roman settlers, disappeared as the new conquerors advanced, or accepted their yoke; and Saxon laws, Saxon language, Saxon manners, government, and institutions, over-spread the land. This revolution, than which history presents to us none more complete, has made the fortunes of the Saxons, during every period, interesting to us. Though other invaders have appeared in the island, yet the effects of the Anglo-Saxon settlements have prevailed beyond every other. Our language, our government, and our laws, display our Gothic ancestry in every part, and they live, not merely in our annals and traditions, but in our habits, institutions and perpetual discourse. The parent-tree is indeed greatly amplified, by branches engrafted on it from other regions, and by the new shoots which the accidents of time, and the improvements of society, have produced; but it discovers yet its Saxon origin, and retains its Saxon properties, though more than thirteen centuries have rolled over, with all their tempests and vicissitudes. Although the Saxon name became on the continent, the appellation of a confederacy of nations, yet, at first, it denoted a single state. The Romans began to remark it during the second century of the Christian era; until that period, it had escaped the notice of the conquerors of the world; and the happy obscurity was rewarded by the absence of that desolation which their ambition poured profusely on mankind.

Their particular European location.—As early as A. D. 141, Ptolomy, the Alexandrian, in his Geography, says that there was a people called Saxons, on the north side of the Elbe, on the neck of Cimbric Chersonesus, and three small islands at the mouth of this river. The Saxons were then of but little note, since it was one of seven nations that dwelt in a small peninsula (Jutland, Slesswick, and Holstein): How long they had then dwelt in Europe, history does not state. That they resided in this northern European home, in the time of Tacitus, the Roman historian is quite certain, though not named. Tacitus has not given the names of all the German tribes: but, simply those that were noted among the Romans. In the days of Tacitus the Saxons were obscure, and in such a swampy and retired spot that they had escaped the cruel arms of the world's conquerors. One thing is quite sure, however, they did not spring fortuitously from their Mother Earth, as claimed by the Athenians, under the symbol of a "golden grasshopper." Ptolemy, writing Geography, names seven nations, dwelling in the Cimbric Chersonesus; Tacitus, writing history, names only four, such only, as had a record among the Romans. This fully accounts for the omission. Tacitus is more particular than Strabo in his German Geography; and Ptolemy, being still later is more particular than Tacitus. Here let us state, in the outset that Europe has been peopled by three great stocks, differing in language, manners and customs. 1. The first and oldest were the Kimmerians and the Kelts. 2. The Gothic Scythians, or Germans. 3. The Slavonians and Sarmatians, occupying severally the western, the middle, and the east of Europe. Their geographical locations fixes the order of their migrations.

"The second stock of the European population is peculiarly interesting to us, because from its branches not only our own immediate ancestors, but also those of the most celebrated nations of modern Europe, have unquestionably descended. The Anglo-Saxon, Lowland Scotch, Normans, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, Germans, Dutch, Belgians, Lombards, and Franks, have all sprung from that great fountain of the human race, which we have distinguished by the terms Scythian, German, or Gothic." — S. Turner.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 6.

THE TEMPLE AND ITS COURT.

After two or three attempts to get a peep at the sacred enclosure through the open gateways, where we met with a somewhat rude reception from the guardian dervishes, we passed on to the Serai, or Pasha's palace, at the north-west corner. My companion had the entree, and we were soon on the terraced roof which commands the whole Haram. From this point the various buildings are seen to great advantage. I was struck with the obsoleteness of design, and wonderful minuteness and delicacy of detail, in the Saracenic architecture. The central mosque is a perfect gem. The encaustic tiles which cover the whole exterior, reflect in gorgeous hues the bright sunlight. Over the windows and round the cornices are borders of beautifully interlaced Arabic characters, so large that one can easily read them. The graceful dome and its golden crescent crowns the whole. The position of the building on its marble platform, raised high above the surrounding area, adds vastly to its appearance. It is octagonal in form, and about one hundred and sixty feet in diameter. The roof and dome are supported by three concentric circles of marble columns of the Corinthian order. Beneath the dome is the remarkable rock,—the sanctum of the whole Haram,—which gives to the building its name Kubbet es-Sukhrah, "The Dome of the Rock." It is the top of the hill; — the crown of Mount Moriah, rough and irregular in form, and rising five or six feet above the marble floor. Beneath it is a small excavated chamber, called the "Noble Cave." The Jews regard this rock as the holiest spot on earth. Here, they tell us, Abraham offered his sacrifice; here was the threshing-floor of Ornan which David bought, and on which Solomon built the Temple. 2 Sam. xxiv.; 1 Chron. xxi.; 1 Kings vi.; 2 Chron. iii. We learn from the Talmud that the great altar of burnt offering was erected on it, and that the cave beneath was excavated as a cesspool to drain off the blood. Thus the exact site of Solomon's Temple is identified; and thus, too, we see that the golden crescent — the symbol of the false prophet—is now raised on high, as if in scorn and derision, over the very spot where the Shekinah glory appeared of old. Ezekiel's prophecy is fulfilled, "I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses.... And their holy places shall be defiled." vii. 24.

The poor Jew may now truly exclaim, as he looks down from his squalid dwelling on the brow of Zion:—

"Our temple hath not left one stone,
And mockery sits on Salem's throne."

The whole Haram area is artificial. Part of it round the great mosque has been cut down, while the outer portions are raised, and the southern section is supported on massive piers and arches. The subterranean chambers thus formed are chiefly used as cisterns for storing water. In former times they were supplied by an aqueduct from Solomon's Pools.

The other buildings in the Haram have comparatively little interest. On the right, adjoining the city, are ranges of Dervish colleges, with cloisters opening on the grassy area. Away in the south-west is El-Aksa with a pointed roof and Gothic facade. To the left of the great mosque, and only a few paces distant, is a beautiful cupola, supported on slender marble columns; it was built by the Calif Abd el-Melek, some say as a model for the Dome of the Rock.

Via Dolorosa.—A narrow lane which runs in a zig-zag line from the door of the Serai to the Church of the Sepulchre has been dignified by the name Via Dolorosa, because along it, says tradition, our Lord passed from the Judgment Hall to Calvary. I shall neither insult the understandings of my readers, nor shock their feelings by any description of the Seven Stations, which monkish imposture has located here. We passed along the street, making various excursions to the right and left in order to get a fuller view of the city, and to visit objects of interest. We looked into the Pool of Bethesda, so called,—but which seems to be a portion of the great fosse which protected the fortress of Antonia on the north; and we visited the Church of St. Anne, not far distant,—a chaste building of the Crusading age, recently given by the Sultan to the French Emperor. "Most of the city is very solitary and silent; echo answers to your tread; frequent waste places, among which the wild dog prowls, convey an indescribable impression of desolation; and it is not only these waste places that give such an air of loneliness to the city, but many of the streets themselves, dark, dull, and mournful looking, seem as if the Templars' armed tread were the last to which they had responded." Another thing strikes the thoughtful traveller,—the remains of the ancient city that meet the eye are singularly few; here and there, a column in the wall, or a marble slab in the footway, or a fragment of bevelled masonry, or a Gothic arch protruding from a modern [illegible]—these are all that whisper memories of the distant past. The Jerusalem of Solomon, and the Jerusalem of Herod, and even a great part of the Jerusalem of the Crusades, lie deeply buried beneath the modern lanes and houses.

THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE

Has been for fifteen hundred years the chief point of attraction to Christian pilgrims. Its history may be told in a sentence or two. Founded by the Emperor Constantine, it was dedicated in A. D. 335—Eusebius, the father of ecclesiastical history, taking part in the consecration service. It was destroyed by the Persians in 614, and rebuilt; sixteen years afterwards on a new plan. It was again destroyed by the mad Calif Hakim, the founder of the Druse sect, and rebuilt in 1048. During the Crusades many changes and additions were made. The Rotunda, the Greek Church on its eastern side; the western facade, including the present door and tower, and the chapel over Calvary, were then erected in whole or in part. The buildings remained as the Crusaders left them till the year 1808, when they were partly destroyed by fire. They were restored, and the church, as it now stands, was consecrated in 1810.

Turning from the Via Dolorosa into a narrow lane, we soon reach an open court, its pavement worn by the feet of innumerable pilgrims, and usually littered with the wares of trinket merchants, dealers in beads, crosses, "holy" soap, and "blessed" candles, which are eagerly bought up by strangers. On the northern side of the court stands the church. Its southern facade, the only one now uncovered, is a pointed Romanesque composition, dark, heavy, and yet picturesque. It has a wide double door, with detached shafts supporting richly sculptured architraves, representing our Lord's triumphant entry into Jerusalem. Over the door are two corresponding windows, and on the left stands the remnant of the massive Campanile, once a noble tower of five stories, but now cut down to three.

On entering, it was with shame and sorrow I observed a guard of soldiers—Mohammedan soldiers—stationed in the vestibule to keep rival Christian sects from quarreling over the tomb of their Savior. The principal part of the building is the Rotunda, which has a dome open at the top, like the Pantheon. Beneath the dome stands the Holy Sepulchre, a little structure, like a church in miniature encased in white stone profusely ornamented, and surmounted by a crown-shaped cupola. It contains two small chambers—the first called the "Chapel of the Angel," and said to be the place where the angel sat after he had rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre. The stone itself is there too! Through this we pass, and enter the Sepulchre by a very low door. It is a vault, measuring six feet by seven. The tomb—a raised couch covered with a slab of white marble — occupies the whole of the right side. Over it hang forty lamps of gold and silver, kept constantly burning. I lingered long here — solemnized, almost awe-stricken—looking at pilgrim after pilgrim, in endless succession, crawling in on bended knees, putting lips and forehead and cheeks to the cold marble, bathing it with tears, then dragging himself away backwards, still in the attitude of devotion, until the threshold is again crossed. The vault is said to be hewn out of the rock, but not a vestige of rock is now visible; the floor, tomb, walls, are all marble. The rock may be there; but if so, how one should wish

"The fetters now were free to untie
O'er the dark entrance of that rock-hewn cell.
Say, should we miss the gold-encrusted shrine
Of incense-fame's bewitching spell?"

The Rotunda and Sepulchre are common property. All sects—Latin, Greek, Armenian, Coptic, Jacobite—have free access to them, but each has its own establishment elsewhere. Round the Holy Sepulchre are numerous other "holy places," no less than thirty-two being clustered under one roof. Golgatha, the Stone of Unction, the Place of Apparition, the Chapel of Mocking, the Chapel of the Invention of the Cross—But why go over such a catalogue? I would not willingly mingle one light feeling of [illegible] expressed with the Christian [illegible] the Crucifixion. Yet it is difficult to speak of these "holy places" gravely. It is difficult to forget how seriously such superstitions and traditions hinder the success of missionary enterprise, and how often they make Christianity a mockery in the land which gave it birth.

On another occasion, I was in the Church of the Sepulchre at Easter, when crowded with pilgrims from all lands, of all sects. It was a strange and impressive, but painful scene. In that vast crowd, with the exception of a few solitary cases, I saw nothing like devotion; and in these few cases devotional feeling had manifestly degenerated into superstition. Place was the object of worship, and not God. The bitter animosities of rival sects came out on all sides, among the clergy as well as their flocks: and it was only the presence of the Turkish guard that prevented open war. I was then glad to think that the real place of our Lord's Passion was not dishonored. True, Christianity is a spiritual faith; it recognizes no "holy places." Yet god's natural feelings revolt at the bare idea of Calvary becoming the scene and the cause of superstition and strife.

But some of my readers will doubtless ask, "Does not the Church of the Sepulchre cover the real tomb of our Lord?" The question involves a long and tangled controversy, on which I care not to enter. I may, however, give my own first impressions on the subject — impressions which thought and study have since deepened into conviction. Before visiting Jerusalem, I knew from Scripture that Christ was crucified "without the gate," Heb. xiii. 12, at a place called Golgotha, Matt. xxvii. 33, apparently, beside a public road, v. 39. I also knew that the "sepulchre" was "hewn out of a rock," Mark xv. 46, in a garden near Golgotha. John xix. 41, 42. On visiting Jerusalem, I was not a little surprised to observe the dome of the Church of the Sepulchre far within the walls—in fact, nearly in the centre of the city. Yet the city in our Lord's day must have been four or five times larger than it is now. It seemed to me that topography alone makes identity all but impossible. But whatever may be thought of traditional "holy places," Zion and Moriah, Hinnom, Olivet, and the Kidron are there. What though the royal palace has become "heaps," and the temple has "not one stone left upon another!" What though the "Holy City" is "trodden down of the Gentiles," and mockery is enshrined in its sanctuary! The glens which echoed back the monarch minstrel's song, the sacred court within whose colossal walls Israel assembled to worship a present God, the hills over which Jesus walked, and on whose sides he taught and prayed, the vines, the figs, the olives which suggested his beautiful parables, — all are there; and no controversies or scandals can ever change their features, or rob us of the hallowed memories they recall and the illustrations of divine truth they afford.

Infidelity reproves nothing that is bad. It only ridicules and denounces all that is good. It tears down—it never constructs; it destroys—it never imparts life; it attacks religion, but offers no adequate substitute.

If we would reap life everlasting in the age to come, we must now sow to the Spirit, and manifest its fruit.

"To live in shade, yet trust the sun;
To bravely struggle while others run;
To suffer pain, and yet believe
That just enough ones will receive;

Persuaded that each lot must be
The best for each eternally.

Miracles to us are no miracles to God. It was as easy for him to save the three Hebrews in the fire, as to save Lot from the fire.

No matter what others do or refuse to do; the man who is faithful will work out his own salvation. The promise of the crown is made to the singular: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

To bear with wrong, and wait for right,
Believing that the darkest night
Means only growth for timorous souls;
To see some good in rankest weeds;
To feel the love that watches o'er
Those left behind, those gone before;
To be bereft, yet know no care,
And find the highest fruits indoors,

Knowledge is not extemporaneous. It is not a sudden acquisition, any more than a ship, or a palace, or a city with its splendid mansions, spacious avenues or extended commerce, are extemporized creations. Knowledge comes by endeavors, small and yet continually repeated. It grows, as wealth, by constant increments. The light of studious hours shine in the speeches of the wise. We sometimes listen to one in conversation and are tempted to credit him with intuitive sagacity, with native wisdom, whereas his rich and ready speech pours its golden opulence only as molten metal gushes out from the open furnace when it has felt the purifying fires within. Research and experiment, successes and failures, have wrought together to make his knowledge accurate, compact and available.—H. N. Sperry.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 21, 1883.

SEVERAL deferred communications will appear in course. We are crowded with articles just at this time.

A LETTER from Mrs. Davis will be found in this number. We have another contribution from her also for next week, on the Mount of Olives and adjacent scenery. We most earnestly solicit a continuance of her communications. Will write her soon.

On Sunday, the 18th, we baptized a young sister—Miss Ida Huff—who, accompanied by her mother, had come from Logansport to put on Christ in this the way of his own appointment. Our sister was in earnest and in no way disposed to put off obedience to a more convenient season. Accordingly, at 5 p. m., we met at the river's edge, and notwithstanding the cold day and cold water planted her into the likeness of the Redeemer's death. May she walk in the newness of life.

THE news is important but we cannot condense it for our paper this time, as our columns are already full. There was an attrocious attempt to blow up public buildings with dynamite in London on the 15th of this month. This attempt was so far successful as to cause a great deal of damage. This cowardly act was supplemented with another still more detestable. A murderous but unsuccessful attack was made on the 18th upon Lady Florence Dixie, by two low-lived ruffians disguised in women's clothes. The Public Journals from which we extract the news attribute these cowardly crimes to the Fenians.

PROF. GARDNER requests a correction of the numerical expression in an article in the issue of March 14. The difficulty is that we have no type to set up arithmetical signs or fractional numbers. The only way we can print the fraction—one-half is 1-2—one-third is 1-3, etc. We will try to set up again with this explanation:

"Then we have in this 40 years of the Book of Numbers a numerical expression which is a type or pattern, or numerical [illegible] which stands in relation [illegible] multiplied [illegible] 1-9 [illegible] tion will [illegible] work the problem.

OUR friends who are sending THE RESTITUTION to the persons named in this letter below, which we copy from the Bible Banner of March 8, will be pleased to know something more, in addition to what we have already published, about what progress the truth concerning conditional immortality, or eternal life in Christ alone, is making in India. The Bible Standard is sent to this office by some kind friend, and, as will be seen, is also sent to our co-worker in the truth, C. Massillamini, in Southern India. We are sending THE RESTITUTION to him and to Mr. Spence. To the latter taken from the Banner we append a brief concerning matters in New Zealand, taken from the Standard. We send a RESTITUTION to Auckland.

INDIA LETTER.

NAGERCOIL, East India.

Mr. J. Spence:—My Dear Sir:—

I feel very sorry because I could answer your letter no earlier. The 500 copies of the Bible Banner No. 4, which you had sent with the letter, also have been received. I am glad to say the truth we advocate is rapidly spreading in the country. Some of the Christians read our tracts with eagerness. The Mission catechists and schoolmasters also come to my house more openly to get the Banner for their people. I have been told that one of the native ministers who, having read the No. 1, called it "a satanic teaching," is now partially convinced of the truth, and orders his catechists to read our tracts regularly. I have many particulars to write to you about the progress of the doctrine of life only in Christ. I shall soon supply you with a full account. I monthly send 20 copies of the Banner to each of the following places—Travancrum, Ceylon, Tinivilly, Christianpetta, Madura, Salem, Yerland, Coimbatore, and Veloor. The remainder I circulate among the Christians in South Travancore. Mr. King has promised to furnish me with addresses of some Christian friends who would likely circulate the Banner at Cotteyam, Aloppy, Cochin, Calicut, and other places along the Malabar coast. Through the help of one or two friends I was hitherto enabled to dispatch our tracts to various places in Southern India.

Col. Armstrong has kindly sent me a reply. My hearty thanks are due to him for his most affectionate advices and brotherly exhortations which greatly refreshed my spirit. I shall very soon write to him.

In accordance to the wishes of that venerable lady, Mrs. Loobier, of Yercaud, I have prepared some tracts which treat separately on the subjects of the second personal coming of our Lord, the first resurrection of the saints, the kingdom of Christ, life only in Christ, etc. She has promised to buy these tracts when they are printed for free distribution. Should I get the names of some benevolent ladies and gentlemen who would likely buy about 1000 copies for free distribution I will gladly publish them. Dear sir, will you please endeavor to procure some names of such Christian friends.

Col. Armstrong regularly sends me the Bible Standard. My daughter translates the tract, "Man Essentially Mortal," by Theophilus, which Col. Armstrong has sent me with the Standard. I do not know what she will do after completing the translation, if she is not helped by some benevolent friends towards the publication of that very useful tract in Tamil.

I am happy to say there is not much opposition manifested against me by the adversaries of truth. At certain meetings of the church members at Nagercoil, there was contemplated the best way of checking the progress of the doctrine. One member said thus, "Let Rev. Massillamani be deprived of his ministerial office, and the Mission house wherein he dwells, and let his companions in this false doctrine be excommunicated, the spread of this mischievous doctrine will be at once extirpated from the church." By what I hear from the words of the enemies of truth, I judge that my connection with the society will be soon entirely dissolved if I will not give up my teachings. Some of the means of my income, which hitherto helped me towards my support, have been purposely removed. Some unbelieving members of my congregation, also, are displeased with my teaching. But those who appreciate the excellence of the truth which we zealously advocate, respect my work and most cheerfully render their pecuniary help in this time of my distress. From the experience of the last four years I have been taught to trust not in the arms of flesh for my daily support and maintenance, but to lean on the almighty [illegible] of the Lord Jesus Christ. My [illegible] I shall have all things. [illegible] four years been supplied in all [illegible], so that I have not lacked the necessaries of this life once.

Pray for me and my family, as we do for you and yours.

I have received some valuable books and tracts from Mr. I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Maine, U. S. A., and from Mr. Hastings, the editor of The Christian, and of The Reign of Christ on Earth, at Boston, Mass., U. S. A. They greatly help me towards translating and extracting materials for our Tamil Bible Banner tract.

The No. 6, for December 1882, is ready, and I will soon send it. From the beginning of the year I hope I will supply you with an English translation of the B. B. in Tamil, as you have requested me to do.

The great Roman Catholic Annual Festival of St. Francis Xavier is approaching. There is a vast gathering of the people from all quarters. I will give you a few particulars of it in my next letter.

With my humble love to you, your family, and brethren who meet in your house, and Col. Armstrong's, I remain yours most faithfully.—C. Massillamini.

NEW ZEALAND.

Auckland.—The morning meetings in the Temperance Hall are increasing in interest and usefulness. The evening meetings at the Opera House still maintain their interest and numbers. The subject of prophecy, in connection with the signs of the times has been made very prominent. Hamilton.—The Sunday evening meetings are still attended by quite 100 persons. The local pulpits have made many personal attacks upon the testimony, which have only tended to discredit those who made them. Thames.—The numbers increase here, notwithstanding that sermons have been delivered in two local churches against the Life teaching, one of which has been published in full.

Among the most remarkable natural echoes are those of Eagle's Nest, on the banks of Killarney, in Ireland, which repeats a bugle call till it seems to be sounded from 100 instruments, and that on the banks of the Naha, between Bingen and Coblentz, which repeats a sound seventeen times. The most remarkable artificial echo known is that of the Castle of Simonetta, about two miles from Milan. It is occasioned by the existence of two parallel walls of considerable length. It repeats the report of a pistol sixty times.

Communications.

"Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for I say unto you many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able."

The great mass of professing Christians make no difference between seeking and striving; how large the majority of seeking professors, and how small the minority of striving possessors. What a happy people would the American nation be were all that profess the Christian name, really imitators or true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Alas for this state of things, what can be done; almost every one looks on his own, and not on the things that are Jesus Christ's. How few are striving to enter God's pure, holy, righteous kingdom; what an army of fair-weather, Sunday professors throng the sanctuaries on Sunday! It is written "My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations; but ye have made it a den of thieves." The Savior talks plain; shall we miss the mark if we couple with the Hebrew churches to whom he spake, the churches of the nineteenth century; we venture the application if it is not true let it be shown and we will gladly own up that we are not posted. Strive, according to Webster is defined: "To make efforts; to use exertions; to endeavor with earnestness: to labor hard; 2nd: to contend; to contest; to struggle in opposition to another, etc." Here we have the meaning of the word strive.

But Paul says we are not crowned except we strive lawfully; the man who would enter the kingdom must be a law-abiding man. But what of one that does not keep or abide by the law of God nor of men; the Scriptures denounce such as sinners, for sin is the transgression of law. How many of those professing the Abrahamic faith are earnestly striving to live an every day Christian. I find it hard work; I have a large family dependent on my labor for support. I have rented a farm of Brother ——, but he bears down so hard and is so over-exacting, cannot run the farm and support my family. I must leave it and try another. Did you hear the silent prayer of that poor brother. Oh that night or Blucher would come. It will be well for the brother that rents that farm to the poor brother to read James v. 1–4.

It is hard to write on practical Christianity without treading on somebody's toes. It will not hurt that innocent—the guilty should not give offense. If we strove half as hard to enter the straight gate as some do to get a little (just a little) more than what is strictly just, what an exciting race there would be for the kingdom. I would not overdraw, or give a false coloring to any statements we make; money could not tempt us to do it. We write plain and pointed and some will say severe, but we do not mean to be; the command is before us: "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, thou shalt not in any wise rebuke thy neighbor and not suffer sin upon him." Lev. xix. 17. Oh that we were all perfect, that we needed no reproof. Oh that we were like the spotless Lamb of God, pure, just, and holy. Bear with me dear reader; it is as hard for me to write the truth as it is painful for you to read it; but we are nearing the world's crisis—the judgment. I want and mean to have my sins go before me to judgment: it will be a fearful thing to have our sins follow after us.

Do you see that poor brother, or that poor, hard worked washer-woman that subsisted on a scant pittance. They were Christ's jewels; see them at the marriage feast of the Lamb, clothed in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints, and hear the Master say, come up higher, while the oppressor with shame begins to take the lower seat. The time hasteth greatly when strict justice shall be done and every one will be rewarded as his works shall be. The gate is as straight and the way as narrow as when the great Teacher uttered our text, and quite as difficult to enter and keep in the narrow path, and we think a little more so. What a poor, stumbling, blundering set we hardly get started before we make a misstep and down we go. Poor Christians the enemy has assaulted him at a point not well guarded. Perhaps it was filthy lucre; this is a very weak point with many; perhaps it was self-exaltation. Did you hear that eloquent sermon; why it was just splendid; how easy and fluently he spoke, 120 words in a minute; perhaps it was that smart technical critic, what fine logic; why he would make a lie look just like the truth; perhaps it was just a little tale-bearing or a little evil surmising. Yes God knows and we know too. Conscience, that faithful monitor, as true as steel, we know the moment the deed is done, we cannot deceive ourselves; we may deceive the church, but God and ourselves we cannot, we cannot deceive. Our creed for Risby leave by the aid of the enemy we may make the atmosphere so thick and so dark that our conscience may be seared as with a hot iron; yet it will awake and arouse like an armed man.

Oh how much better for the members of the body to keep a conscience void of offence towards, God and all men. We are nearing a scene when all hearts will be open to the eyes of him with whom we have to do; what fearful scenes will the judgment disclose. God help us to be honest with ourselves and with each other.

Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. What a motive to become pure. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace, Christ and David, good authority. In his sayings he gives a synopsis of the laws that will govern the kingdom of God. This is our day of preparation; how unwise and how foolish for us to practice Gentilism, and expect to escape the scrutinizing eye of him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. How precious, how cheering, and how reviving the sayings of the Master as they fell from his blessed lips, which were never polluted with sin; well did they say that he spake as never man spake. What words of holy joy and comfort to the weary pilgrim while he is called to buffet the waves of adversity, while he is earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. It is always safe to follow Christ and adhere carefully to his words. How perfectly does his holy life compare with what he taught. The life and teachings of Christ should for ever shut the mouths of sceptics. Infidels and unbelievers admit that he taught a perfect code of morals and that he lived out to the letter what he taught. Why should often longer neglect the great salvation. All admit we are nearing a crisis, yes we are nearing the world's great prayer-meeting, when the great men and the mighty men will pray as they never prayed before, for the rocks and the mountains to fall on them and to hide them from the face of him that sits on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand.

Reader listen to the old pilgrim's advice; my motive is pure. I am an old man of 85. My advice is contained in the last words of Solomon, the wise king of Israel, after he had passed through the whole routine of human greatness and had been blessed with wisdom above every other except the Greater than Solomon, he says, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." Amen.

Baptism and Its Ultimate Consequences.

As Christ's baptism was a prefiguriment of his final death, burial, and resurrection; so believers on a heart-felt confession of their faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, typified by baptism or immersion, are raised to "walk in newness of life," after having sealed their faith in Christ Jesus, by being baptized into his glorious all-saving name.

As the word of God, as contained in the Bible, is an emphatical evidence that Christ died, was buried, and resurrected in an immortalized personal state; so also we by being "planted (here the very word 'planted,' in this passage, would imply that baptism means immersion,) together in the likeness of his death," are also raised—or resurrected—with him in the "likeness of his own glorious body."

That Jesus went down into the water, and was baptized by immersion, there can be no doubt, from the fact of its prefigurment. Jesus went down into the water. This signifies his death and burial. "And straightway coming up out of the water,"—signifies his resurrection up from the grave.

If Christ was baptized—as some suppose — by pouring or sprinkling, this mode would not coincide with his death, burial, and resurrection. Could a person, who has been sprinkled, or had water poured upon his, or her head, say, "I" have been resurrected out of a watery grave, when they had not been buried in water? It would be beyond any realm of reason, to suppose, or to affirm that such is true. "Let God be true, and every man a liar."

We must conclude therefore, that baptism means immersion, and that it is an ordinance of great importance, instituted by Jesus, as the door to "eternal life," and "to an inheritance incorruptible, and that fadeth not away;" by the example of himself. The death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus, then is a type of our destiny.

The only outlet from the bonds of death, to the "glorious liberty of the sons of God," is through the resurrection. And the only way to attain to the resurrection, is by baptism. It is the inroad to immortality.

Jesus says, "He that believeth, and is baptised, shall be saved;" he does not say that "he that believeth," irrespective of baptism, shall be saved; but he makes baptism absolutely obligatory, in order to be saved. If baptism was not an absolute necessity, he would not have instituted any such an ordinance, but having such an example set before us, as Christ Jesus, I find it of the utmost longing wish of all God's children. O that he will soon come in his majestic beauty, and that his "will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Brethren, let us work as best we can.

Letter from Jerusalem.

Editor Restitution:

Yours of the 10th of January, is received with the enclosed $5.00, many thanks to the dear sister, it will do much good.

I am now making a wreath of flowers for Mrs. Weethee, shall send by this mail, will send one large one and several smaller ones. I think she will like them. I am now gathering spring flowers. I must, as the saying is, "Make hay while the sun shines."

The Prussian Prince, Fredric Charles, is expected tomorrow; much preparation has been made for his reception, the streets are swept clean and the street leading from the Jaffa gate has been newly paved; the poor huckster women have been obliged to "move on" to some out of the way place, no one knows where. Our poor, half-starved soldiers, have been drilled for the past ten days, for the special benefit of the Prince, however, Princes do not make much sensation here, and much wonder is expressed at the frequent visits of Princes to Jerusalem. The Crown Prince and Princess are expected next month.

Gen. Gordon, is still here, and his movements are quite a mystery. It seems so strange to read in your letter about the cold and snow, in fact it does not seem possible to us here, who look out upon green fields and sunny skies. THE RESTITUTION is good, people like it here. The question of eternal torment is creating quite a stir in the churches here, I like to stir [illegible]. I have many unanswered letters in my desk, I hope the friends will be patient, I will answer as fast as possible.

Dear brother, please excuse my poor efforts, and make as much of what I write as possible.

I received a box of wedding cake from a friend in Boston to-day, how strange it is to eat wedding cake in Jerusalem, only four weeks from Boston. It is now 10 p. m., and the roosters are crowing all over Jerusalem, as usual.

Feb. 20. 1. p. m. The Prince has just arrived, and thousands are out to welcome him. No other event brings all Jerusalem to view. We have music, and the cannons are thundering from the Austrial just across the street, it shakes even my chair.

I mail 4 cards of flowers to Mrs. Weethee, also a letter. Shall send flowers to Mrs. Willard also. I trust that you will kindly correct all mistakes, and make as much of what I write as possible, I have but little spare time, I assure you. I have been constantly interrupted since I commenced this letter, so that I hardly know whether it is even connected or not. An old Jew is now sitting in my room, waiting for something to be done. Well, he has just unrolled his package; a shirt for me to make, poor old man, they are like children; it is so all the time. I am obliged to cut my letter for RESTITUTION short in the middle. Shall send more next time, if God will. I have no time to breathe.

We Look for the Savior.

I cannot tell, I may not know,
When Jesus will be here;
But some day, when we least expect,
I know he will appear.
Then, Lord, may I be washed from sin,
And pure and spotless be,
That I may look for thee with joy,
And long thy face to see.

Each morning when I wake from sleep,
O teach me, Lord, to say—
"I know that thou art coming soon.
And this may be the day!
Then help me, Savior, by thy grace,
To live this day for thee,
That I may look for thee with joy,
And long thy face to see."

I should not like him when he comes,
A wandering fond to find;
If I were idle, selfish, proud,
Untruthful, or unkind,—
How I should try to hide my face,
And from his presence flee!
I could not look for him with joy,
Or long his face to see.

Lord Jesus, as the years go by,
And thine own day draws near,
O make me know that I am thine,
For then I need not fear.
If I am cleansed, and kept from sin,
From Satan's power set free,
Then I may look for thee with joy,
And long thy face to see!

A Wise Choice.

A good minister, whom we will not name, while sitting at the dinner-table with his family, had these words said to him by his son, a lad of eleven years; "Father, I have been thinking, if I could have one single wish of mine, what I would choose."

"To give you a better chance," said the father, "suppose the allowance be increased to three wishes; what would they be? Be careful, Charley!"

He made his choice thoughtfully, first of a good character; second, of good health; and third, of a good education.

His father suggested to him that fame, power, riches, and various other things, are held in general esteem among mankind.

"I have thought of all that," said he; "but if I have a good conscience, and good health, and a good education, I shall be able to earn all the money that will be of any use to me, and everything else will come along in its right place."

A wise decision, indeed, for lad a of that age. Let our young readers think of it, and profit by it.

"Girls, Help Father."

"My hands are so stiff I can hardly hold a pen," said Farmer Wilber, as he sat down to "figure out" some accounts that were getting behindhand.

"Can I help you, father?" said Lucy, laying down her bright crochet-work. "I shall be glad to do so if you will explain what you want."

"Well, I shouldn't wonder if you could, Lucy," he said, reflectively. "Pretty good at figures, are you?"

"I would be ashamed if I did not know something of them after going twice through the arithmetic," said Lucy, laughing.

"Well, I can show you in five minutes what I have to do, and it'll be a wonderful help if you can do it for me. I never was a master-hand at accounts in my best days, and it does not grow any easier since I have to put on spectacles."

Very patiently did the helpful daughter plod through the long line of figures, leaving the gay worsted to lie idle all the evening, though she was in such haste to finish her scarf. It was reward enough to see her tired father, who had been toiling all day for himself and the other dear ones, sitting so easily in his easy chair, enjoying his weekly paper.

The clock struck nine before her task was over, but the hearty "Thank you, daughter, a thousand times!" took away all sense of weariness that Lucy might have felt.

"It's rather looking up when a man can have a clerk," said the father. "It's not every farmer that can afford it."

"Not every farmer's daughter is capable of making one," said the mother, with a little, pardonable maternal pride.

"Nor every one that would be willing, if able," said Mr. Wilber, which last is a sad truth. How many daughters might be of use to their fathers in this and many other ways, who never think of lightening a care or labor! If asked to perform some little service, it is done at best with a reluctant stop and unwilling air that robs it of all agreeable or claim to gratitude.

Girls, help your father. Give him a cheerful home in which to rest when evening comes, and do not worry his life away by fretting because he cannot afford you all the luxuries you desire. Children exert as great an influence on their parents as parents do on their children.

My Dear Nephew:

Though so long silent do not suppose I have been listlessly floating down life's stream. No indeed. I have no time for that, neither do I find time rest so heavily on my hands that I am compelled to wile it away in what you call "innocent amusements, or simple pastimes." I find time but too short to accomplish each day's work, and the fact of enjoying variety of work gives me rest. The hope of accomplishing something for the good of others gives sweetness to toil whether it be of mind or body.

You say you are "weary of the monotony of life" as you count the days, weeks, and months go by, and that you "long for something higher, and beyond anything" which you now see. I am glad you do, and let me tell you, that what you long for is right within your grasp. You have only to arouse to a sense of the greatness of the prize offered—how sure it is, how lasting, and how easily gained. Let me illustrate, after a short prelude:—In all animal life—of which man is the highest type—there is implanted a love of life. The smallest insect, as well as the king of the forest, and the monsters of the deep, alike flee from the approach of danger, and if the struggle come, they fight to the bitter end for life. For this life so full of ills and so uncertain.

Now suppose there should arise in the fields of medical science, some very brilliant physician who would boldly announce that he had made a discovery in science whereby the present life might be prolonged to at least a century, by carefully, and constantly observing certain sanitary laws, which he had tested so fully that he could give positive assurance to all who would obey, that their lives would be so prolonged.

Now, my dear nephew, if this announcement were made in your town, and endorsed by the very best citizens in the place, would you not feel some interest in the matter, at least enough to enquire what you would have to do, to live according to these new rules of life? I surely think you would at least take time to carefully examine the whole matter and satisfy yourself whether the physician was worthy of your confidence, the rules two strict to obey, or the extra years of life worth striving for. I think I hear you say, "Certainly I would at least do that much. It would at least occupy my time and thoughts and help to kill this dull monotony."

Well, this is the application of my illustration. We are now in possession of the present life. At best it is short uncertain, and full of trials, cares, sorrows, and a few fleeting joys. The Almighty Father, the Creator of all things, condescends to offer us a prize even eternal life, endless years of perfect enjoyment, pleasure without pain, a life that knows no death, that will fear no evil, that will not feel the weight of years, for eternal youth and beauty shall crown each brow—there shall be no more sorrow nor crying nor death. This prize of everlasting life he has offered through his Son Jesus Christ. Belief in him, and obedience to his precepts will secure the prize. Observe all his precepts. Search the Scriptures that you may know what his will is. All his promises he will surely fulfil. He is both able and willing to give even to all that ask him. Then will you not let these things occupy your time and thoughts? and when you have by obedience and faith obtained the full assurance that the prize will be yours, the very power of the glorious truth will compel you to try to lead others to behold its truth and beauty, as you behold years of the eternal future expanding above, and beyond our highest conceptions while in this mortal state.

Yours affectionately,

AUNT CARRIE.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $360. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute, at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. There are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will [illegible] you.

TELL THE STORY.

E. ROZELLA WISER.

Brethren, sisters of the King,
Meekly oft to pray and sing,
Tell what God has done for you,
All the story sweet and true;
What you know you'll gladly tell,
If you've learned the lesson well.

If God's word abide within,
Keeping safe from pride and sin,
If His thoughts are yours alone,
And your will no more your own,
If you've learned at Jesus' feet
All the joyous service meet:

"Fruit of lips," you'll gladly lay
At his blessed feet today.
Trying not "the cause and see
What the Lord has done for me"
To me, and make the treasure thine,
Prove the story all a fact."

THE CHRISTIAN'S SAFEGUARD.

"Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth." Rev. iii. 10.

This language is addressed by our Savior to the Philadelphian Church or the faithful spouse of Christ just previous to his second coming, for he adds immediately, "Behold I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." 11th verse.

He speaks of an hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try men everywhere: he promises to preserve the Philadelphian Church from that hour and gives as a reason that they have "kept the word of his patience." I desire first to call attention to the reason given—what are we to understand by "the word of my patience"? In the Greek we have the phrase, ton logon tes hupomones mou," literally "the word doctrine, teaching, instruction, discourse, of the patience, endurance, perseverance, constancy, expectation, hope of me." The word hupo is familiar to the readers of THE RESTITUTION and is known to mean more than simply a "word," having the larger signification of doctrine, teaching, instruction, discourse, etc. It is plain that Jesus uses the word in this larger sense, so that we may use the word "doctrine" or "instruction," and then we have the sentence thus, "Because thou hast kept the doctrine of my patience, etc." But what can he mean by that? Surely that is very ambiguous and it ought to be very clear, if by keeping it we are to be kept from the dreadful hour of trial coming on the whole "habitable."

But we discover that the word "hupomoneos" has the signification also of "expectation or hope," and, taking that meaning, we form the sentence thus, "Because thou hast kept the doctrine of my expectation, etc." This is as plain as the sunlight. "Because thou hast kept the doctrine or instruction concerning my expectation," or "the expectation of me." "I will also keep thee, etc." Nothing can be plainer than that he intends to refer to the truths concerning his coming and kingdom. This same word occurs in 2 Thess. iii. 5, "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the hupmoneen ton Christon," expectation of the Anointed," or as the received text here reads, "unto the patient waiting for Christ." In Luke xxi. 19, our Savior when speaking directly of his second coming, says, "in your patience possess ye your souls." Now, too, it is clear that expectation or hope is the better word.

Tischendorf would translate "acquire ye" instead of "possess ye." So that the passage would read, "By your expectation acquire your lives"—psuchas. "He that will save his psuche shall lose it and he that will lose his psuche for my sake shall keep it unto life eternal," said Jesus. So that we may be sure that he intended to teach in Luke that by preserving the "expectation" of his coming and kingdom we should "acquire," preserve or save our psuchas, souls or lives. The word occurs again in Rev. i. 9: "I, John, who am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, etc." The Diaglott reads, "In the patient waiting for Jesus," which fully corresponds with the word "expectation" as we would read it; thus, "in the kingdom and expectation of Jesus Christ." The other occurrences of the word in the New Testament may perhaps be properly translated by "patience" or "patient endurance," so we pass them by. Now then we have the startling promise that because of the preservation of the truth concerning his coming and kingdom, they who have so kept it will be themselves preserved from the hour (Greek "horas," time, season") of trial which all will be called upon to pass through.

I will next call attention to the fact that the Greek uses the article "the" before the noun horas. It is "the hour, time or season of trial." He here refers to some specific period of time which he calls "the time of trial for all the world." Of a certainty he cannot here refer to the individual life-time of each person which is to him a time of trial, for to save him from that is to deny him the salvation which results from trial. But he evidently refers to a future period in which a state of things will exist on the earth which will act as a test or trial or temptation to mankind; but out of which those who have preserved the truth concerning his coming and kingdom will be signally preserved.

Paul refers to the coming of a "lawless one" whose working will be after Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness." He speaks also of those who are familiar with the "times and seasons," relating to the coming of the Lord as being "children of the light and of the day and not walking in darkness," and mentions others who not being instructed in these things say "peace and safety" and are overthrown with a "sudden destruction." John speaks of the coming of the Antichrist, and says, "He is Antichrist that denyeth the Father and the Son." He explains, as does also Paul, that the same principle was already in the world, which by the further explanation of both we see is atheism. For Paul says the wicked or lawless one will exalt himself above God and place himself in God's stead as an object of worship; and John says he will deny both the Father and the Son. In his Revelations John speaks of the Beast which had two horns like a lamb but a voice like a Dragon, who does great wonders and deceives by his miracles all that dwell on the earth, except those whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. He places a mark upon his followers, persecutes to the death those who reject him, and finally makes war directly against Christ and his newly established kingdom and is taken in the struggle together with his false prophet, and cast alive into the lake of fire at the beginning of the thousand years' reign. All the statements made concerning him, including his final end, are in exact harmony with the Lawless One of Paul and the Antichrist of John. It seems plain, therefore, that this particular time of trial for the inhabitants of the world or "habitable" comes in connection with a general prevalence of unbelief culminating in a system of aggressive atheism having both a political and an anti-religious head or leader.

It seems to me that it does not require a very profound knowledge of passing events to convince almost any honest enquirer that such a state of things is already very far advanced throughout the "habitable." In England, Scotland, on the Continent in Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Russia, and in America, everywhere it is the same; both the Roman and the Protestant Churches have lost their hold upon the masses and blank atheism is taking possession of the human mind. Scientists, law-makers, and Ecclesiastics take the lead and the populace follow with a rapidity and eagerness inconceivable and incredible. The newspapers are full of scepticism; volume rapidly succeeds volume from the press, breathing the spirit of doubt, unbelief and atheism. The most popular lecturers from the platform are the boldest atheists; the most popular preachers are those who follow closest the line of "liberal," that is, atheistic, thought. And behind it all the gaunt spectre of Nihilism slowly rears its horrid front in every land, hoarsely demanding the overthrow of all religion and all government, and the extirpation from among men of the very idea of God and a future life, with its annoying doctrines of human responsibility, of right and of wrong.

Surely "the time of trial" is already upon us. The dread "hour of temptation" is here. Faith and hope and trust in the Lord and immortality are rapidly disappearing from the face of the earth, and with it all regard for right or duty; and in its stead comes polishness and brutal lust; an insane lust for pleasure and desire for material things. "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die," has become the popular motto.

Now how are those who "keep the doctrine concerning his expectation" who are the companions of John in the kingdom and expectation of Jesus Christ, whose hearts have been "directed into the love of God and the expectation of Jesus Christ," to be kept from (ek, out of) this hour of trial? Are they, as some suppose, to be taken away from the earth bodily by translation before the hour of temptation comes? Peter tells us that "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of (ek) temptations," as well as to reserve the unjust to the day of trial to be (terfesai kolazomenous) cut off." 2 Peter ii. 9. Paul tells us that "God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it." 1 Cor. x. 13.

This is the divine method of delivering men out of temptation—he gives them strength to bear it. But does he give supernatural strength? No, the truth is their panoply. They who "save, preserve, keep, protect, guard, watch," (Gr. tereo) his truth are themselves "saved, preserved, kept, protected, guarded, watched" by the truth they love. No man can be deceived who knows the truth. Paul informs us that it is only they who "believe not the truth" who are deceived by the signs and lying wonders of the "Lawless One." It is perfectly manifest therefore that they who do believe the truth are by the truth preserved from the strong delusion, and not by any special interposition of divine power on their behalf.

It now remains to notice how this faithfulness to the doctrine of the coming and kingdom of Christ preserves the believer from the awful atheism and doctrine of despair, now creeping upon the heart of humanity like the glacial period upon the earth clothed in tropical beauty. This will we do in another article if God will.

J. F. WILCOX.

GLORY NOT IN MAN.—1 Cor. iii. 21.

When a man becomes a "public character," his name is considered public property. So has it been in the world of politics, science, learning, poetry, arts, etc., and not less in Christianity. If such a man starts a sect, and is viewed as the first teacher of the sect; if his talents are of the first order, and his learning great, he will influence those who look up to him, more or less. Yea, some will view him right in all he says and does, and will accept his conclusions without hesitancy.

In this there is danger to both teacher and taught. Unless the former is a watchful and prayerful man, he will become, in some measure faulty. And those who are swayed by him will be apt to excuse, where they, if they allowed their Christian sense of right and wrong to prevail, would not excuse.

Now it is well to look facts in the face, and place such facts before those who are in danger of suffering loss because such a prominent one is looked upon almost as infallible. Dr. John Thomas was truly a wonderful man. Very few, probably, if any, valued his writings and discourses, more than I, as much so, the one penning these lines, from 25 to 30 years ago. The mightiest man in the Scriptures of any I knew of in this age, did I consider him, and I valued him the more, because he preferred poverty in the performance of what he held to be duty, to comforts in unfaithfulness. However, it became apparent to me, that he failed in personal heedfulness. His course towards some, who published doctrines in accordance with his own teachings, could not be fully and fairly justified on truly Christian rule of action; (I here refer to matters I was acquainted with at the time) and in the time of the civil war he wrote what appeared more like utterances from a carnal, than a Christian mind. In short, instead of growth in grace, there appeared decline, in his later years. With all his ability and attainments he was but a man; and being looked up to by some as an almost unerring guide, there is reason to infer that neglecting faithfulness with self, he gave way to a domineering turn of mind; and the humility, characteristic of the consecrated disciple of Christ Jesus, he was not duly mindful to cultivate.

He will have his reward, but it will not be the rich reward he would have obtained had he taken care to be rich in the possession of the Christian graces. In his expositions of prophecy there are errors, mistakes, and wrong conclusions; while withal there is truth presented with force and clearness.

Among his errors, what he wrote about the resurrection, that any other dust would do as well as the dust of the departed saint, with which (any other dust) to make a new body, and then God stamp the character of the dead saint thereon, was the greatest error of all, because herein is no resurrection. Reader, let none have dominion over your faith: believe in your own heart; and we conclude with our caption,—Glory not in man!

REFLECTIONS ON EDEN.

My heart is made sad as I cast my eye o'er earth and take a survey of it in all its marked deformity. I look at man as he was when first he came from the hand of his Maker, innocent and harmless; in unison with his Father walking among Eden's beautiful groves, whilst his ears were saluted with the sweet notes of its feathered tribes, borne along on zephyr's stainless wing, in accents most melodious; and all nature smiles in gladness as yon orb of day sends forth its genial rays, and to make the scene still more sublime and glorious, the sons of God shouted for joy.

But oh, how soon this glorious scene was changed! The serpent with his sparkling eye and sanctimonious look, approached the better part of man, and by his artful address seduced her to reach forth her hand and take the forbidden fruit and eat! Then she gave it to her husband, as every loving wife would do, and he did eat! And on that day in which he committed this unmanly act, he became a dying man; consequently decayable and doomed to go back to the earth from which he had been taken; and a door opened for an introduction into this world of all the train of evils which have stalked abroad o'er all this wide earth. Behold what a mighty change has taken place! That once beautiful and happy pair are now compelled to leave that beautiful garden or home which God had prepared for their special benefit, to wander as exiles until the law should be inflicted upon them. And in order to make their punishment secure, the tree of life is guarded by placing at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubim, and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life, lest man should eat and live forever. Solemn thought! Yet in this act we see most clearly the attribute of mercy displayed, and justice maintained! But O, how great the change! The beasts are now no longer in subjugation to man! Misery at once begins to roll its deep, dark and turbid waves over the world, and the children of God are doomed to go back to the earth from whence they came, where they must have remained eternally, had not God "found a ransom." "The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root and offspring of David prevailed to open the book, and loose the seven seals thereof." But O, how few out of the great mass of Adam's race who are not travelling the broad road which leads to eternal death! But few are disposed to believe and obey the Gospel that St. Paul preached at Corinth and the seven-hilled city, and square their lives by it, and thereby secure to themselves life, territory and dominion in Jesus, and at his coming receive it; and at last be brought on to "Beulah's" blissful plains all dressed in white, bearing in their hands the conqueror's palm, as they walk along its beautiful groves which will be scattered o'er Eden's verdant plains and all in harmony join in singing the emancipation song; saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

WHERE WAS EDEN?

The following are intended to be allusive notes, suggested by Mr. Strang's paper, "Where was Paradise?" in January number of the Bathsheba. They may perhaps lead to riper considerations regarding the land, of which Jehovah has said, "The land is mine;" and whether it may not be identified with the "garden" that God "planted eastward."

I. Our first consideration is directed to the extent of the promised inheritance of Israel. This is clearly indicated both by the names of places, and features of the country. The north border is formed by a line drawn from the Mediterranean, through the open plains that lie between the northern slopes of the Lebanon range, and the Anserles' mountains, called, "the border, or entrance of Hamath," terminating eastward at the river Euphrates.

The southern border appears to be a line drawn from "the river of Egypt," eastward, towards Kadesh-Barnea, and Mount Hor, extending likewise to the river Euphrates.

The west boundary is "The Great Sea," the Mediterranean.

The extent of the eastern limit is obtained by a reference to three Scriptures. 1. The original promise to Abraham, "from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates," east and west. 2. "Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river (Euphrates) unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt." 3. The remarkable statement by the prophet Ezekiel, "The east side ye shall measure, from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan unto the East Sea." Gen. xv. 18; 1 Kings iv. 21; Ezek. xlvii. 18; also Psa. lxxii. 8. Again in Deut. xxxix. 2–4, there is recorded the view that Moses was permitted to take of Israel's inheritance from Pisgah's summit; the mountain being situated eastward of Canaan, he must have beheld a west tract of country towards the Euphrates, across the Arabian desert, even to "the utmost sea" identical, I suppose, with "the east sea," or Persian Gulf, where the Euphrates falls into it.

II. Do not events, Divinely arranged, having typical significance of far mightier ones at "the restitution of all things," constantly meet us in Scripture? Is there not, therefore, a possibility, that the spot where it was originally said to the first Adam "have dominion," may be, or be included within that area, of which it is predicated of the last Adam that "he shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river (Euphrates) to the end of the earth?" (land). Psa. lxxii. 8; Isa. ix. 10. This, of course, merely refers to Messiah's territories as King of Israel, the central point of the government of the last Adam and Eve over all the earth.

III. Consider the following references, which seem to have an authority that identifies the inheritance of Israel with Eden. "And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere. . . . even as the garden of the Lord." Gen. xiii. 10. "For the Lord shall comfort Zion, he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord." Isa. li. 3. "The land is as the Garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness." Joel ii. 3.

When the presence of the Lord, the Creator, is manifested, may not Eden, "the Garden of the Lord," reappear within the boundaries of the Land of Promise, "a land flowing with milk and honey," unsurpassed in floral beauty, or pastoral profuseness; whose "wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly. . . . the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water." Isa. xxxv. 2, 7. "A land of wheat, barley, and vines, of figtrees and pomegranates, a land of oil-olive and honey." . . . "A land which the Lord thy God careth for." Deut viii. 8; xi. 12. A land "eastward."

IV. Consider again — Ezek. xxviii. 12–15. Of Tyre, which we know was in Canaan, it is said, "Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God." . . . "Thou wast perfect in all thy ways from the day thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee." I do not doubt that, historically, Tyre itself is referred to, but I think in these verses the spirit of truth goes much farther, disclosing to view the ways of Satan from the beginning, and how through the fall of Adam he became god and prince of this world. This narrative leads us to observe that lust and pride, now so very dominant in the world, the very spirit of Tyre, had the germ of its existence in Eden. Its occupant, called "an anointed cherub," having dominion therein, had been adorned with all the varieties of beauty and virtue in which the light of God is reflected when manifested through the creature of his hand. May we not apply this to the first Adam, who originally was more exalted in position and character than we are apt to consider him before his fall? He, like all creation, was "very good" in Divine estimation, and clothed with that excellence which qualified him for the dominion of creation. Alas! how terribly subtle and powerful must that poison of the serpent, lust and pride, have been, that beclouded the character of the Munificent Being, who in love and wisdom had created a Paradise for the pair! From what a height he fell, what an incalculable loss sustained!

With the thoughts suggested by the above, we must further consider, that the first Adam was "made in the image of God," i. e., the foreappointed human image about to be assumed by the last Adam in due time, as it is written, the first Adam was "a figure of him that was to come." Rom. v. 14; see also Heb. x. 5. Will not the last Adam be manifested in the land of Immanuel, the place of his dominion, in the absolute perfection of the moral image of God, as well as in the exceeding excellence and beauty of all that can adorn his Person as a man, God manifest in humanity? Does it not, moreover, seem consistent with the ways of God, that the place where Satan triumphed over the first Adam in bringing sin into the world, should be rendered memorable as the place of his discomfiture by the victorious exaltation of the just, who has already, as the Anointed One of God, hallowed that spot in the priceless sacrifice that shall abolish both sin and death from the new creation?

V. With regard to the "four heads" of streams that parted from the one river that "went out" of Eden, I conceive that it is now impossible for any man to advance a geographical opinion. The names of two we know, the Tigris and Euphrates; but who knows whether they run in the same channels now, that they did 5,000 years ago? I know of the Ganges and other rivers in India, that, without the action of extraordinary phenomena, have by corrosion, and the impetus of violent floods, changed their beds, altered the face of the country, and are now running many miles in a diverging direction from that in which they formerly flowed. But who can tell what changes took place when at the flood "the fountains of the great deep were broken up," how the surface of the earth must have been affected, or how the sources and courses of rivers were altered? Where is there any record of results that occurred at the death and resurrection of the Lord, when by reason of the earthquakes "the channels of water were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered?"

Those are but a few of the mighty agencies by which the features of the earth have been distorted; whilst its present jagged and serrated outline compels to the conviction that the arm of the Creator has been stretched out in wrath, and that Sin has transformed the appearance of that which once was pronounced "very good." — H. Goodwyn, in Rainbow.

(Cherub—symbol of living government of creation, Rev. iv. 6, 7, where the "living creatures" may be identified with the cherubim of Ezek. i. 10; x. 1. Hence the applicability to Adam, delegated to dominion over creation.

ISAIAH XXXIII.

We have taken this chapter for examination, because there is one verse in it so frequently quoted to prove the eternity of future torments (v. 14).

Isaiah prophesied in the reign of Hezekiah, in whose reign Sennacherib King of Assyria, invaded Judea. To prevent his attacking the capital—Jerusalem—Hezekiah sent an embassy to him, with overtures of peace. The Assyrian monarch in return laid upon the Jewish king a tribute of three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold. This, Hezekiah paid (2 Kings xviii. 14-16; Isa. xxxvi.) But having received the tribute, the Assyrian king "broke the covenant," and advanced rapidly towards Jerusalem, surrounding it with 200,000 men. It was under these circumstances that the prophet wrote.

He says to the invader: "Woe to thee, that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled: and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when thou shalt cease to spoil thou shalt be spoiled, when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee." This was fulfilled immediately after. One hundred and eighty thousand of his troops were slain by the destroying angel in one night, and the Jews took the "spoil"; and on the return of Sennacherib to his own land, he was treacherously slain by his two sons, while worshipping in the house of Nisroch, his god.

In ver. 2, the pious Jews apostrophize Jehovah, and call upon Him for help. In reply to their prayer, in verses 3 and 4, Jehovah—addressing the invader—announces his approaching destruction.

In verses 5 and 6 a chorus of Jews is introduced, praising the Lord for His promised deliverance, while in verses 7, 8, and 9, we have their lamentations over the desolations the invader has brought upon the land.

In response to these lamentations, in verses 10, 11, 12, and 13, Jehovah undertakes to interpose, on behalf of His people, and threatens the invader with total destruction. In contemplation of the approaching danger which menaced the capital, and either not receiving upon the Divine promise, or else being ignorant of it, "The sinners (the wicked) in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites"; and they ask the question, Who among us shall dwell with these devouring fires? who among us shall dwell with these perpetual (Gholahm) burnings.

In the next verse the prophet answers the question. Whoever "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppression, that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes; He shall dwell on high (in safety): his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure." Thus it is the righteous, and not the wicked, who were to dwell calmly amid the "devouring" fires kindled by the Assyrian invader. Jerusalem and its king should retain their beauty and quiet (v. 17-21), undisturbed by the invader: "Thine heart shall meditate (upon the past) terror;" and rejoice in thy deliverance.

And then the prophet asks in a tone of quiet irony, Where is the "scribe" who was deputed by the Assyrian monarch to take an inventory of the spoil in Jerusalem when he should have captured it? "Where is the receiver" who was to take possession of the property when the scribe had taken a record of it? "Where is he that counted the towers?" the man who went round the beleagured city before the siege began to "count the towers," and to take note of their number, their size and their strength, to see where would be the best place to commence the attack? Perished with the hundred and eighty thousand whom the angel had destroyed in one night. Then once more apostrophising the Assyrian king in a sarcastic vein, the prophet says, "Thy tackletage are loosed"—then were coming in full sail, but they could not well strengthen the mast—their gear got out of trim—they could not spread the sail—they were shipwrecked in sight of port. And the vast "spoil" that they had brought with them under the very walls of Jerusalem, should be taken possession of by the Jews—and so complete should be the destruction of the Assyrian host that even the lame (among the Jews), the veriest cripples should come out of the city and "take the prey." And the terrified inhabitants of the city, the weak and the infirm who would be, as they anticipated, the very first to suffer, if the city were besieged and famine ensued, shall be relieved of their terror, and the inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick," for the threatened punishment shall pass away—for their iniquity shall be forgiven.

And His Wife hath made Herself Ready. Rev. xix. 7.

Dear Brethren! As I travel around and see the condition of the church, I ask the question, Is the church ready? I fear not; for in these days when iniquity doth abound the love of many is waxing cold. There is a coldness among many of the dear ones, who should be ready for the Lord, but who are conforming to the world.

Paul says: I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. The church is to be the bride, the Lamb's wife. As the Lamb had to overcome it is certain the bride must overcome; and as the Lamb despised the shame and endured the cross so the church must. Likewise [illegible] share in the glory [illegible] we try to [illegible] any unless [illegible] "Daniel [illegible] and held [illegible] few faithful [illegible] them again [illegible]

From there I [illegible] over two Sunday [illegible] account of bad weather and [illegible] Marsh, Chase, Stella, and others live here.

From Irving I went to Gilford, brother George Chase accompanying me, and held meeting ten days, with good audience all the time. Brother Whitsett was there and spoke a few times. He is an able defender of the truth. While there I met Almus Adams, a young man of considerable ability, who, if he would give his attention to it would make a preacher. I also met Sister Harlan, and others.

From there I started home and stopped in Alliance over Sunday. To-day the train at Foreston for Chicago, and got to St. Joseph next morning at two o'clock.

Dear Brethren, there is a work for us all to do, and let us learn what that work is, and then let us do it. Every one of us to the great work! There is no time for resting till we get into the kingdom. It will take self-denial, self-sacrifice, and an earnest contending for the faith. We must give earnest words of comfort to the Christians, and earnest words of warning to the ungodly. We must to stand in the judgment boldly and in order to do so we must stand up boldly for the truth. If we would reign we must suffer; if we would wear the crown we must bear the cross.

May we all hold out faithful to the end, and so meet in the kingdom of God.

ANOTHER CALL.

A. M. KING.

Come, Savior, come! Thy waiting people here
Long for thy presence to dispel the gloom,
Intensely long for that to soothe and cheer;
Come, Savior, come!

While Satan threatens with impending doom,
And cries of anguish from our faint hearts hear;
Come, Savior, come!

Our loved ones sicken from our entwining arms,
Slowly, in train, we lay them in the tomb;
Then, broken, turn to face the world's alarms;
Come, Savior, come!

When thou shalt come in clouds and fiery flame,
And trumpet of archangel call us home,
The dead in thee shall leap and shout thy name;
Come, Savior, come!

The quick and risen shall exulting spring
To meet their Lord beneath heaven's vaulted dome,
While all the skies resound the last time ring:
Come, Savior, come!

Then, happy time, forever with the Lord,
No pain, death done away, and safe at home;
The victory won, and over the great reward,
The Savior came.

THE MAN OF SIN.--2 Thess. ii. 1-8. Number 5.

The next question that requires an answer is,—Do facts bear out the idea that the bishop of Rome "as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God?"

In the first article I showed from 2 Cor. vi. 16 that the phrase "the temple of God" was sometimes used to describe the church; and that the parable of the two debtors and Rev. iii. 9, show that the term "worshipped" was sometimes used to express that homage which is paid to persons in a position of authority. From this it is evident that there is no absolute necessity for understanding these terms in 2 Thess. ii. in any higher sense, unless this is necessitated by urgent considerations.

In regard to the phrase "as God" and "showing himself that he is God" —it is to be noted that there is a marked distinction between the word "God" in these sentences and that phrase in immediate connection with them—"the temple of God." In the latter instance the word "God" (Theon) has the article prefixed—(the God, or as we might render it—the Deity. The other instances have not the article [redacted] god. This [redacted] of the term [redacted] called [redacted] terms, [redacted] temple of [redacted] raised in a [redacted] as applicable to the usurping the place of certain church rulers and other officials exercising an authority over them. The question may therefore be stated thus—Do facts bear out the idea that the bishop of Rome claims or exercises authority over all the officials as well as all the ordinary members of the professing church universal? This question might be put in the absolute form and in the past tense—claimed and exercised—and answered in the affirmative. If we confine our attention to the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, at which period, as already shown, the papal authority culminated.

It is necessary to notice somewhat more particularly, the various senses in which "the temple of God" is used, so as to determine whether we have sufficient grounds for here limiting it to the professing church of Christ.

First, it might be applied to the temple which existed at Jerusalem at the date of the apostle's letter to the Thessalonians. But it will hardly be contended that the "falling away" predicted by the apostle could have any connection with the Jews and their polity, for the simple reason that the cup of their iniquity was already filled by their rejection of the Messiah. And not only so, but the doom of heaven had been pronounced against them and was only waiting execution—"Behold your house (or temple) is left unto you desolate. . . . Ye shall not see me henceforth until [redacted] say blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." This doom was executed about thirty years after Paul wrote his second letter to the Thessalonians. There need be little in setting aside this sense as entirely inadmissible.

Another use of this phrase is that future temple which is to be erected under express divine authority in connection with the personal reign of Christ over Israel and the nations. But I am not aware of any intimation that any such usurpation of authority, or any such apostacy, as shall be answerable to what is described in the text here, shall be allowed, to take place in connection with that institution. This sense is therefore also inadmissible.

But some maintain that the reference here is to a temple that shall be erected at Jerusalem in the future, not only without divine authority, but by the authority of some personage who is to deceive and persecute the Jews, who are represented as having received him as their Messiah. Certainly there is nothing stated by Paul to bear out such a sense, and I am not aware of any reliable information on the point in any other portion of the Scriptures. Supposing, however, that such a thing were probable, not to say proved, where is the warrant for calling such "the temple of God?" The former temple at Jerusalem, even after being doomed, might, while it was allowed to stand, be called, without any violation of propriety, "the temple of God." And the Christian church, which existed in its integrity when Paul wrote, might, in like manner, though it should become corrupted, continue to be called "the temple of God." But that any temple built by mere human authority, (or Satanic if you will, as some also think,) could ever, with the least approach to propriety, be so denominated, I do not see how any one can hold.

Before indicating the successive steps by which the climax of papal power was reached, it may be well to note the fact that in national and local churches, so-called, the authority over the official ministers and individual assemblies is a given district, had been usurped by a single man termed the bishop of the diocese, who was raised to the dignity of a temporal baron with the title of Lord; and that all the bishops and assemblies throughout the world had, at a later period, been subjected to three central authorities, namely, Rome, Alexandria and Constantinople. These various centres of power became at length absorbed in the bishop of Rome.

In very briefly noting the various steps referred to, the original platform on which they were reared, must be ascertained. There can be no doubt that, in Christian assemblies of any magnitude, the apostolic order was a plurality of elders or presbyters, called from their principal function of overseeing, bishops. "The bishops and deacons" among "the saints at Philippi" (Phil. i. 1,) is sufficient to prove this, were there no other evidence. In combination with this, however, there was the liberty of speech on the part of the ordinary members of the church, (excepting females) as shown in such passages as Heb. x. 25—"not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another."

The first divergence from this was the very simple looking circumstance of the elder who occasionally presided over a meeting of the congregational eldership or presbytery—for both words have the same meaning—assuming the title of bishop, while his colleagues retained that of elders or presbyters. Necador, from whom this is taken, terms these presiding bishops, "Primi inter pares," that is, first among equals.

The next step was just as simple in appearance. Small groups of disciples were gathered together in the rural districts near a town where a church with an eldership existed. These being in many cases formed by the instrumentality of the town church and probably by its presiding bishops or elders, became affiliated to the larger body and naturally came under the charge of the presiding bishops. He appointed deputies to govern and teach these new churches, who, according to Mosheim, the church historian, were termed "chorepiscopi," that is, "country bishops."

Another step in the direction of centralization was the subordination of churches in provincial towns to the bishops of the church in the metropolis of the province. These came to be termed metropolitans. This arrangement naturally arose out of the political system of the Roman empire. But here again the metropolitan was at the first considered only "primus inter pares."

Down to this period, the middle of the second century, each church was entirely independent. Provincial councils began to be held, by which this independence was destroyed, and the authority of the bishops greatly augmented. From simple delegates they became legislatures and made laws for all the churches in the province. This, with the supremacy of the presiding bishop over his brother elders, was the root of all subsequent usurpation.

We notice further that to metropolitans over provinces there were added patriarchs over larger divisions. Of these there were originally four, namely, Rome, Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem. The present Greek church has the same order only substituting Constantinople for Rome. These answered to the four prætorian prefects created by Constantine in the empire. About this time the people had been persuaded by those in authority that the ministry of the Christian church succeeded to the character, rights and privileges of the Jewish priesthood, the bishops being equivalent to the high priest—the presbyters to the Levites. The church thus became one vast republic.

Constantine, emperor of Rome, who now professed Christianity, while recognizing the church as a body-politic distinct from the state, assumed to himself supreme power over it. By his authority general councils were held—the first being held at Nice in Bithynia, Asia Minor, at which the emperor presided.

A variety of causes contributed to the bishop of Rome acquiring the first rank among the patriarchs. This afterwards became a bone of contention between them and the patriarchs of Constantinople whither the seat of the empire had been transferred by Constantine. In the beginning of the seventh century the emperor Phocas conferred on the bishop of Rome the title of Universal Bishop. It is remarkable that Gregory the Great, at the end of the sixth century, shortly before this title was conferred, was strongly opposed to it. "I speak it confidently" he says, "that whosoever calleth himself universal bishop, or desireth so to be called, in the pride of his heart he doth forerun Antichrist." When John, then Bishop of Constantinople, first usurped this title, Gregory made answer, "By the pride of his, what thing else is signified, but that the time of Antichrist is now at hand." Quoted from Newton's dissertations on the prophecies.

In the eleventh century the bishop of Rome acquired the further title of Universal Father, or Pope, (which literally signifies father from the Latin "papa.") The title of pope had been much earlier period, been given to presbyters or bishops: and it is well known that the title Father is still applied to priests, monks, etc., such as Father Hyacinthe, Father Ignatius, Father Matthew, etc.

I pause here to observe how the character of "lawlessness" twice applied to the Man of Sin by Paul in the passage under consideration, as noticed in first article, is manifested in this title of Father or Pope. An express rule given by Christ himself to his disciples is thus deliberately set at naught—"Call no man your father upon the earth; for one is your Father, who is in heaven." Even the Roman Catholic Version has it in almost identical terms. But more of this anon.

The authorized creed of the Church of Rome is, according to "Chamber's Encyclopedia," the Decrees of the Council of Trent which sat from 1545 to 1563—and which were embodied in a Bull issued by Pope Pius IV., and hence known as the Creed of Pope Pius. The 11th article of that Creed shows the claim put forth by that church even when the Reformation was running its course, "I acknowledge the holy Catholic and Apostolic Roman Church to be the mother and mistress of all churches, and I promise and swear true obedience to the Roman Pontiff, successor to the Prince of the Apostles, St. Peter, and the vicegerent of Jesus Christ." The title "Mistress of all Churches" fully bears out the language of Paul's prediction—"as a god or ruler sitting in the temple of God;" and the promulgation of such a creed the words added—"showing himself that he is a god or ruler."

Another illustration of this usurpation occurs in the pontificate of John XXII. in the beginning of the fifteenth century. Hallam mentions, in regard to the appropriation of benefices, "John XXII., the most pluralist of pontiffs, reserved to himself all the bishoprics of Christendom." It was at this time a portion of disaffected monks of the Franciscan order "fixed the name of Antichrist upon the papacy."

But we have even a more specific fulfilment of this prediction concerning the Man of Sin as to his "sitting in the temple of God," in the ecclesiastical arrangement of church order. A cathedral is defined in our dictionaries as "The principal or head church of a diocese, in which is the seat or throne of a bishop." According to "Chambers Encyclopedia," "At consecration, . . . the new Bishop takes an oath to the Sovereign and to the Pope, . . . and being enthroned at formal installation into office, he then pronounces the blessing on the assembled people." We have a remarkable illustration of the recognition of this in the case of Charles the Bald, grandson of Charlemagne. "No one," said he, "ought to have degraded me from the throne to which I was consecrated, until at least I had been heard and judged by the bishops, through whose ministry I was consecrated, who are called the thrones of God, in which God sitteth, and by whom he dispenses his judgments."

As has already been shown, this is simply the symbolic exhibition of the degree of authority acquired by the bishops in their respective dioceses in Catholic countries. Moreover, this supremacy of bishops over all the other ecclesiastics in their dioceses, we have seen to have been usurped by the bishop of Rome. "It is from the Pope," says Koch, "that archbishops and bishops hold that portion of authority with which they are endowed, and of which he does not divest himself in the act of communicating it to them." And again, "The Popes having seized the nomination to episcopal dignities, it followed, by a simple and natural process, that the confirmation of all prelates, without distinction, was in like manner reserved for them." The Pope has, according to "Chamber's Encyclopedia," "sole authority to appoint bishops in all parts of the church and however this right may be exercised in the first instance, as by the sovereign, by the clergy, or by a synod of bishops, it rests with him to confirm episcopal elections, no matter how made, and to grant (canonical) institution." The same authority gives the following as the titles given to the Pope. "Sovereign Pontiff" the "Vicar of Christ" the "Head of the Church" the "Holy Father," etc. He also wears the tiara or triple crown, said to be symbolical of his temporal (that is civil or political) authority.

This universal authority of the bishop of Rome is also symbolized by enthronization. "After election the pope is enthroned, enters upon possession of his see, and finally, is solemnly crowned." The "ceremonial of consecration" is said to be "very splendid and deeply impressive."

I submit that in what has been advanced it has been demonstrated that the "Man of Sin" is identical with the official Man now at the head of the Roman Catholic Church, claiming, though happily not now exercising, authority over the entire professing church. This claim was put forth within the last two years by the late Pope Pius IX. in his famous letter to the Emperor of Germany, complaining of the treatment of Roman Catholics by the government. It bears date 5th August 1873. I only quote a few lines—"I speak in order to fulfil one of my duties, which consists in telling the truth to all, even to those who are not Catholics, for every one who has been baptized belongs in some way or other—which to define more precisely would be here out of place—belongs, I say, to the pope." I only quote the Emperor's reply so far as to show that this claim was not acknowledged. His Majesty says: "The Evangelical Creed, which, as must be known to Your Holiness, I, like my ancestors and the majority of my subjects, profess, does not permit, in our relation to God, any other mediator than our Lord Jesus Christ."

In closing this article I would direct attention to a matter which has struck me more forcibly the longer I consider the subject, namely, that the Apostacy headed up in "the Man of Sin," has to do with a usurpation of authority more than with any mere departure from the faith, although this latter is also self-evident, and all important, as a characteristic of the papacy. In addition to Scriptures quoted in first article on predicted apostacy, I would here refer to one which I consider to be the most specific, though most incipient germ of "the Man of Sin." John says (3 Epis. verse 9) "I wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not. Wherefore if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words; and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church."

Here was a repudiation of apostolic authority in the very life-time of an apostle! The character of lawlessness will be treated more fully in another article.

Jews in Jerusalem.

As there are many who would like to have a few lines from me, and as I cannot possibly write to all, I thought it better to send a letter to The Christian, which will give an outline of what I wish to communicate. Many are aware that I came out here at the invitation of the Rev. H. Friedlander, whose active sympathy on behalf of the Russian Jews lately come here is known to you. In answer to prayer, the expenses of the long journey come in a few weeks, and every difficulty was removed. I left London on November 22, and arrived here on December 15, passing through Turin, Rome, Naples, to Brindisi, to Alexandria, and Jaffa. As I journeying memories were asked for by loving friends and particularly a calm sea I wish to say that the sea was unpresumingly calm all the way, and the dangerous landing at Jaffa safely accomplished. I visited in the latter place Miss Mangin's well-regulated and useful hospital, where they have daily some fifty patients. This is a noble institution, and reflects the highest credit on its active and zealous founder On arriving at Jerusalem I found the dear Friedlanders ready to receive me, and to give me a hearty welcome. They are overwhelmed with work, and also are seeing most blessed results of their labors. The London Jews Society are happy in having such an earnest worker in this important place, and at this particular time. The Jews are rapidly returning here, not only from Russia but from other quarters, and their number may be estimated safely at some 20,000, and the total population of Jerusalem at 40,000. These figures I got from the best source. The town is extending so rapidly outside the walls that in a little time the outside portion will be the most important, as it is already by far the most agreeable, and house-property is lowering in the old town. One principal object I have in view in coming was to find out the possibility of placing the afflicted families in the land of their fathers; I am glad to say that this object is perfectly attainable, and already three good proposals have been made that will make the great problem of the beginning of the colonisation of Palestine no longer a vision or a chimera, but a fact. I feel that all the friends in England require is a practical tangible scheme, that they can see their way to be a success, and the money to carry it out will be forthcoming. This information I hope to be able to give on my return. In the meantime, the helping the wants of these poor afflicted ones has been admirably met by the unceasing care of Mr. and Mrs. Friedlander, and they have won a warm place in the hearts of the Jewish people with who they have come in contact, I have fixed no time as yet for return home, but would beg all who read this and know the value of prayer to plead for us that wisdom and guidance may be given to us, and that the funds so much needed may continue to come in.—Yours faithfully.—Wm. Greene, in The (London) Christian.

The Jews Beginning their Land.

A French newspaper says: "Judging by reports, which appear tolerably well confirmed, the Jews are little by little retaking possession of their ancient patrimony. Eighty years ago the Sublime Porte permitted residence in the holy city to only three hundred Israelites. Forty years ago this number was raised, but the Jews were obliged to reside in a special quarter of the city which bore their name. This last restriction however, disappeared in its turn ten years ago, and since then the Jews have bought up all the land in Jerusalem that could be bought, and have built entire streets and houses outside the walls. Synagogues and Jewish hospitals have multiplied. The German Jews have no less than sixteen charity associations, and in the interior of the city one may count already twenty-eight congregations. Two Journals have been established.—Prophetic Times.

Silver Spring, in Georgia, is said to be the largest spring in the world. It is the source of the Oklawaha River, which is sixty feet wide at the start, ten feet deep, and with a current flowing two miles an hour. All this vast quantity of water comes from the spring, whose only inlets are at the bottom. It is about two acres in size, and its mysterious depths have never been explored. There is an Indian legend about Silver Spring, of course. Wenonah, the beauty of the tribe that inhabited the neighborhood, won the love of Chullootah, a hostile chief. Her wrathful father slew the lover, and then Wenonah drowned herself in the spring, which was then small, but was instantly enlarged to its present proportions by the Great Spirit's abundant tears of sympathy.

"Beareth All Things."

These are only a few who possess enough of the grace of charity to "bear all things." We understand the term—beareth all things—as meaning those who possess so much of the Christ spirit that "nothing shall offend them" nor turn them a moment from the path of duty. While others fret and murmur over the opposition and trials that meet them, and stop in their spiritual journey, these keep onward in the narrow way, never halting nor turning back. If others swerve at them they "stumble not again," and still wear the shining bright faces that ever beam with the light of eternal love. If Judas betrays in a way perfectly unbound by grace, it is exhibited by those who "bear all things" and "endure all things." If there are any who live above the clouds, upon whose brow eternal sunlight ever falls, it is there. If there are any who ever live in the bright spring-time of eternal youth, it is those who possess so much of "the greatest grace" that they bear and endure all things for the Master's sake. For his sake this is the great secret of a holy life. None can ever fall of becoming like Christ who walk in the path of duty for His sake. All can learn to bear and endure, to hope and believe, while living a holy life for His sake.

A Disputed Text Further Examined.

The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years are finished. Rev. 20: 5.

I have said there was an effort made in the early centuries to get rid of the Revelation because it taught the Millennium. The reader will find the story of this hostility to the Apocalypse traced in the first chapter of my "Reign of Christ." In the fourth century Augustine invented a new scheme for the thousand years. He located this period between A.D. 1 and A.D. 1000. The Romish church received it. It is in history the well known Romish view. The new notion put an end to Rome's hostility to the Revelation, and the book was once more generally received as canonical. With the reception by the church of the anti-millennarian doctrine the expectation of Christ's personal return and reign died out of mind. Satan hates and dreads a returning, reigning Jesus.

As early as A.D. 247, Dionysius wrote that some had rejected the Revelation. Who were they? I reply Marcion in A. D. 130. But he rejected all of the New Testament save Paul's writings, and is classed as a heretic. Caius in A. D. 190–210 rejected it; but he also rejected the Hebrews, and was of no account. The Alogi rejected it but they also rejected John's gospel. All these were haters of the millennium and, says Prof. Stuart, "pinned a carnal thousand years up on the Apocalypse." Caius said that Cerinthus—a heretic—wrote the book. We know John wrote it. Some of the later Greeks and many Christians in Syria rejected it because they could not understand its symbols and mysteries. Cyril in A. D. 350 is silent about it. It is wanting in the catalogue of the Council of Laodicea A.D. 365. Chrysostom in A.D. 398 never quotes it but Suidas says he (Chrysostom) received it among the sacred books. Severus in A.D. 401 says it was "wickedly rejected by many. In Eusebius' time it was a contraverted book. The only ground of all opposition I can find was (1) It was obscure (2) it taught Christ's reign on earth a 1000 years, at his second coming. On the other hand the majority, generally the orthodox, received Revelation as the inspired work of St John the Apostle. (See Smith's Dict. Art. Apocalypse). Dr. Lardner cites Papias Justin, Melito, Irenæus, Clement, Tertullian, Theophilus Methodius, Arnobius, Lactantius, Origen, Cyprian Novatius, Commodian, Athanasius, Hilary, Epiphanius Victorinus, Gregory of Nyssen, Ambrose, Jerome Augustine etc., as endorsing in full the canonicity of Revelation. Papias as early as A. D. 100, unquestionably received it, a fact worthy of note when we fail to find it in the Syriac version made ninety-four years later.

This rejection of Revelation in certain quarters explains why some of the earlier manuscripts and version of the New Testament did not contain the book—notably the Syriac in A. D. 200 and the Vatican in A. D. 360. If we are prepared on these grounds to reject the text at the head of this article as a forgery, we must, to be consistent, throw overboard the entire book of Revelation. I do not think our brethren who repudiate the millennial reign are ready for that. And those who wish to prove this verse an interpolation will reconsider their conclusion, when they know these things and weigh well the fact that the ripe scholar who of all men ought best to know, insists that the verse belongs in the Sinaitic manuscript of A. D. 350.

This conclusion is strengthened by other evidence, namely, that derived from many very early versions. The Ethiopic version, made from the Greek in the fourth century—exact date unknown—includes both the Old and New Testament. The Vulgate made by Jerome in cir. A. D. 400 contains Revelation. The Copic or Coptomemphitic version dating back to the middle of the fourth century does not omit it. The Gothic version made by Bishop Ulphilas in A. D. 348–88 includes the Old and New Testaments. The Peshito-Arabic version, whose manuscript is of the thirteenth or fourteenth century is a translation of the Peshito-Syriac. The Apocalypse being omitted; it is supplied in the MS. from the Coptic. I do not find that any of these old versions save the Syriac, leave out the Revelation. Is it any wonder that a single ancient manuscript found in Mount Sinai. In Arabic," (Gal. iv. 24) omits the disputed verse, solely, Tischendorf thinks, by an error of the unknown copyist? I dare not build a theory on such omission. The weight of evidence is in favor of the Revelation, its twentieth chapter, and also the fifth verse. What number of the early Christian writers quote this verse I do not know, having no opportunity to examine their writings. Should it be found that they do quote it, it would fix the question as to its being a part of the original writing of St. John with no room to doubt. Indeed I think it is settled already. Let us be careful not to take away from the words of the book of this prophecy." It won't be safe, Rev. xxii. 19. No doubt the 1000 years are in the future. The resurrection of the holy will take place when they begin, that of the unholy at their termination. A grand Messianic millennium lies between the Alpha and Omega of this famous age. It is about to break upon us. Let it come speedily.—D. T. T., in Bible Banner.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 22.

Prelude—Law of distribution of the human family—Two classes, settled, or civilized, and nomadic, or savage. Which class settled Europe?—Three distinct migrations—Saxons in their European home—Where? How many divisions? Each division described. Whom was their first settlement? Their education on land and on the sea—Their growth.

Prelude.—Law of distribution of the human family.—Anthropology opens into a very extended field for investigation. The two great divisions of this science are: a. Ethnography, and b. Ethnology; the one generic, the other two specific. Anthropology, gives the natural history of man. Ethnography, gives the details of the masses of human organizations, as they exist in families, tribes, and nations. Ethnology, treats of the distinct features of nations and races. A comprehensive division is the following: 1. "Zoological anthropology, which treats of the relation of man to the brute creation. 2. Descriptive anthropology, or ethnology, which classifies and describes the various divisions and subdivisions of mankind, and marks out their geographical distribution. 3. General anthropology, which M. Broca calls, 'the biology of the human race,' which, says a recent writer on the subject, 'borrows and collates from all science facts and phenomena usually investigated in man as individuals, but which relate to men as groups of individuals,' and compares these with other facts relating to other groups of individuals. The study and bare description of a single negro's skull is mere human anatomy; the study of a group of negroes' skulls belonging to other races, would be a specimen of the work done by general anthropology."—Library of Universal Knowledge. The most distinguished authors on this subject are Blumenbach, Dr. Prichard, Dr. Latham, Retzius, Huxley, Dr. Morton of Philadelphia, Darwin, and Agassiz. The great question of the science is, did man, originally, spring from one, or from many centres? Blumenbach, Drs. Prichard and Latham hold to the unity of origin; the other authors to the plurality of centres. The greatest power of intellect and of knowledge defend the unity.

The two classes of mankind.—a. The settled, or civilized class, of which we have types in the Egyptians, and the Babylonians and Persians. b. The nomadic, or savage class, of which the Kelts and Goths, Scythians, or Germans were types. In every community, these two classes are conspicuous, the settled and the roving. The roving are not satisfied long in any locality. They are the world's scouts; its first inhabitants; its pioneers. These classes we have in our own country: those who are constantly on the look-out for new homes; always retiring before the march of refinement. Liberty is their cry. No restraint of law. It must be admitted that this migratory class has produced the world's great revolutions. Their mission is necessary to the spread of the human family. What would the world now be without the Germs? It may be asked, which class first settled Europe? This question is very readily answered,—the Nomads. For the Romans and Grecians, at an early period, dwelt in southern Europe, it is true; yet the Kelts and Germans are the principal occupants of this grand division; hence Europe is called by historians, "The German Continent."

There have been three distinct migrations into Europe, from the east:—a. The Kimmerians and the Kelts, dwelling in the southwest, the west and northwest of Europe—in Spain, France, and Germany. b. The Scythians, Goths, or Germans, who dwell in middle of central Europe. c. The Slavonians and Sarmatians, who inhabit eastern Europe. The Russians belong to the third class. These three migrations are so distinct, and so far apart in time, that they are marked by three distinct dialects—and three equally distinct locations. This is the key of the proper understanding of European ethnology.

Saxons in their European home.—Let us turn again to the Saxons. Their country was composed of six districts: three islands at the mouth of the Elbe, and three small provinces north of the Elbe on the Cimbric Chersonesus. The islands were a. North Strant, formerly torn from South Jutland by the violence of the waves: once about 20 miles long and 7 broad. Noted, at first, for its agriculture and fish; much damaged by the sea. The inundations of A. D. 1300, 1493, 1532, 1615, and 1634, were terrible; more particularly the last, which submerged the entire island; destroying 6408 persons, 1332 houses, and 50,000 head of cattle.

b. The island of Busen; north of the mouth of the Elbe, 3 miles long, by 2 miles in breadth; once supposed to form a part of the mainland; on a level with a stormy sea, it is surrounded by a strong dyke. It contains 3 parishes, as many villages, and is moderately fertile.

c. The most noted island is "Heilig island, which means sacred (holy) land; ceded to Great Britain, by the King of Denmark, Aug. 20. 1814. It is situated in a long recess, 9 miles from the mouth of the Elbe. It is the first island that occurs in the ocean. It is very fruitful, rich in corn, and a nurse of cattle and birds. It has one hill and no trees; it is surrounded with the steepest rocks, with only a single entrance, where there is fresh water. It is a place venerated by all sailors, and especially by all pirates."—S. Turner.

Pontanus (1630) says, "It had formerly seven parishes, and from its inhabitants and incidents we learn that it was once much larger than it is at present; for in our times the sea receding, the soil has been worn down and carried away, on all sides by the violence of the waves. Its banner is a ship in full sail." "It has a safe and capacious harbor, very deep and open to the south. This sometimes holds 100 ships of burthen, and defends them from the north and west winds. Their food consists of their oats, and the produce of their nets. But though sacred in human estimation; the elements have not respected this island. In the year 800, a furious tempest from the northwest occasioned the greater portion to be swallowed by the waves. In 1300 and 1600, it suffered materially from the same cause; but the inundations of 1649 was so destructive, that but a small part of the island survived it. If another attack should wash away the sandy downs, scarce one-sixth of the present population could subsist."—S. Turner. It is now a mark, and light-house for the navigation of the Elbe. This island was a marine school for the Saxon—as all the men became experienced pilots. It is now on the ocean highway between England and the continent.

Saxon territory on the continent, is north of the Elbe, and on the western side of Cimbric peninsula, and is divided into three districts: a. Ditmarsia. b. Stormaria. c. Holsatia. As we shall have occasion to use these territories, we subjoin their description from the history of Sharon Turner, than whom no author can be more reliable. a. "Ditmarsia is separated on the north from Slesswick by the Eyder, and from Stormaria on the south by the Stoer. It fronts the island of Heiligland and Busen, and extends in length thirty-seven miles, and in breadth twenty-three. Its general aspect is a soil, low and marshy, and strong mounds are necessary to keep the ocean to its natural limits. The land on the coast is favorable to corn and cattle; but in the interior appear sterile lands, and uncultivated marshes. Its inhabitants, like those of all unfruitful regions, have been tenacious of the right of enjoying their poverty in independence, and the nature of the country has favored their military exertions. Their habits of warfare and scanty livelihood produces a harshness of disposition which often amounted to ferocity." (Their banner was an armed soldier on a white horse.)

"Below Ditmarsia, and reaching to the Elbe, was Stormaria. The Stoer, which named the province, confined it on the north. The Eyder, Trave, and Bille, determined the rest of its extent. It was almost one slimy marsh. The wet and low situation of Stormaria and Ditmarsia exactly corresponds with the Roman account of the Saxons living in inaccessible marshes. (Sine ullis paludibus habitant). The Stoer is friendly to navigation and fishing. Stormaria is somewhat quadrangular, and its sides may be estimated at thirty-three miles.

Divided from Slesswick by the Lovenau on the north, bounded by Wagria on the east, and by the Trave on the south, Holsatia stretches its numerous woods to Ditmarsia. The local application of the region thus confined has been by a sort of geographical catachresis, applied to denominate all that country which is contained within the Eyder, the Elbe and the Trave. Their country received from the bounty of nature one peculiar characteristic: the loftier Holsatia presented a continued succession of forests, and of plains which admitted cultivation." Such a country did God select, out of all Europe, where he might educate a people (the Saxons) to rule the seas with its navies, and belt the world with its armies and merchantmen.

No destiny, for seven centuries, could be less probable than the one determined by the Almighty for the Anglo-Saxon. Planted among rocks, sands, and impenetrable swamps; exposed to tempests from land and sea—their physical surroundings required the people to put forth every possible effort to supply the necessaries of life. The Romans could not penetrate their marshes, nor had they any plunder to attract these southern conquerors. Had they been exposed like the more open tribes of Germany, they would have failed in their future mission. He that is working out his own plans among the nations, kept the Saxons under a severe private tuition till they should be able to resist the Roman corruptions, as well as to succeed against its armies. There are two particular movements in which we can discern the Divine agency: 1. The formation of the Saxon confederacy on the continent. 2. The evacuation of the island of Great Britain by the Romans, after having subjugated and held it for four centuries. These were both accomplished by the increasing power of the Saxon. The Saxon Confederation, a league on the continent, prevented the entire conquest of Germany by the Romans, and brought such a powerful combination of German tribes against the Roman empire, that the Roman legions had to be recalled from Britain. These events had to be postponed to give the Saxons time to develop their native powers.

This preparatory Saxon training we shall now briefly describe.—What was the peculiar character of the Saxon educational drill? They had a land, and a sea drill. In their land, or domestic education, they had to contend against land and water. Their three islands were of little natural worth. They had to contend against a barren soil, and a tempestuous sea. Their three continental districts, were similar in their physical structure, excepting Holsatia, which was well timbered. Their ocean discipline was peculiar, and, therefore, demands more special notice. The most were called early into sea-service, as pilots, or as seamanders of vessels, or as private seamen. Those seas, by which they were principally surrounded, were stormy, making their ocean life one of great danger. The Saxons, during their occupancy of their European swamps, were savages; and they lived like savages, and were occupied as savages. They were idolatrous: a set of pagan warriors. "They were fearless, active, and successful pirates." They were dreadful for their courage and agility. The Emperor Julian, who had lived among barbarians, and who had fought with some Saxon tribes, says that they were distinguished amongst their neighbors for vehemence and valor. Zosimus, their contemporary, expresses the general feeling of his age when he ranks them as superior to others in energy, strength, and warlike fortitude. "Their ferocious qualities were nourished by the habit of indiscriminate depredation.

It was from the cruelty and destructiveness, as well as from the suddenness of their incursions, that they were dreaded more than any other people. Like the Danes and Norwegians, their successors and assailants, they depopulated when they plundered, with sword and flame. It was consistency in such men to be inattentive to danger. They launched their predatory vessels, and suffered the wind to blow them to any foreign coast, indifferent whether the result was a depredation unresisted, or the doubtful conflict. Such was their cupidity, or their brutal hardihood, that they often preferred embarking in the tempest which might shipwreck them, because at such a season, their victims would be more unguarded." — Turner.

Translation of Colossians Chapter II.

1. For I would have you know how great a struggle I am having for you and for those who are in Laodicea and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh,

2. That the hearts of these who have been co-instructed in love may have been helped on unto all the wealth of the full measure of their understanding, unto a comprehension of the mystery of their God and Father and of Christ,

3. In whom are all the stored up treasures of the wisdom and comprehension hidden away.

4. And this I say, that no one of you may be reasoned away with persuasive argument.

5. For even if I am absent in the flesh, yet in the spirit am I with you, rejoicing and viewing the order and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ.

6. Therefore as ye have received the Christ Jesus, the Lord, walk ye in him,

7. Rooted and built upon and in him, and continue steadfast in the faith, even as ye have been taught, abounding in it with thanksgiving.

8. See to it that no one syllogize you through their philosophy and vain deceit according to the tradition of men, according to their first principles of the "cosmos" and not according to Christ.

9. Because in him dwelleth in bodily form all the completeness of the divine nature;

10. And ye are made full in him, who is the head (supra head of the corporate body) of every authority and power;

11. In whom also ye have been circumcised with a circumcision not done with hands, in the putting off and away of the body of the sins of the flesh, namely in the circumcision of the Christ,

12. Ye who have been buried along with him in the baptism in which also ye have been awakened along with him to life through the faith which belongs to the inworking power of the God who awakened him to life from among the dead;

13. And as who were dead in errors and in the uncircumcision of our flesh, hath he made alive along with him, having been gracious toward all our errors;

14. Having erased the hand-writing against us in his ordinances, which was staring us in the face. He took it away from our midst after that he had nailed it to the cross;

15. And when he put off and away the authorities and powers he made a public example of them, leading them in triumph unto it (the cross).

16. Let no one judge you therefore in eating or in drinking, or in the part you take in a religious feast or new-moon observance or in sabbatic rites,

17. Which are a shadow of the things destined to be, the body indeed being Christ's.

18. Let no one cajole athletic against you who in servility and a mistaken worship of the angels on purpose(?) who pryeth into things which he hath not seen, who hath become puffed up to no purpose by the mind of his flesh,

19. And doth not adhere to the (intelligent or corporate) head (κεφαλην) from which all the body (σωμα) receiving its supplies and direction through its points of contact and conjunction groweth with the growth of God.

20. If then ye have died along with the Christ away from the elementary principles of the (that is this) cosmos why as though living in a (that is its) cosmic order do ye submit to such decrees as

21. Thou shalt not touch, nor taste nor handle

22. Those things which in their use are all unto corruption, according to the commandments of men;

23. Which teachings have in them indeed wisdom's argument for will-culture and humility and austerity of body; and that there is no honor at all pertaining to a full gratification of the flesh.

The Euphrates in Rev. xvi. 12—Is it Literal or Figurative?

In THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 24, J. P. Weethee deals with the cause in which the river Euphrates is to be understood in the passage at the head of this article. He refers to what I advanced on the subject in a recent paper reprinted from the Revelator. He holds the literal sense to be the right one. His principal reason is that the word Euphrates does not occur in the explanation given in Rev. xvii. 15, where it is written—"The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth, are peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues." But the question that requires to be answered is: If the waters here are not identical with the Euphrates mentioned in the preceding part of this Divinely given picture of Babylon and its doom, what other waters had John seen to which reference is here made? It must be quite evident that the general term "waters," used in chap. xvii. 15, may very fitly apply to the Euphrates named in chap. xvi. 12 — seeing that they are both parts of one scene, in which Babylon is the central object, and the Euphrates closely connected with it, as the historical and geographical facts clearly attest.

Besides, the harlot is a symbol of Babylon, as the inscription on her forehead shows — "Mystery Babylon the great" etc., and if we keep in mind that the harlot is represented as "sitting upon the waters"—or as it may be rendered by the waters—and that this is the exact way in which the literal city was related to the river Euphrates —we need use no straining to see in the "waters" John saw, the "many waters" upon which Babylon dwelt—Jer. li. 13.

Again, the entire vision concerning Babylon, extending over five chapters of this book of Revelation is full of symbols—the beast, with its heads and horns; the golden cup, with the wine of the harlot woman, who was "drunken with the blood of the saints." Above all, the vials are admittedly metaphorical — being filled with the wrath of God. This being so, the sixth vial poured on the Euphrates is also metaphorical — but I submit, this necessitates the Euphrates to be understood also in a metaphorical sense; for how incongruous is the pouring of a metaphorical fluid upon a literal river! Besides, what relation can the wrath of God bear to the waters of which the literal Euphrates consists. On the contrary, the nations are represented in the Revelation, as well as in other Scriptures, as suffering under the Divine wrath. I should like Mr. Weethee to consider this point more particularly.

Regarding Mr. Weethee's quotation of Woodhouse on the term Euphrates in Rev. ix. 14—who seems to hold the literal sense here, I would only say that I see no objection to the symbolical sense here as I have endeavored to show that sense in Rev. xvi. 12. Mr. Woothee shows the absurdity of "the mystic Euphrates bound in the literal Euphrates." But if he holds the symbolical sense as to the "four angels," I think he is called on to explain how mystic angels can be bound, by the literal river Euphrates; or how the Mohammedan powers signified by the four angels were hindered in their progress westward by the mere existence of the literal river at that particular time and not on other occasions.

But it is a historical fact that "the nations and multitudes" of Europe who engaged in the Crusades in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, actually formed an obstacle to the Mohammedan powers. And as soon as this obstacle was removed in the cessation of the Crusades those Mohammedan powers got at liberty to throw their armies into Europe, which they actually did. For a fuller explanation of this the reader is referred to a little work entitled "Three Worlds," by N. H. Barbour, Rochester, New York, 1877.

Another point worthy of notice in the circumstance, that the symbol of the woman is derived directly from the Old Testament description of Babylon and her imminent doom, and consequently the waters upon which she sat could be no other than the Euphrates. "Thou saidst I shall be a lady for ever," is the language addressed to Babylon, in Isaiah xlvii. 7. "I shall not sit as a widow; neither shall I know the loss of children"—is added. And this is echoed in the Revelation.—"For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow and shall see no sorrow."

From what has been advanced I submit that the full reading of Rev. xvii. 15 would be:—"The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot (Babylon) sitteth, are peoples and multitudes and tongues." If this is farther questioned I shall be glad to consider the reasons.

THE BIBLE AND POPULATION.

It is generally believed that there are now on the earth more than fifteen hundred millions of inhabitants; and from what we gather from history as far back as history goes, the number has been less and less as we proceed in that direction; there must then have been some indefinite time in the past when human life began. How far back that was, without any help from revelation, history, or scientific aid, we are left to wild conjecture. Suppose we adopt the best means which mathematical science furnishes, together with a little history of the past 100 years, and see whether we can arrive at any reliable conjecture whether human life began about 6000 years ago, as the Bible tells us it did, or whether 30, 40, or 50 thousand years ago, as some scientists say who claim that its origin was not from a human pair, but from some molecular development in the remote ages of the past.

Let us turn to the increase in population of some average country for the last century; America will not do because immigration has been too profuse; the continental countries of Europe and Asia have been subject to heavy depletions from wars, etc., and are consequently unreliable; England, which is an island and more remote from troubles, will probably come nearer to an average than any we can select. The population of that country has a little more than doubled itself in the last century. But it may be said that England has seen less loss of population in the last century than that average would allow. Say that it would be a fair average to double every 200 years. Now run back from fifteen hundred millions at the present time at the rate of doubling every 200 years and we cannot get back much beyond the flood when it is said there were only eight. The probability would then seem to be very remote for the correctness of any calculation which would require more than 6 or 8 thousand years for Noah's 8 to increase to 1500 millions at any reasonable rate of increase. To say that the start was from two individuals, or to assume the Darwin theory of molecular development, and that the beginning may have been only 30 thousand years ago we would have to adopt so low a rate of increase, say doubling every thousand years, that reasonable probabilities are altogether against it, and it would seem that no other estimate than that account which the Bible gives us can be made to any wise satisfactory.

Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives.

The best view of Jerusalem is from the Mount of Olives. The view is as perfect as it is inspiring. Here no air of tradition is required. It is Jerusalem beyond a doubt. The hills still encompass it as of old. Its landmarks are still the same as when David reigned over it, or when Titus besieged it. Here we gaze upon the grand outlines of the once glorious city of David and find ourselves lost in wonder in the attempt to convey to the [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] would be the work of volumes. Nearly the history of Jerusalem but that of the whole world would be included—not only the history of the Jewish Commonwealth, but the wars of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Persians, Saracens and Christian Crusaders—all whose banners have been displayed and whose battle-cries have there been heard.

Below is the Garden of Gethsemane, the brook Kedron, the valley Jehoshaphat, and the pool of Siloam, celebrated in the history of our Savior's miracles.

But the crowning feature is Jerusalem. Nearest you and directly in front is Moriah and the Mosque of Omar, where Abraham's uplifted hand was stayed when about to slay his son Isaac; where David's cry arrested the hand of the destroying angel, where stood the temple built by Solomon,

"In earth's dark circles once the gem
Of living light," and where the lamb was sacrificed for generations on Jewish altars. Higher up is the holy hill of Zion, where the shepherd-boy, the son of Jesse, the slayer of Goliath, built a city and a royal dwelling, where he kept, for three months the Ark of the Covenant, a spot hallowed by many sacred associations; and finally

"Behold! Jerusalem in prospect lies!
Behold! Jerusalem salutes your eyes!"

where the scene of man's redemption took place.

It is now, whilst gazing on the desolate city without the aid of dark superstition and ridiculous traditions, that the beholder is awed yet tranquillized by the glorious scene before him, celebrated in the history of the Old and New Testaments, where the Son of God lived and died.

The height of the Mount of Olives is reckoned to be 700 feet, and about 2367 feet above the Mediterranean. The summit of it is distant about one mile from Jerusalem. Here is a small village where the natives lead the traveller to the Chapel of the Ascension, now occupied by a Mosque, and from which it is said the Savior ascended to heaven. A mark is shown in the floor in the rock resembling that which would be impressed by the human foot in clay. This, they say, is the last of our Lord as he left the earth. The mark of the other foot is taken by the Moslems and placed in the Mosque of Omar, where it may be seen. More hereafter.

Editor Restitution:

I enclose ten dollars for my subscription and to help the paper. I feel that it is my duty to help all that I can, as it is the only preaching that I have, and I think it is too bad, if the paper cannot be issued regularly for want of means, when a little from each one that is able to give (if they only thought so) would keep it in good standing financially. There is no use of holding on to the perishable things of this life and run the risk of perishing with them. We should look carefully to these things.

It is well known that a cat will find its way home again, though carried a long distance. The people of Liege, Belgium, it is said, have taken advantage of this trait, and formed a society to train cats to carry messages in a similar way that carrier pigeons do. Thirty-seven of these household pets were recently carried a long distance into the country, and in less than twenty-four hours each one had found its way back to Liege. It is proposed to have a regular system of communication between that town and the neighboring villages.

In Switzerland's lofty mountains, the Alpine horn, which sounds also the far-famed Ranz des Vaches, when [illegible] has set, is taken by the horseman, and through it he loudly pronounces the words "Praise the Lord God." At the sound all the herdsmen arise from their huts and take up the [illegible] last, darkness falls, and the highest herdsman only [illegible] "Good-night, good-night, [illegible]

As it always has been so, it is now. Some profess godliness for gain. By their fruits ye shall know them, will be the true test. # THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CRAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 26, 1883.

NOTICE—We have been sending THE RESTITUTION to numerous persons who have not, themselves, subscribed for it. These will understand that the paper is sent by some friend. This list is increasing. Some copies are paid for a year and others for shorter intervals. It is a trial list, and the paper will be discontinued at the expiration of the time for which payment has been made unless it should so far please its recipients as to induce them to order its continuance on their own account, which we hope may be the case with numbers. Our friends of the Relief Fund and others are sending to hundreds both at home and abroad. Quite a number are sent to relatives, to ministers, and to the poor, as well as on trial.

We have not room to write editorially several items we designed. We have to defer communications for the same reason. We are so crowded that it will require weeks to dispose of matter on hand and give interesting variety.

We met Dr. E. C. Welch, editor of Christian Chilian, last summer in Philadelphia. He sent us quite an elaborate article which we give this week. While others see differently it is a view of the coming age entertained by many. We designed giving a brief article from Dr. Petavel's book but have not room.

We have not all arrived at "the unity of the faith" upon several important questions connected with the destiny of our race, nor with regard to God's plan of the Ages. There is the greatest necessity, therefore, for forbearance with each other. Though not by any means in agreement with all that appears in our paper, yet we persistently refuse to carp at, criticize, or antagonize views that others set forth. It is the plan of our paper that each writer shall present any topic he may select, with his own arguments and illustrations, without any reference whatever to positions taken by others, although supposed erroneous. It should be our ambition to hold forth the light, if we have it, and show the right, instead of pointing out that some one else is wrong.

THE ENDLESS LIFE.

In a letter to Mr. Edward White—a few weeks ago—we, at the close, requested that he would furnish us with something for publication. He has kindly responded by sending us two discourses on the "Endless Life," preached to his congregation in London, March 19, 1882, which were published in England by special request. These discourses are largely of a historical character, detailing fairly many incidents intimately connected with the speaker's own individual experience, both in the reception and the proposition of the doctrine that endless life is only through Christ; and in the second place, presenting a well epitomized history of English opinion on Human Destiny for the last thirty years, as this destiny is connected with our redemption through the Son of God. Incidentally the author has interwoven much important and desirable information regarding distinguished persons who have written on this subject. Mr. White is the author of a volume entitled "Life in Christ," which has been translated into French. We thank him most sincerely for sending us these discourses. Although we shall be compelled to divide them into parts, we will be careful to make the divisions where the line of thought is complete. In this number we give that part of the first discourse that mostly relates to Mr. White's personal experience. The other sections of the discourse will follow in consecutive numbers.

Discourse I.—Part 1.

A DISCOURSE ON THE THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHURCH IN HAWLEY ROAD.

"The world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."—1 John ii. 17.

The present week terminates the thirtieth year of the history of our Congregation and Ministry. Several reasons incline us briefly to rehearse this history today in the ears of a new generation, since those who were present at its commencement are rapidly passing away, and the story will be sought out before long, perhaps encouraging to our survivors, as a passage in English Church life in the nineteenth century.

The history of English thought on human destiny is a subject which may well lift us above all personal recollections into the infinite realms. Individual interests vanish when the rending veil exposes eternity to our view. Yet, if we are to give the history of English thought and opinion it will be necessary to state some facts, and to commemorate some English experiences, since it is through the finite that the infinite is brought into realization with man.

I shall not detain you long with the story of local endeavor in this field of English belief. The beginnings which we bring to mind today will soon lead us away from our own individuality into a review of greater movements, and the commemoration of the deeds of many soldiers of Christ in our own and other lands. Nevertheless, as this is our commemoration day, we will tell the home story first of all.

A few sentences will suffice to despatch the personal part of this narrative, which yet are necessary in order to explain what will follow. Forty-four years ago, in 1838, towards the end of my educational course in preparation for the Christian ministry, I met, as we say, accidentally on a Holborn book-stall, with an anonymous volume which, as appeared by a manuscript letter inside its cover, had previously belonged to the then Bishop of Llandaff, the celebrated critic, Dr. Herbert Marsh, and had been presented to him by the author, a layman, Mr. James Fontaine, in the year 1817. It was neither a learned nor a critical book, but it clearly maintained and enforced in a devout temper the doctrine that "immortality is dependent on spiritual regeneration, and that eternal punishment is privation, not suffering." It was published by Hatchard, bookseller to the Queen, Piccadilly. I bought it for a trifle, and it proved the turning point of my life. I found myself both astonished and interested by the august idea which in simple language it unfolded; that man, by sin, had lost immortal life; and that the object of the stupendous procedure of the incarnation of the Godhead in the person of Christ was to restore the divine image to man, and with it an everlasting life in God. I found it impossible to shake off the impression which it made upon me, agreeing as it did so much with the surface meaning of the Bible. But the next thought was that since this doctrine had sunk out of general knowledge, as was evident by my own surprise at hearing of it, it had failed of acceptance because it was only one of many unsuccessful heresies.

Nevertheless, I resolved to keep it in view in those systematic studies of Holy Scripture in which I was then engaged, knowing that, although it had been generally rejected, and had sunk out of view, that was a fate which had befallen some undoubted truths in a world not much given to careful examination of evidence, and ruled in its belief by authority and by custom rather than by inquiry. Under any result, fresh examination would either confirm the idea of Mr. Fontaine's book, or would re-establish my footing upon the rock of orthodox faith. Therefore, on a night of extraordinary splendor and beauty, when the vastness of the starry heavens seemed to impart a most solemn urgency to the question of human destiny, I remember praying to the God of heaven, in a high garden on the banks of the Lower Thames, that he would lead me into the knowledge of his truth on this matter, and strengthen me even for a life-long conflict, rather to re-enforce the awful doctrine of orthodoxy on the future of humanity, or to shake its sway. I do not think any youthful spirit ever more honestly devoted itself to find out truth by patient investigation, and if necessary to suffer for its diffusion, than I did on that night, when the Infinite seemed to open afresh on my view.

For seven years I pursued the inquiry, amidst other studies, reading the books of the Bible in order, over and over again, using all the aids, literary and personal, which were available.

The result was an ever-deepening conviction that Fontaine's unlearned book set forth the very truth of God,—viz., on the nature of man as not necessarily immortal; and, on the result of the fall, as bringing him under sentence of death, in the sense of extinction of all life; and, on the object of redemption to renew man in the divine image, in the possession of an endless life through union with the Incarnate Life of God in Christ; while it required, also, that that man out of Christ will utterly perish and die the "second death" in hell, without hope of recovery.

I quickly very early discovered that these ideas had a very ancient history; that they were distinctly held and taught by some of the most important of the writers of the second and third centuries; and had been, in whole or in part, revived by a long succession of writers in subsequent ages,—most of whom, however, had treated the question erroneously, chiefly as one of future punishment, instead of regarding it as a question on the nature and objects of the Christian redemption.

Accordingly, after laying the critical and historical evidence which had carried my own judgment before several able friends, who were similarly affected by it, notably before John Foster the essayist, who responded in the celebrated letter published in his memoirs, I published a pamphlet without my name in 1844, entitled "What was the Fall?"—thus showing that the object was not to affront Christendom by a juvenile or dogmatic denial of its settled beliefs, but to obtain a much-needed thorough discussion of a neglected topic in theology. This pamphlet obtained no success, except a scurrilous and contemptuous notice in the Evangelical Magazine.

It was now necessary to set forth the argument in greater fulness. Accordingly, in 1846, the first edition of "Life in Christ" was published in a small octavo volume, which was received, along with Mr. Dobney's work published in the same year, without any serious examination, and with a storm of indignation against us, which plainly showed that my own prospect of further employment in the Congregational Ministry was ended. It is difficult to convey to this generation a conception of the vehemence and severity of the condemnation with which these early efforts of ours were met by the English religious public.

The practical result for myself was exclusion from every Nonconformist pulpit in the land; and I could not conscientiously enter the National Church. One mode alone of continuing in the ministry remained available—to go to London, as the centre of English thought, and to obtain if possible some church building where there might be a legal right to preach the gospel under such conditions as I have described, where these conclusions might be tested and thoroughly sifted amidst the culture and experience of London Christianity.

This building, in its original form, in a somewhat obscure suburb, was the only one that offered. We were not acquainted with a single Christian person in the neighborhood who would be likely to render assistance. But I submitted the cause to God alone, and went forward. No prospect could have seemed more unpromising. We were then alone in London in those beliefs. Devout men, held in deserved honor, went about warning all who "valued their immortal souls" not to cross this threshold. For my part I was not sorry for these disadvantages. The movement had begun in incessant prayer for light on this awful problem of man's nature and destiny, in ceaseless study of the sacred Scriptures, and in a willingness to suffer anything in disrepute and loss of promotion, God enabling us, in order to test the truth, and to promulgate it if confirmed. If those ideas were errors, we said, let them be crushed—the sooner the better—by all the weight of public authority and of hostile learned opinion; or let them be smothered by this local obscurity, insignificance, and financial difficulty. On the other hand, we said, if these ideas are true and divine, we cannot overthrow them." If some few people are found ready to suffer sharply enough, and long enough, in bringing them before the public, they will certainly make way at last; God will fight for them if they are his truth, and will strengthen us, or some one else, to continue the witness, and will supply the needful resources. And if "these things are so," he will in time open the eyes of some of his abler servants to see what we, and so many others before us have seen, and strengthen them to acknowledge the doctrine of Life in Christ as true in itself, and true for the times.

No sooner was the building opened for worship than some signs of sympathy appeared. Several distinguished ministers, guarding themselves against the supposition of agreeing with us, preached at this re-consecration. A few friendly and heroic souls from a distance, whose hearts God had touched, cast in their lot with us at the very commencement, nearly all previously unknown. These have mostly passed away; a few remain still to enjoy the recollection of their remarkable self-denial and courage, and to join their thanksgiving with ours today in the review of the years that have gone by.

There was this speciality in the establishment of this congregation, that it was founded in 1853 to do a double work. First, it was founded to fulfil the primary function of a congregational society, to "gather out" of the surrounding population, by the preaching of the Gospel of Christ, "a people for God's name," who by joint worship and work might become the instruments of the Holy Spirit for saving other souls, and for helping forward the general mission of the Gospel through the world. This was the chief end proposed in our church foundation, and we thank God that this has been our chief end ever since. No one who has joined us has ever been asked what was his opinion or belief on any secondary subject; the only condition of church-membership has been declared faith in Christ, and in the dogmatic authority of his Apostles, and a consistent life. We have been glad to welcome the adhesion of persons who agreed with us in important secondary views, but such agreement was not essential, and as a matter of fact only a fractional section of our society has exhibited a strong theological tendency in any direction. It has been this practical spirit of the church for thirty years which has been its salvation in every sense of the word, for no church can subsist wholly or chiefly upon controversy, even on matters of the gravest importance. It is the chief comfort of my own reflections today that there never was more uncontroversial zeal for the common salvation, never more zeal for the salvation of souls, never more good work done amongst us for young men and women, for the ignorant, for the poor, for the rich, for the surrounding population, for the heathen nations, than at the present time.

There was, however, a second end to accomplish—and a difficult one—namely, to combine with the ordinary course of evangelization and church-fellowship here, a public effort to explain, to defend, and to propagate those doctrines on immortal life, which long previous study had led us to regard as worthy of all acceptation. It was a sufficiently entangled undertaking. There was always the danger of giving undue prominence to these specialties; of which those who disliked them would not be slow to make observation. There was the opposite danger of so concealing them that one chief object of the movement would be sacrificed to the aim of pleasing its adversaries. We have tried to avoid both extremes.

Whether all that has grown up here and elsewhere throughout the world from these beginnings is to be traced to the good hand of God upon us, or to the aid of the power of darkness assisting a small number of men for thirty years, at great personal loss and discomfort, to enforce and propagate a pernicious heresy, you can judge, at your leisure. For my own part I end these thirty years as I began them—by calling God to record that we have been actuated, so far as we know, by no spirit of rebellion against his holy revelations, but by an honest desire to interpret the Bible according to the plain rule of taking its meaning from the most obvious sense of its general expressions, as on all other topics, so on this subject of life and death eternal. And as the end of this long period of additional study of God's word, of conference with an immense number of scholars of all churches, and of several nations, of laborious investigation of the ancient and modern literature of the questions concerned (having hereby obtained an acquaintance with the controversy which gives one a certain moderate claim to be listened to, superior at least to that of hasty and trifling notice-writers in religious newspapers and magazines); above all as the end of these thirty years' experience of the spiritual effects seen in Christians subjected to such teaching, and in alienated souls both ignorant and educated, who have been reclaimed by its influence, I solemnly this day confess again the doctrine which was taught here at first, that man is not represented in the divine revelations as immortal since the fall, but as a being who has lost the hope of everlasting life, which he can regain only by spiritual regeneration and union with the Immortal Son of God. And, therefore, I protest again, with all my heart and soul and mind, against what appear to us still those two opposite errors, both springing from the common root of faith in man's natural immortality, first against the doctrine of endless torments to be inflicted in "hell" on unsaved men, whether civilized or barbarian; and, secondly, against the now popular doctrine of the absolute final salvation of all men, good and bad; as directly contrary both to the letter and spirit of the Christian revelation recorded in Holy Scripture.

I now wish to add a few observations on the general history of the discussions of the past thirty years on the incompetent subjects to which reference has been made:—

1. Let it be noted specially, and everywhere diligently declared, that the object set before them, whether here or elsewhere, by those who agree with us, has not been, as is too commonly represented, primarily to promulgate a doctrine on the future punishment of wicked men, but a doctrine on the salvation of good men—a doctrine on the means and conditions of everlasting life for those who are saved; not primarily the doctrine of the everlasting destruction of the wicked, much less a metaphysical refinement on their "annihilation," (a term which we have never employed, because it hopelessly entangles the real question with side-issues, and opens the door to metaphysical quibbles on the abolition of substance.) We have taught, as Scripture teaches, that the wicked will perish, and we can discern no reason why this word should not signify the same thing in their case that it does when it is used to describe the "perishing" of bread, or of wine-skins, or of the heavens, in John vi., Luke vi., Psa. civ., that is, the "bread" and the "heavens" and the "wine-skins" will be no more in that character.

Christ says the wicked will be "killed with death," be "destroyed body and soul in Gehenna," and it is to follow the universal law of interpretation when we say that this does not signify any form of living forever.

But this is only secondary truth. The main point is that the gift of endless life in God's image is the central idea of revelation—the idea whence radiate all other evangelical truths on justification, sanctification, and resurrection; and this life for "perishing sinners" is in Christ alone, the Incarnate Life of God. Deathless life, or immortality, is not the property of the animal man, but only of the spiritual. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." 1 John ii. 17.

The two selections below are important as illustrating both the history and prophecy of Divine revelation. The first in order on—Important Discoveries in Egypt—is taken from the New York Observer. The second—relative to the Site of Capernaum—is from the New York Independent. We are persuaded that the evidence for the site of this ancient city is in favor of a place now known as Tel Hum. Here are found ruins of walls and foundations covering a space of half a mile long by a quarter wide, on a point of the shore projecting into the lake and backed by a very gently rising ground." Another writer, a visitant, says:—"Between 10 and 11 o'clock we landed near the ruins of Tell Hum, the supposed site of ancient Capernaum. We made our way through the tall, rank weeds, that here everywhere cover the soil, and soon reached the spot. Not a single building is now left standing. Piles of great stone lie scattered about, the massive foundations of ruined structures can still be seen; while the shafts of ancient columns, and beautiful marble capitals of fine Corinthian sculpture, are mingled with the ruins and half-buried in the earth. The tangled thicket of enormous weeds and thistles grow high over them all, and conceal them from sight. No road passes near them, seldom does human foot visit them, and the wild Arab has such a superstitious dread of the place, he turns aside and refuses to walk over the place! Yet here was once a populous city, and about it one of the most populous portions of the land, while near by were many other towns and cities. To this place, when Jesus' own kindred had expelled him from Nazareth, he came; in Capernaum he dwelt, and it was called his own city.' Here in the synagogue he was accustomed to teach, and in that synagogue he healed the demoniac that cried out against him. Here he entered Peter's house, and found his mother-in-law sick of a fever, and immediately restored her to health. Here he healed the paralytic man whose friends tore up the roof of the house, that they might let him down in his presence; here he cured the centurion's servant, and raised Jairus' daughter from the dead. From here he sent his disciples down to the sea to take a fish from the water, in the mouth of which they found the tribute money. In Capernaum he often preached, and how many and how instructive the lessons that fell from his lips. Near by was Chorazin and Bethsaida, and it was in those cities and in the vicinity that most of his mighty works were done.' Alas how changed — how fallen—how ruined! It is difficult to conceive a more gloomy desolation and utter ruin than has settled down upon these places. I inquired for the site of Chorazin and Bethsaida, and none could tell me where they stood! I climbed upon the fragment of a broken column, and looked inquiringly about me. Was this beautiful shore once ornamented with populous cities? Where now this oppressive silence reigns, was there once heard the hum of multitudes of voices and the tumult of gathering crowds? Why then has this utter ruin and desolation settled down upon the land? I opened my Bible, and the mystery was solved. 'Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not. Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee Bethsaida! for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago, in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.' And is this the spot upon which the fearful doom has fallen? How literally and remarkably the words of the Savior have been fulfilled! How, upon these extinct and ruined cities, these depopulated plains, he has written with his own hand the impressive lessons of his overruling providence, his certain and terrible judgments."

The discoveries in Egypt authenticate the writings of Moses and the utter destruction of Capernaum demonstrates the truthfulness of the Redeemer's predictions. Read these pieces with care. Explorations are constantly exhuming evidences that the Bible is true.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole writes to the London Academy in regard to M. Naville's discovery in Egypt:

"On reaching Cairo, M. Naville consulted with M. Maspero as to the best place for beginning exploration for our fund. M. Maspero recommended the mound called 'Tel-el-Maschuta,' which your readers will be aware is in the 'Wadi et-Tumilat,' on the line of the Sweet Water Canal, between Ismailia and Tel-el-Kebir. On this hint, M. Naville examined the few objects in the Boolak Museum which had been found on this spot. From these he learned that the sacred name of the place, as also that of its chief temple, was Pa tum or Pithom. This name was common to several towns, such as Heliopolis; but M. Naville, with a true archæological instinct, conjectured that an important Pithom in the position of Tel-el-Maschuta must be the city of that name built by the Israelites. This supposition encouraged him to attack Tel-el-Maschuta. His first results were disappointing. The site seemed, with its thick, crude brick walls, to reveal a fort rather than a town, and the sacred buildings did not appear to have covered a large area; yet it may be remembered that the Septuagint renders the 'treasure cities,' or better 'store-cities,' of Exod. i. 11 by 'strong cities.' The progress of excavation, however, soon led to results of which the historical importance cannot be exaggerated. I quote M. Naville's letter from Tel-el-Maschuta under date Feb. 12, 1883.

"I have a good piece of news to begin with. Tel-el-Maschuta is Pithom; or, in other words, the temple of Tum in the city or region of Thuku, which Dr. Brugsch has identified with Succoth. You remember that in one of my last letters I told you that it seemed to be very likely; now I can give it for certain from the inscription of a statue belonging to a priest of the temple. I consider it an important fact to have been able to establish the site of one of the Biblical cities.'

"The juxtaposition of Pithom and Succoth identifies the site beyond doubt. On referring to Dr. Brugsch's Dictionnaire geographique, it will be seen that Pithom was the sacred name, I would rather say temple-name, of 'Thuku, at the entrance of the East.' This special designation well describes the position in the Wadi et-Tumilat.

"The historical importance of Pithom is not limited to the identification with the strong city of Exod. i. 11. As Succoth, it fixes the site of the first encampment on the route of the exodus (Exod. xii. 37; xiii. 20), the starting-point being Rameses, the sister town (not the modern station of that name).

"Let us look for a moment at the consequences of this discovery. In the first place, we have found the very walls on which the enslaved Hebrews worked. We may reasonably hope soon to gain some positive evidence of the dates of the oppression and the exodus. Significant as is the determination of the site of any Bible city of remote age, the fixing of Succoth on the map is exceptionally important. It is the first step toward delineating the route of the exodus. We must bring down Dr. Brugsch's Land of Succoth some thirty miles to the south; and, though the rest of the journey to and from Succoth be still obscure, we have at least a fixed point, limiting this obscurity, and suggesting not mere hypotheses, but what the illustrious geographer of Egypt cries out for in his History—more exploration."

While the number and weight of authorities are in favor of Tell Hum as the site of Capernaum, the chief difficulty in regard to the place is the absence of any spring corresponding to the remarkable fountain of Capernaum, "a most fertile fountain," watering the country of Gennesaret, described by Josephus. The advocates of Capernaum at Khan Minyeh have claimed the group of springs at Tabighah, between Minyeh and Tell Hum, for this fountain. These springs are not in the Plain of Gennesaret, but by the lake-side to the north and separated from the "Gennesaret country" by a rocky promontory. Nevertheless, it has been fancied that the water of the principal Tabighah fountain was walled up in a reservoir of masonry and conveyed by an aqueduct, partly rock-cut, round the Minyeh cliff, and delivered upon the plain, for purposes of irrigation. This has been imagined, in face of the fact that there were already several good springs in and above the plain, which abundantly watered it, the Round Fountain, affording a supply which might be more readily employed for its irrigation, and the 'Ain et-Tin, at its side, admitting of being dammed up in like manner and to equal elevation; so that there was really no necessity for bringing in foreign sources, at the labor and cost of nearly a mile of aqueduct, partly hewn out of solid rock. At the recent visit of the two sons of the Prince of Wales to this country, special investigation was bestowed on the masonry of the Tabighah Springs, and the quest was made of any aqueduct leading thence to the plain of Gennesaret. The results would appear to settle the matter with even the partisans of Khan Minyeh. The total length of the rock-cut passage round the promontory is found to be four hundred and fifty feet, the width from four to six feet, and the depth of the channel in places about thirty feet; but in general not more than three to six feet on the lower side. The channel is not quite level at the bottom and descends at both ends in a slope of about one-fourth of a degree from horizontal. To the northeast a paved path continues from the cut, leading down to the shore of the lake. There are no remains of cement on the sides or the bed of the channel, as would be expected in an aqueduct, such cement often remaining almost perfect in water-channels older than the work at Minyeh. The same northeast end of this channel, more than half a mile from the springs, stands ten or twenty feet above the top of the reservoir of Birket 'Ali, that of the chief fountain at Tabighah. Between the passage and this group of fountains there are no traces of any aqueduct, which would have to run on a wall or on piers of masonry of considerable height, and could never have existed without leaving some remains behind. Observation and search show that the rock-cut channel round the cliff and the Tabighah fountains had no uniting link, no connection whatever with one another. The conclusion was clear that the passage was intended for a road, to avoid the necessity of climbing over the promontory, the cutting of which saved an ascent of more than two hundred feet, without which there was no possibility of rounding the cliff, jutting out as it does into the lake. Rock-cut aqueducts generally are much narrower than this roadway, having a width of only about two feet on an average. Moreover, the character of the masonry at the fountains is wholly modern. The spring-head is enclosed in a circular tower, about fifteen feet high, whence it was originally conducted to a polygonal pool, Birket 'Ali, built against the face of the cliff and enclosing another spring; but now, the water-tower having become undermined, the stream flows through a breach at the base of the wall, running away from the Birket to a dam more recent still, from which it is conveyed, by an aqueduct of late construction, to a native mill, working close to the border of the lake. The walls of the octagonal reservoir, Birket 'Ali, are built of small stones of basalt, and, with the mortar employed, are now, rather than old. A double channel leads from the reservoir to a pair of double shafts, which evidently formed sheets for a small mill, now destroyed. The plain purpose for which the pool was constructed was to obtain a head of water for such a mill, and there is no reason to suppose that any aqueduct other than that leading to its mill ever existed. The descendants of Dhahr el 'Amr, the famous Galilean chief, through his son, 'Ali, claim that the Tabighah mills were built by their family, bearing the name of the son to this day; and their work corroborates their claim, being, to all appearance, Arabic in character. There is no indication going to show that these springs were ever dammed up to a level higher than that of the present reservoir, which does not reach the elevation of the rock-cut passage at any time, much less at a period so remote as that of the Christian era. No traces of antiquity were discoverable anywhere. The conclusion is inevitable that the water of the Tabighah fountains was never used to irrigate the plain of Gennesaret and that these springs are not the fountain of Capernaum mentioned by Josephus.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 7.

THE TOMBS OF THE HOLY CITY.

"But we must wander witheringly
In other lands to die;
And where our father's ashes be,
Our own may never lie."

So may the poor Jew now sadly sing as he wanders, a despised and persecuted outcast, among the desolations of the once proud capital of his ancestors. Wherever he turns his eyes—on Zion, Moriah, Olivet—he is reminded by rock-hewn monument and yawning cave, that Jerusalem is not only his holy city, but that the ashes of his ancestors are there; that it is, as the captive says in Babylon, "the place of my fathers' sepulchres." Neh. ii. 3. The tombs are among the most interesting monuments of Jerusalem. The temple "hath not left one stone;" the palaces of Solomon and Herod have long since crumbled to dust: the Jerusalem of the prophets and apostles "became heaps" (Jer. ix. 11) centuries ago, but the tombs remain almost as perfect as when the princes of Israel were there laid "in glory, every one in his own house." Isa. xiv. 18. I was sadly disappointed when, after days and weeks of careful and toilsome research, I could only discover a very few authentic vestiges of "the city of the Great King;"—a few fragments of the colossal wall that enclosed the temple courts; a few broken shafts here and there in the lanes, or protruding from some noisome rubbish heap; a few remnants of the fortifications that once defended Zion. All besides is gone; buried deep, deep beneath modern dwellings.

When excavating for the foundation of the English Church, portions of the old houses and aqueducts of Zion were found nearly forty feet below the present surface! We need not wonder that the identification of the particular buildings of primitive ages is now so difficult; and that even the position of the valleys which once divided the quarters of the city, has come to be the subject of keen controversy among antiquarians. The city of Herod was built on the ruins of the city of Solomon; the city of the Crusaders was built on the ruins of that of Herod; and modern Jerusalem is founded on the ruins of them all. Hills and cliffs have been rounded off; ravines have been filled up; palaces and fortresses have been overthrown, and their very ruins have been covered over with the rubbish of millenniums. Could David revisit his royal capital, or could Herod come back to the scene of his magnificence and his crimes, or could Godfrey rise from his tomb, so complete has been the desolation, so great the change even in the features of the site, that I believe they would find as much difficulty in settling topographical details as modern scholars do.

Nothing but excavation can settle satisfactorily and finally the vexed questions of Jerusalem's topography. A week's work in trenches would do more to solve existing mysteries than scores of volumes and years of learned research. It may well excite the wonder of Biblical scholars, that while the mounds of Assyria, and Babylonia, and Chaldea, have been excavated at enormous cost, not a shilling has been expended upon the Holy City. By judicious excavation, under the direction of an accomplished antiquarian, the lines of the ancient walls, the sites of the great buildings, the sepulchres of the kings, and the beds of the valleys, might all be traced. A flood of light would thus be shed upon one of the most interesting departments of Biblical topography; and who can tell what precious treasures of ancient art might be discovered? Will no man of influence and wealth in our country undertake this work? Will no learned society contribute of its funds to carry it out? Will not our beloved Prince, who has already rendered such signal service at Hebron, render a still greater service to Biblical knowledge, by encouraging such an enterprise?

It is pleasant to think that amid ruin and confusion there are still some monuments left in and around the Holy City, as connecting links between the present and the distant past. The sepulchres of the Jewish nobles remain though their palaces are gone. We can see where they were buried, if we cannot see where they lived. I could not describe with what intense emotion I heard my friends speak familiarly of the tombs of David and Absalom, of the Judges, the kings, and the prophets; and what was the excited state of my feelings when they proposed one bright morning a walk to Tophet and Aceldama. Some of these names may be, and doubtless are, apocryphal; none of them may be able to stand the test of full historic investigation; but the high antiquity of the monuments themselves cannot be denied; and an inspection of them is alike interesting and instructive, from the light they throw upon the customs of God's ancient people, and from the illustrations they afford of many passages in God's Word.

JEWISH TOMBS.

The earliest burial-places on record were caves. When Sarah died, Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah, and buried her there. Samuel is said to have been buried "in his house at Ramah," 1 Sam. xxv. 1; by which, I believe, is meant the tomb he had excavated for himself there, for the Hebrew word Beth, "house," is sometimes used to signify tomb, as in Isa. xiv. 18, and Eccles. xii. 5, "Man goeth to his long home," literally "to his eternal house." We read, moreover, of King Asa, that "they buried him in his own sepulchre which he had digged for himself in the city of David." 2 Chron. xvi. 14. Elisha was buried in a cave, 2 Kings xiii 21; the sepulchre of Lazarus was a cave, John xi. 38; and the Holy Sepulchre was a new cave which Joseph of Arimathea had "hewn out in the rock" for himself, Matt. xxvii. 60.

In our own land we are all familiar with the grassy mounds and marble monuments which fill the cemeteries, and which pass away almost as quickly as man himself. In Rome and Pompeii we see the habitations of the dead lining the great highways, and crumbling to ruin like the palaces of their tenants. But the moment we set our feet on the shores of Palestine, we feel that we are in an ancient country—the home of a primeval people, whose tombs appear in cliff and glen, and mountain-side, all hewn in the living rock, and permanent as the rock itself. The tombs of Jerusalem are rock-hewn caves. I found them in every direction. Wherever the face of a crag affords space for an architectural facade, or a projecting rock a fitting place for excavation, there is sure to be a sepulchre. I visited them on Olivet and Scopus, on Zion and Moriah, inside the modern city and outside; but they chiefly abound in the rocky banks of Hinnom and the Kidron. Near the junction of these ravines, the overhanging cliffs are actually honeycombed. Hundreds of dark openings were in view when I stood beside En-Rogel. Some of these tombs are small grottoes, with only one or two receptacles for bodies; others are of great extent, containing chambers, galleries, passages, and loculi, almost without number, each tomb forming a little necropolis. The doors are low and narrow, so as to be shut by a single slab. This slab was called golal, that is, "a thing rolled," from the fact that it was rolled back from the opening in a groove made for it. The stone being heavy, and the groove generally inclining upwards, the operation of opening required a considerable exertion of strength. Hence the anxious inquiry of the two Marys, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" Mark xvi. 3. The stone always fitted closely, and could easily be sealed with one of those large signets such as were then in use. Or perhaps the Holy Sepulchre may have had a wedge, or small bar, pushed into the rock behind it, like that at the tombs of the kings (described below), and preventing the stone from being rolled back. To this the seal might be attached (Matt. xxvii 66). The facades of many are elaborately ornamented, but one thing is very remarkable, they contain no inscriptions. The tombs of Egypt are covered with hieroglyphics, giving long histories of the dead, and of the honors paid to their remains. The tombs of Palmyra not only have written tablets over the entrances; but every separate niche, or loculus in the interior has its inscription. I have counted more than fifty such in a single mausoleum; yet I have never been able to discover a single letter in one of the tombs of the Holy City, nor a single painting, sculpture, or carving on any ancient Jewish tomb in Palestine, calculated to throw light on the story, name, or rank of the dead.

Simplicity and security appear to have been the only things the Jews aimed at in the construction of their sepulchres. To be buried with their fathers was their only ambition. They seem to have had no desire to transmit their names to posterity through the agency of their graves. It has been well said that the words, "Let me bury my dead out of my sight," "No man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day"—express, if not the general feeling of the Jewish nation, at least the general spirit of the Old Testament. With the Jews the tomb was an unclean place, which men endeavored to avoid rather than honor by pilgrimages. The homage paid to them is of late date, and the offspring of a corrupt age. When near relatives died it was, as it still is, customary for females to go and weep at their graves, as Martha and Mary did at the grave of Lazarus; but the dead were soon forgotten, and except in the case of a few patriarchs, kings (Acts vii. 16; ii. 29), and prophets (Matt. xxiii. 29), we have no record of tombs having been even held in remembrance.

There were always a few in every age who coveted outward show and splendor in their tombs, as well as in their houses. Such was the upstart Shebna, whose vanity and pretention the prophet Isaiah describes and denounces: "What hast thou here, and whom hast thou here, that thou hast hewn thee out a sepulchre here, as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock?" xxii. 16. It is evident that the greater part of the ornamental facades, and architectural tombs, are of a late date, and not purely Jewish.

JEWISH MODE OF BURIAL.

The Jews used no coffins or sarcophagi. The body was washed (Acts ix. 37), anointed (Mark xvi. 1; John xix. 40), wrapped in linen cloths (John xix. 40; xi. 44), and laid in the niche prepared for it—an excavation about two feet wide, three high, and six deep, opening endwise in the side of the rock-chamber. The mouth of the loculus was then shut by a slab of stone, and sealed with cement. In some cases the bodies were laid on a kind of open shelf, such as I have seen in many of the chambers. It was thus that our Lord was laid, for John tells us that Mary "stooped down into the sepulchre, and seeth two angels, the one at the head and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain." xx. 21.

The kings of Israel were buried with more pomp. In addition to the anointing of the sweet spices, "burnings" were made for them. Thus Jeremiah says to Zedekiah: "Thou shalt die in peace, and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn for thee." And in the case of Asa we are told there was "a great burning." (2 Chron. xvi. 14). It is not meant that the bodies were burned, but that sweet spices and perfumes were burned in honor of them, and probably in their sepulchres. The bodies of Saul and Jonathan are the only ones which we read of as having been burned. 1 Sam. xxxi. 11-13.—J. L. Porter, A. M.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SAFEGUARD—No. 2.

The doctrine of the second personal coming and reign of Jesus Christ on the earth is purely one of revelation. No person could have conceived such a thing without direct instruction from God. Hence he who entertains the doctrine must be of necessity a believer both in God and in a Divine revelation to man of his will and purposes. It can be seen at once, therefore, how faithfulness to this doctrine becomes a safeguard against infidelity and atheism. But it will be replied that there are great numbers of people who believe in God and the Bible who reject the doctrine in question; how is this special doctrine therefore a safeguard above a general belief in God and the Bible common to the Christian world? This we will try to show. It will be observed then that this truth is to be a guard and antidote against unbelief in a time of peculiar peril and strain upon the faith and faithfulness of man. A general belief may suffice to meet any ordinary demands of the many, for, when belief is general and popular it requires no special moral or spiritual strength to profess faith in God; but when unbelief rolls in like a flood they alone who are rooted and grounded upon the Rock can withstand its fury. If, therefore, we can show that there is peculiar power in this truth to meet the unusual strain of a particularly dangerous epoch we shall have answered the enquirer.

Now the doctrine in question is not only a matter of revelation, but is the result of the plain, literal rule of interpretation of the Word. The doctrine is not drawn from the Bible by labored and far-fetched arguments, by spiritualizations of the Word, by tropes, and figures, and parables; but it stands out in startling prominence, it lies upon the surface as it were and greets the enquirer from every page. The plain, literal, direct oft-repeated declarations of the Word teach the doctrine so unmistakably that it is only by doing violence to the text, and by resorting to figurative interpretations, which are fully tantamount to a denial of the word that it can be evaded. "If I go away I will come again." "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself." "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "He that testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly." "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." "Behold I come quickly, hold that fast which thou hast, let no man take thy crown." These are a few of the many plain statements of the truth of the personal coming of Christ and the manner of it, to be found in the New Testament, and the unprejudiced reader can see that to deny the doctrine which they plainly teach, is to deny the Word and boldly to join the infidel hosts; and to attempt to evade it by any figurative or spiritual method of interpretation, introduces such a vicious and confusing element into the study of the Bible, that it may be made to teach anything one chooses, and all confidence in its declarations is speedily destroyed, so that the infidel harbor is reached as surely as before, or by a more roundabout way.

Again, a plain literal acceptance of the word of prophecy of the Old Testament as clearly teaches the doctrine of his coming and kingdom as do the declarations of the New. The real literal man Christ Jesus as an historical personage whose history is to be found in the New Testament, and who is yet to personally return to this earth and reign over Israel and the Gentile nations, is the central figure of both the Old and New Testament. The truth concerning him is the one golden chain that runs through the whole Bible and makes it a connected and harmonious whole.

But that truth cannot be reached, except by accepting the Bible as a plain literal book, which says what it means and means what it says, while he who thus trusts in the Word of God, is compelled to accept the truth in this matter if he honestly gives it an investigation. Now it passes without saying it, that such a firm hold upon the Bible, as this gives one, cannot be easily shaken off. None know, or can know, how solid the foundation feels under the feet when once they are planted upon a plain "thus saith the Lord," until he finds his feet planted securely there. Now in contrast with this source of the confidence and security of the believer, observe the uncertainty and doubt that must, from the very nature of the case, rest upon every figurative interpretation of the word. If we may trust the literal word, we are sure of our footing, but when we depart from the literal rule without evident reason and necessity, we are at once left at sea; all is confusion, all is doubt and uncertainty; opinion at once takes the place of a "thus saith the Lord," and amid the conflict of opinions it is no wonder that multitudes are shipwrecked and go to swell the ranks of the sceptic.

Yet the arrogant demands of many modern scientific atheists have led the accommodating ecclesiastic, who only has a general, indefinite belief about God and the Bible to adapt his method of interpretation of the word to their ever varying requirements. At the demand of a false geological theory, the simple and majestic account of the creation of the world must be modeled and remodeled until it wholly disappears in a myth. At the arrogant dictum of evolution the philosophical and truthful account of man's origin, must undergo change after change until through monkey, tadpole, and monad, man descends lower and lower, till he and his Creator are both lost in an infinitesimal drop of quivering jelly, floating in a self-formed ocean in a self-created world, hustling without direction or control through a self-originated universe. Thus at the demand of the mythical philosophy, the Bible and its teaching are rendered uncertain, vacatory, and lifeless, and finally are thrust aside altogether as useless rubbish. The only thing that can preserve faith in the Bible, as the very word of God is the return to the literal rule of interpretation and to its personal God, its personal Christ and his personal reign.

But again, the literal rule of interpretation compels us to receive the Bible doctrine of the moral nature of man, of his unconsciousness in death, of the final destruction of the ungodly, and of the conditionality of future life. It forces us to look upon Jesus Christ as the God-appointed giver of immortality, and compels us to look forward to his return for a resurrection from the death state and the enjoyment of the incorruptible life he will then bestow. Thus we are united by faith to a personal, just, wise, and loving Father, and to a real living, and sympathetic Savior, who is at once our elder Brother and our Lord and Master, whose return we long for with ever increasing intensity as the period of the grand consummation of all his promises and our hopes. Our faith thus assumes a lively, active, energizing quality that is a sure antidote to the doubts which lead to unbelief and atheism; and by it we are "kept" from, or out of (ek) the time of trial that shipwrecks the multitude around us.

If now we drop the "anticipation" of his coming and kingdom, and with it the literal rule of interpretation, we are again left in a maze of doubts and uncertainty in regard to man's nature, the destiny of the wicked, the time, place, and nature of the reward of the righteous, and all questions pertaining to a future life. If, for example, when the Psalmist says, "All the wicked will God destroy," he does not mean to be understood literally, the door is at once open for a flood of human opinions and conjectures as to what he does mean, which generally ends in unbelief. Thus amid the confusion of ideas and opinions on all these questions, faith always hangs in doubt and is in constant danger of annihilation.

Again the doctrine of the return and reign of Jesus over the tribes of Israel, and the subject nations, requires their restoration to the promised land. Now it is in opposition to this very order of events, that the antichrist is developed. The xix. chap. of Revelations represents the Christ upon a white horse, followed by all his hosts upon white horses, and shows the beast and his armies, fully developed and arrayed in battle against the Christ and his army. It is the culminating scene of a long contest and ends with the overthrow and destruction of the antichrist, by the lake of fire. It is scarcely necessary to do more than call the attention of the Bible student to the fact that this scene is the same as that presented by Ezekiel in the xxxviiith and xxxixth chapters, where the great struggle takes place between Gog and his confederates upon the one side, and Israel and her British allies on the other. To prevent the establishment of the kingdom of Israel is the immediate ground of the contest and ends in the supernatural destruction of all the enemies of Israel and of God by the personal return of Christ in power. Now it is manifest that any one, instructed in the coming and kingdom of Christ, will be proof against the pretensions of antichrist.

He who is looking for the exaltation of Israel, will not join the enemies of Israel. He who expects the personal return of Christ to overthrow the antichrist and establish the kingdom, will not be found in the atheistic multitude who follow him to destruction. Thus to the most practical and effectual manner "keeping the doctrine of his expectation," proves a safeguard against the "time of trial" through which all must pass. Thus Jesus keeps his promise to his faithful people, and they are delivered through their own faithfulness.

I feel that I have but very briefly, and in an exceedingly imperfect and crude manner pointed out but the germs of some very important and cheering truths, but must for the present be contented with the work I have been able to do and leave to abler pens the full discussion of the theme.

All Things Beautiful.

JOHN KEBLE.

All things bright and beautiful,
All creatures great and small,
All things wise and wonderful,
The Lord God made them all.

Each little flower that opens,
Each little bird that sings—
He made their glowing colors,
He made their tiny wings.

The purple-headed mountain,
The river running by,
The morning, and the sunset,
That lighteth up the sky.

The tall trees in the greenwood,
The pleasant summer sun,
The ripened fruits in the garden,
He made them every one.

He gave us eyes to see them,
And lips that we might tell,
How great is God Almighty,
Who hath made all things well.

The Nightingale's Last Song.

Says the Hartford Times—"During the last eight years, Mrs. Bennett, of Canaan, this state, has owned a beautiful Virginia nightingale. She named it Bob, and when in an adjoining room she said, 'Bob, do you want a fly?' the bird would ruffle its feathers and respond with a whistle or some little note, manifesting his delight, which his mistress understood.

Last August Bob had a fit, he rolled over on his back and stuck up his legs. His mistress was alarmed. She soaked his feet in warm water, gave him pepper-corns and little aconite pills. He revived a little, sitting upon his perch solemnly and stupidly. His plumage was not so smooth as formerly. His sweet notes no longer charmed the household. Not a note escaped his throat for three months. Old age had mastered Bob, and pepper-corns could not rouse him to the singing pitch.

One day in November, after three months of sickness and silence, Bob suddenly broke out in full tune, and he sang his old notes over again. Mrs. Bennett says in his best estate the bird never sang more sweetly nor cheerily. Full, musical, and lively was every note; and she was delighted at what appeared to be a complete recovery of her pet bird. But the moment he had finished the last of his round of notes beautifully and sweetly Bob turned over upon his back and died."

Jesus Whispering.

"What is conscience?" said a Sunday School teacher one day to the little flock that gathered around to learn the words of life.

Several of the children answered—one saying one thing, and another another until a little timid child spoke out;—

"It is Jesus whispering in our hearts."

Does Jesus whisper in your heart? When you do right, does he approve? When you do wrong, does he rebuke? Does he make your heart sad when you have sinned, and happy when you have done rightly? Be thankful, then, for this, and remember always to heed the Savior's whisper, and study his word, and pray to know his will, and then you will be safely guided to your heavenly home at last.—Golden Censer.

A Garden for the Children.

Let the children have a garden of their own, and encourage them to take such measures as will be sure to give satisfying results. Children love flowers, and they take the finest pleasure in giving of their own to friends, and especially to the sick or grieving.

The London Gazette prints a touching account of the unfortunate little Dauphin of France, son of Louis XVI. and Mary Antoinette, getting up early summer mornings in order to cut the sweetest and best flowers from his own parterre to present to his mother; and taking delight in concealing himself in the bed-curtains to see the gratified smile with which the queen opened her eyes upon them. He would labor with all his tiny strength to keep up the supply, and if the officials begged him to let the gardener do the work, he would entreat to be allowed to go on, because his mamma liked the flowers so well that he raised and carried to her, all himself."

Prince Albert used to encourage the little princesses to cultivate not only flowers, but fruits and vegetables in plots allotted to each; and a convenient little kitchen was fitted up near in which they cooked and prepared the products of their ground. These daughters are now known all over the world for their virtues and amenities. They are a pleasing contrast to scions of the same family of a former time, and shining examples of what good education (not of books alone) can accomplish in one generation.

The kindergarten should be more than a garden in which children are merely the plants to be cultivated. If they are also made cultivators in a real garden of the beautiful and useful, among plants, they will derive from it more of good, and capacity for doing good than all the books and desks in the world can alone supply.

The Aurora Borealis.

A recent letter, in one of the daily papers, referring to the Aurora Borealis, states that the phenomenon was not observed in England until the year 1716, and calls upon philosophers to show why it should first have appeared in that year.

In order to answer this demand, it is not necessary to be a philosopher, nor, indeed, to have access to other sources of information than ordinary history. As a matter of fact, numerous appearances of the Aurora were recorded in England long before the year 1716, the earliest mentioned having been witnessed in London in the year 1560. This apparition, as described by contemporary observers, presented the appearance of burning spears. Other manifestations occurred on October 7th, 1564, and November 14th and 15th, 1574; while in the neighboring continental countries they were witnessed in great splendor in 1575, 1580, 1581, and 1621. It was the phenomenon of 1621 which received from Gassendi the French meteorologist, the name of Aurora Borealis, and, so far as history goes, colored the Auroral exhibitions of the 17th century. For a period of 86 years following—until the year 1707—there is no mention of any such display.

In November of the latter year a small one was observed in England, and during that and the following year it appeared five times. The great Aurora of 1716, recorded by Halley, was supposed by the people to signalize the introduction into England of the Brunswick princes.

The history of the Aurora, however, does not begin with its manifestations in England. It has been observed from the earliest ages, and in heathen countries was not unnaturally supposed to presage calamity or war. Bove's Catalogue published in Germany, gives an extensive catalogue of its manifestations, dating from 500 B.C. Even Job, if we may rely upon a version of the Bible published in London in 1630, was not unfamiliar with its appearance. "The brightness cometh out of the north" the Patriarch declares (Job 37, 22); the praise to God which is terrible. Pliny testifies to its appearance anterior to the Christian era. "We sometimes see," he says, "—than which there is no presage of woe more calamitous to the human race—a flame in the sky, which seems to descend to the earth in showers of blood, as happened in the 3d year of the 107th Olympiad when Philip was endeavoring to subjugate Greece." It is also mentioned by Pliny that about the year 641 A. U. C. a light shone through the night as bright as day, and that it was not uncommon about that time to see the heavens on fire.

About 400 A. D. it is recorded that columns were seen suspended in the sky for three days and that a fire burned behind a cloud which was terrible for its splendor. Gregory of Tours alludes to a display that was observed in 585; while in the old Irish annals the phenomenon was described as a shower of blood, and is frequently associated with some battle or the murder of a great chief, the earliest mention being in 688, after a battle between Leinster and Munster. It was also observed at Edessa in the year 502, and in Syria in 1097, 1098, and 1117. In 1583 it is stated that a company of 800 or 900 pilgrims appeared in Paris to present gifts and ask prayers on account of signs seen in the heaven and fire in the air.

Various theories have been advanced to account for the phenomenon, from the superstitious notions of the ancients to the remarkable opinion of the late Mr. Merriam—known as the Sage of Brooklyn—who held that they were the result of volcanic eruptions, and composed of threads like the silken warp of a web. This philosopher described the Aurora by the poetic title, "The Silkery of the Skies," and declared that he once obtained a small piece, which he preserved. Others have maintained that the light is caused by clouds of ferruginous meteoric dust, which is ignited by friction with the atmosphere; but the most generally received opinion is that the Aurora is some sort of electrical discharge. This view is confirmed by the marked disturbances in the direction and force of terrestrial magnetism during the auroral exhibition, though it is still uncertain whether the magnetic disturbance causes the electrical phenomena, or vice versa.—N. Y. Observer.

CHRIST AND THE CLOUDS.

WILLIAM CROSWELL.

I mused; look above and see
Yon high-piled pillowy mass
Of burning clouds, so swimmingly,
In gold and purple pass,
And think not, Lord, how thou wast seen
On Israel's desert way
Before them, in thy shadowy screen,
Pavilioned all the day!

Or of those robes of gorgeous hue,
Which the Redeemer wore,
When ravished from his followers' view,
Aloft his flight he bore;
When lifted, as on mighty wing,
He curtained his ascent,
And wrapped in clouds, went triumphing
Above the firmament.

Is it a thrill of that same joy
Of many-colored dyes,
That high above, o'ermantling all
Hangs midway down the skies—
Or borders of those sweeping folds
Which shall be all unfurled
About the Savior, when he holds
His judgment on the world?

For in like manner as he went—
My soul, hast thou forgot
Shall be his terrible descent,
When man expecteth not!
Strength, Son of man, against that hour,
Be to our spirits given,
When thou shalt come again with power,
Upon the clouds of heaven!

THE LEGAL CHARACTER OF THE RESTITUTION AGE.

The legal character of the millennium is more pronounced than that of any former age. In past ages the world has not been blessed with a divine law. True, there have been instances of an enunciation of law, but always limited in its jurisdiction. Law implies a penalty. Where law has been divinely promulgated, penalty may justly be inflicted; but "where there is no law sin is not imputed."

LAW GAME BY MOSES.

Paul states that from Adam unto Moses none sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression, i. e. directly against a divine command; hence in this period of over two thousand years there was no law. The two millenniums following witnessed the presence of a divine law to which the Jewish nation alone was accountable—the populous nations of the earth remaining wholly beyond the jurisdiction of its requirements. The fifth and sixth millenniums of human history have their divine code of laws given by Christ—laws which are fully as imperative as the Mosaic—yet the responsibility of the world to this law has never been universal, but limited to the extent of its publication. To the question, How full an acquaintance with Christ's law is necessary to accountability? the enlightened conscience of the individual gives perhaps the better reply. Surely it would be highly presumptuous for one even to suggest the idea of unaccountability to a person who has the Scripture testimony, and with whom we may plead in Christ's name, "Be ye reconciled to God."

Without in the least seeming to approve the chronological schemes intended to determine the exact date of the commencement of the millennium, we emphasize the fact that we believe that that blessed era is soon to be ushered in. The dawn of the morning certainly is near. The day which follows earth's long, dark night of weeping, now lights up the horizon, and in the east evident tokens of light appear.

ALL NATIONS WILL ARISE.

Of this and past ages the prophet speaks when he says, "Darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people." Indeed the largest portion of humanity have never been enlightened by the lamp of prophecy nor the light of divine law. Nor might we hope anything for them but the deep silence of the tomb, were it not for the favor of Christ who will as the "Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his beams." "Unto them that sat in darkness light has sprung up." He who created them in their frailty, has redeemed them by his power. The death of the Son of God constituted him "Lord both of the living and the dead;" and his elevation on that cross, stained with his life blood, unlocks the portals of hades, and draws all men unto him. He tasted death for every man, redeemed—brought back to life—all humanity, thus becoming the "Savior of all men," and "will have all men to be saved" (i. e. saved from the Adamic death) and come to the knowledge of the truth; for as by Adam all die, so also by Christ shall all be made alive.

According to the Abrahamic promise Christ is that seed which is to bless all nations. To accomplish this purpose it was necessary that he should obtain the keys of hades, that he might liberate the captives confined in the tomb. By his own entrance into the land of the enemy he obtained these keys, and returning to the land of the living, acquired the power to "Destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Having the keys of death and of hades, he may well triumphantly exclaim; "he shall open and none shall shut; and he shall shut and none shall open."

IN THE REGENERATION.

The restoring of life to the Adamic race is a principal feature in the "restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets." This is a regeneration of earth's myriads. The "times of restitution" are the thousand years of the millennial age, and the regenesis—the new birth of the nations from the grave—occurs within a few days after the new era commencement. "After two days he will revive us, in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." This determines the third day of the millennial age to be the national resurrection day. "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye shall sit on thrones."

The regeneration of mankind is clearly stated in the New Testament, and no less definitely predicted in the Old. Ezek. xxxvii. and xvi. declare the resurrection of Israel, Samaria and Sodom. Jeremiah shows the restitution of Persia, Moab and Ammon. Isaiah predicts the restoration of Egypt, Assyria, Chaldea and other nations. Further the divine testimony is that "All nations which thou hast made shall come and worship before thee," and "My house shall be called a house of prayer for all people."

A NEW EARTH.

The regenesis of the people demands also a regenesis of the cursed earth itself. This event God guarantees. Some to whom the restitution is a precious theme, unwisely neglect the promises which so benignly declare that the earth shall be subjected to the skillful remodeling power of the divine architect. Why anticipate a regeneration less grand than the word of God literally predicts? The sublime words of Isa. lxv. 17, should be indelibly written on the heart of every Christian as it was on that of the apostle, who said, "According to his promise we look for new heavens and a new earth." How inspiring are the words "Behold I create new heavens and a new earth."

Associated with the renewed population of the renewed earth, there will be a renewed Royalty. The saints, raised immortal and incorruptible, like Christ the first-born from the dead, will jointly with him occupy the throne. These rise in the first resurrection; the nations in the second; while the incorrigibly wicked will live again by the third, at the end of the age. What a high calling is heralded to us, that we should share in such glory with our Redeemer! "He that overcometh, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron."

A ROD OF IRON.

Christ has selected this metaphor to appropriately set forth the inflexible character of this sovereignty. The millennial kingdom—or government of the world in the restitution age—is no child's play with sin. The legal character of the age is as rigid as iron. The execution of the law being in the hands of kings who can unerringly discern the thoughts and intents of the heart, the iron hand of justice never strikes an uncertain blow. This divine qualification of the rulers enables them to infallibly distinguish the grades of criminality, so that the priestly and pardoning power may be judiciously exercised. Sin in the millennium loses none of its hideous deformity. Persisted in—death is the consequence. Of those on whom it is inflicted in that age it is plainly written, "They are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." And again, "They shall be as though they had not been."

AN HONORABLE LAW.

God establishes a universal law—a law affecting all people. "Many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go to the house of the God of Israel, and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths. For the law shall go forth of Zion, and he shall judge among many people."

Thus it will be seen that God "will magnify the law and make it honorable," "he will not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth." Since "where there is no law sin is not imputed," it follows that where there is law sin is accounted to the transgressor. An ecclesiastical law is one which is properly carried out; and such a law becomes honorable in the sight of all, since an ineffective law, dishonored by violation, cannot command respect. God's law in the ultimate will be honorable. "The vile person shall no more be called liberal, for the vile person will speak villainy, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and utter error against the Lord," but those hypocritical acts of villainy are not concealed to the scrutiny of the reigning saints.

Death, in the millennium, results from individual persistence in sin until the character of the person becomes obdurate to repentant action. Habit is an iron vice, not only with regard to innocent matters, but also in relation to sin. Continuance in sin, in the restitution age, develops a fixed vicious character—and forbearance with the hardened sinner is there limited to a period of one hundred years. In this interval character becomes absolutely fixed, and further time for repentance is useless and is denied by God's law—"the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." A century is the limit of possible salvation. Its termination is the death-line Christ will pardon the penitent, but the incorrigible will receive extermination judgment after patient warning. This is just.

THE NEW TEMPLE.

Ezekiel is directly referring to the age to come when he predicts, "They that walk in my statutes and do them, they shall be my people, and I will be their God; but as for those whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things, I will recompense their way upon their own head." In the ordinances of the new temple which he so minutely describes, there is a full recognition of the presence of sin in the future age. The daily sacrifice of the "sin-offering"—what does it directly indicate? The law of the sanctuary further states that "No stranger uncircumcised in heart shall enter my sanctuary." Then persons uncircumcised in heart—disobedient to God's will—are there to be debarred from sacred precincts.

Jeremiah writes, "In those days they shall say no more. The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge, but every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that eateth a sour grape his teeth shall be set on edge." Death occurs now in consequence of Adam's sin—his transgression developed mortality, and his descendants inherit death. Our father ate a sour grape—the forbidden fruit—and our teeth are set on edge. "Through the offense of one many be dead." This effect of Adam's sin does not exist in the restitution. The second Adam, Christ, died that he might reverse this decree of entailed death, and by the resurrection of the nations who have died for Adam's sin, place them on the earth in an independent responsible capacity. When thus restored they stand on their own merits. They will never die if they never commit an unpardonable sin; but if they persist in sin they will set only their own teeth on edge—and death they secure to themselves alone—an everlasting loss of life.

In the millennium "It shall come to pass that whosoever will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among his people. This prediction of Moses concerning Christ applies only to the age to come, and, in harmony with all Scripture, shows that the penalty of death will there be rigidly carried out against sinners. "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish: yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Such positive threatening as this would be quite inappropriate if the nations were not capable of disobedience.

GEHENNA.

Why so positively is death inflicted on wicked persons that particular emphasis is placed on the fact of their execution, by exposing their dead bodies to the view of all people—evidently as an admonition of the fearful consequences of rebellion and sin. Isaiah distinctly says that "From one Sabbath to another shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord; and they (the continual throng of worshippers who visit the temple at Jerusalem) shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of men that have transgressed against me, and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh." Not only so, but this spectacle is not an isolated circumstance, but a scene made continuous by repeated executions, the bodies of the victims being cast into the valley of Gehenna, where the fire, worms and corruption prey on the carcasses till they disappear, while others supply their places. "Their worm shall not die neither shall their fire be quenched" shows that food and fuel for the continuance of the worm and fire is occasionally added.

A more conspicuous and terrible example of divine wrath against sinners can hardly be paralleled, and while it manifests a degree of severity, its punitive character will fairly warn the beholders of the justice of Christ, and the exceeding sinfulness of sin. No wonder the throng who witness the carcasses in Gehenna will abhor the sight. The very description of this scene arouses our abhorrence of the place. Our Savior warns of this very judgment, verifying the truth of Isaiah's prediction.

THE DESTRUCTION OF GOG.

Passing now from the evidences of the general legal character of the restitution age, it may be proper in this connection to review some of the leading features of the millennium and allude to a few positive judgments therein, wherein death is inflicted on large masses of individuals, and persons in a collective capacity. Several such instances are predicted, emphasizing, if indeed emphasis were possible, what has already been adduced.

In the earlier years of the millennium several nations combined to destroy the Jewish nation in the battle of Gog and Magog. Ezek. xxxviii. This circumstance discloses the fact that the disposition to evil still remains in the human heart after the national resurrection. Many Israelites had returned from among the Gentiles and rebuilt their city. This colony had thrived and reached an envious degree of prosperity. Gog, the most powerful Gentile ruler, views with jealousy their increasing wealth and power, and enlists an army of Gentiles, instinct with their ancient hatred of the Jew, who march against Jerusalem and cover Palestine like a cloud—so numerous are their legions.

This combat is designed by God for a wise purpose. Gog succeeds to a certain extent. "The city shall be taken, the women ravished and the houses rifled, and half the city shall go forth" captives to Gog. "It shall come to pass that in the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die." This is a remarkable circumstance—two-thirds of the children of Israel are destroyed! Though God had raised the "whole house of Israel" from their graves, their resurrection, we see, does not at all necessitate a perpetual life for all. God exercises his right to purge out the dross from among his people, many of whom sinned against strong light in the former times of Israel's kingdom.

A PARALLEL.

When Israel was liberated from Egyptian bondage, every "hoof" came out, but this universal deliverance of the nation did not guarantee their entrance into Canaan. Not less than a million of their carcasses fell in the wilderness in the forty years. So in the restitution—God raises all Israel, but afterwards, using Gog's army as a means, he weeds out many who are morally ripe for destruction, that their presence in the peaceful era of the millennium may not mar its peace. Referring to this judgment, God says, "I will gather you and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted as silver is melted in the midst of the furnace." Ezek. xxii. 21, 22. "And I will bring the third part through the fire and will refine them as silver is refined."

When Israel is reduced to two-thirds of the number who had returned to their land (though this is not two-thirds of all Israel, since many in the different countries had not returned with this first colony which Gog attacks) then Christ and his saints appear for their protection, and the refining process is transferred from Israel to the Gentiles, the dross of whom are seen in the army of Gog. The army is wholly annihilated. "This is the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that fought against Jerusalem: Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their sockets." This describes a terrible infliction—not unjust but characteristic of the times of restitution, when nations will be ruled with an iron sceptre.

AN IMMENSE GRAVEYARD.

The slaughter of this multitude in the vicinity of Jerusalem imposes a great task on the Jews, who are under the necessity of burying the slain. A large grave-yard is set apart for their tombs, and it is named Hamon-gog. Certain men are appointed whose special business is to undertake this work. "Seven months shall the house of Israel be burying them." The Psalmist alludes to this breaking of the nations with Gog when he writes: "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise therefore, O ye kings, klss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

THE SECOND RECOVERY.

God had in the first case brought those of the children of Israel to their own land who become subject to the attack of Gog's army, and after this scene of destruction is over, it will come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left."

This second recovery of Israel marks the commencement of the peaceful era of the millennium. The temple of Jerusalem now becomes a house of prayer for all the nations. "Every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth, unto Jerusalem, to worship the Lord, upon them shall be no rain; if the family of Egypt go not up, that have no rain, there shall be the plague." This is another section of the legal code of the age to come. Plague and famine is the penalty.

The millennium, least of all ages, will permit disobedience to God's just laws, for they are framed to bless all nations, and those who disregard them will not be permitted to frustrate their gracious and benevolent designs to the people who love and obey them.

CLOSING SCENES.

The closing scenes of the millennium further corroborate the rigid nature of its penal inflictions of death. At the commencement of the age, Satan had been bound and confined in the abyss, "that he should deceive the nations no more until the thousand years are finished." Just before its close the Devil is released and immediately begins to fan into a flame the God-hating spirit that smouldors in the breasts of many subjects of the kingdom of Christ.

The splendor of the heavenly Jerusalem bathing the earth in the glory light of God's being, the manifestation of his mercy and love in pardoning the repentant, the continual presence of the immortal saints instructing, ruling and sympathizing with their people, the punishment incurred by the disobedient—all combined fail to impress many incorrigible sinners with a desire for holiness and a hatred of vice. They love death because they love sin.

Eagerly they unite under the leadership of Satan, infatuated with the idea that they can overthrow the government of Christ. They are ripe for the sickle of destruction. In numbers "like the sands of the sea" they compass the earthly Jerusalem at the time of the celebration of the feast of tabernacles; for at that time the obedient of all nations visit Jerusalem, so that the city overflows and thousands of tents are erected outside the walls. The rebels think they have chosen a very opportune season for attack, and expect to crush the saints of all nations at one blow.

Does the record show that this wicked army, led by the devil, are attacked by these earthly saints with moral weapons, and the devil and all become converted to good persons? No indeed—far from it. Jesus says, "Fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." Fire converts them—converts them into ashes. "They shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this saith the Lord." Thus we see that the wicked are exterminated by divine vengeance from the beginning to the very close of the age of restitution. Woe unto the wicked—it shall be ill with them.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

As a conclusion the final judgment solicits a brief notice, since it is the climax of the continuous judgment of the millennium. Before the great white throne are brought the dead who were unworthy to rise with the saints in the first resurrection; they also were unworthy to rise with the nations in the second resurrection; it only to be brought up in the third resurrection to be judged worthy of the second death in the sulphurous lake of fire. In this lake antichrist—the personal beast,—and his false prophet, had been exterminated. Satan had also perished in its red waves. Finally all whose names were not written in the book of life are cast into its vortex of eternal death. Not a sinful being now exists in the whole domain of God's universe. All is pure, and the wicked are "as though they had not been." The wicked are not under the earth, in the earth, on the earth, or above the earth—they are not. God's realm is without a blot.

THE FINAL EARTH.

The millennial earth flies away to an unrevealed destination, and a new heavens and earth (the fourth) comes into view, in which there is no stain—no sin, no sorrow, no sea, no pain, no death. The whole creation rejoices in an era of perfect harmony, vibrating in unison with the pure character of a God of love and justice.

There are many conjectures as to the divine purpose, but why conjecture when the Word of God speaks so definitely. "What is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord." Some, like the Jews of Jeremiah's time, are reiterating, "Our fathers ate a sour grape," and would fain from this premise argue irresponsibility for all men—and perpetual life for all. This specious reasoning is false and contrary to the Word of our God.

In the restitution age, when the favor of God through the atonement of Christ's blood, reaches its greatest power, sin and sinners exist, and disobedience is punished by terrible deaths. Sin, when it is finished bringeth forth death. "No resurrection" is marked in the doom of those who perish in the millennium, and those who die in the second death. No redemption has been made for those who despise the redemption through the blood of Christ, and trample under foot the blessing which it procures. God teaches us not to cast pearls before swine, and he does not violate this wise counsel in the law of his restitution kingdom.

ABSOLUTELY PURE.

There is no age beyond the millennium in which a taint of sin can be detected. All is pure, bright, peaceful and holy in those ages beyond, in which he will show the exceeding riches of his grace in us. With the close of the thousand years closes the prophetic story of probation, and of those who abuse the redemptive favor of Christ it is declared: "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." He that hath a dream, let him tell his dream, but he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. DR. C. E. WELCH.

Notes from the Jewish World.

The Pacha of Jerusalem has given orders to the authorities at Jaffa to permit Jews from Roumania to land at that port, provided their passports are not marked with the word "emigrant." It is said the Pacha received instructions to that effect from Constantinople, and that the rule in question has long obtained with respect to all foreigners arriving at Jaffa, without distinction of creed. The Roumanian (Moiserly) colonists near Zophas have got permission from the Government to build houses on their settlement, and thirteen stone buildings have already been erected by them. They are especially favored by the authorities in all matters of interest to the colony, and are on friendly terms with the neighboring Arabs, who afford them every possible aid and instruction in the cultivation of the soil. The land belonging to them is very productive, and contains three wells, so that they have no occasion to use rain water. Altogether this colony is pronounced, so far, to be a success. Favorable reports also reach us from the colony Mishveh Israel, founded by the Paris Alliance. Eleven persons representing some Colonisation Society, and who have a through knowledge of agriculture, have arrived in the Holy Land for the purpose of founding a colony. They are about to purchase a plot of ground and cultivate it as an experiment. Should they find the enterprise successful, the society intends founding a large colony in Palestine.

For some time past the interior of Jerusalem has become more and more unhealthy. The state of the streets is disgusting. They are sometimes swept by the light of the moon and lanterns; but even then the sweepings are often left lying in street corners till scattered about by the wind or the street dogs. Many of the European residents, it seems, have, during several years past endeavored to secure dwellings outside the walls, where the air is somewhat purer. But so dirty and foul are the streets getting, that the Consuls of Great Britain, Austria, and Germany, have taken up their residences outside the city, though the British Consulate offices are in town. A house situated about the center of the town belonging to the German Government, and for many years used as a Consulate, has lately been sold to the Jews, and it is said that several Wealthy Israelites of Amsterdam and Frankfort-on-the-Main intend to open and support a new hospital, and that the house in question is to be utilized for this. All of which would seem to show that, even if prophecy is on the eve of fulfillment, and Salem once more about to be restored to her pristine glory, there are still a few unsavory considerations regarding sewers and main drainage and dustbins which would certainly, in the case of Western and in these respects prejudiced and pampered Jews, militate against that "rush" to the Holy City, which some good folks are hourly watching for.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 28.

Probable the very want of harmony between the writings of Peter and Paul relative to the future? A difficulty explained—Saxon mode of life which in their European home—Their ocean training and skill—Pirates—Vessels—Sea-kings—Chase of their prey on the continent—Their conquest of Great Britain.

Prelude.—Is there any want of harmony between the writings of Peter and Paul relative to the future? Not as we understand them. Peter distinctly declares, that, in Paul's letters on future topics, there "are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as (they do) also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." 2 Peter iii. 16. Peter says that Paul in all (his) epistles spake of those things, about which he (Peter) was then writing. About what was Peter then writing? He was writing about the last days; its scoffers: the day of judgment, how it shall come, and what it will do; what will succeed it, and the duty of Christians to look for that day and earnestly desire it. He speaks of the conflagration of this earth, and the introduction of the new earth — as the dwelling place of the righteous.

Paul's epistles were written before the second epistle of Peter, since they had all been read by him and examined, or he could not have stated their character — "difficult of understanding." Since Peter wrote, after he had examined Paul's writings, and wrote on one of the same subjects, handled by Paul; and since each one wrote by the dictation of the same Holy Spirit, and since the Spirit does not contradict itself, it is quite evident that Peter wrote nothing contrary to the views expressed by Paul.

Again, since Peter regarded Paul's writings relative to the future judgment, difficult to be understood, it would be Peter's aim to simplify Paul's declarations. We may then regard Peter's epistle chap. iii., as supplemental to Paul's, and an exposition of Paul's meaning—we regard what Peter says as a commentary on what Paul says—and expressed in the plainest terms that an uneducated man could handle. Peter, therefore, describes the conflagration and its results in the terms of ordinary language; and yet, not to contradict Paul. Peter's conflagration is literal, for, no attribute is ascribed to any agent or object that does not belong to it. As Peter speaks of a literal earth, and literal fire, so must Paul. Peter, speaking of the earth and its contents, makes the burning that of literal fire. "The works that are therein shall be burned" (utterly burned, Paul says, "If any man's works shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." How can a man's moral acts be burned by literal fire? Literal persons are built on to "Jesus the Christ." If they are true Christians, the men that built them into the building, will have pay. Each person is a star in his crown. If on the contrary, the man (minister) has built in hypocrites and unconverted persons; they will be burned, yet, he (the minister), if he is a true Christian, will be saved; the fire burns his works, but spares him. Literal fire in both cases.

Saxon mode of life in his European home, continued.—"Their warfare did not originate from the more generous, or the more pardonable of man's evil passions. It was the offspring of the basest. Their swords were not unsheathed by ambition or resentment. The love of plunder and of cruelty was their favorite habit; and hence they attacked, indifferently, every coast which they could reach.

Inland provinces were not protected from their invasion. From ignorance, necessity, or policy, they traversed the ocean in boats, framed of osiers, (water willows), and covered with skins sewed together; and such was their skill or their prodigality of life, that in these they sported in the tempests of the German Ocean.

It is possible that men who had seen the vessels in which the Franes had escaped from the Pontus, and who had been twice instructed by Imperial usurpers in the naval art, might have constructed more important war ships. If their judgment had approved. Although their isles, and their maritime provinces of Bitmaria and Stormaria, were barren of wood, yet Helvetia abounded with it; and if their defective land carriage prevented the frequency of this supply, the Elbe was at hand to float down inexhaustible stores from the immense forests of Germany.

They may have preferred their light skiffs from an experience of their superior utility. When their fatal incursions had incited the Romans to fortify and to garrison the frontier of Britain and Gaul, the Saxons directed their enmity against the inland regions. For their peculiar vessels no coast was too shallow, no river too small: they dared to ascend the streams for eighty or an hundred miles; and if other plunder invited, or danger pressed, they carried their vessels from one river to another, and thus escaped with facility from the most superior foe.

Of the Saxons, an author of the fifth century says, "You see as many piratical leaders as you behold rowers, for they all command, obey, teach, and learn the art of pillage. Hence after your greatest caution, still greater care is requisite. Thus enemy is fiercer than any other; if you be unguarded they attack; if prepared they elude you. They despise the opposing, and destroy the unwary; if they pursue they overtake; if they fly, they escape. Shipwrecks discipline them not; deter; they do not merely know, they are familiar with all the dangers of the sea; a tempest gives them security and success, for it directs the unpitied land of the apprehension of a descent. In the midst of waves and threatening rocks they rejoice at their peril, because they hope to surprise."—Sharon Turner.

Zosimus, the Roman historian, thus speaks of their land expeditions, "Their land incursions were sometimes conducted with all the craft of robbers. Dispersed into many bodies, they plundered by night, and when the day appeared, they concealed themselves in the woods; feasting on the booty they had gained." Historians of the 4th and 5th centuries generally speak of the Saxons as superior to others in their achievements and courage. The habits of the Saxons caused them to resemble the dark physiognomies of Asia and Africa, rather than the fair, pleasing, and blue-eyed countenances, possessed by the Teutonic race. They had high pride of character. Twenty-nine Saxons strangled themselves to avoid being brought into a theatre for a gladiatorial show. "Their persons were of the largest size. On the continent they were so proud of their forms and their descent, and so anxious to perpetuate them, that they were averse to marriages with other nations. Hence the color of the hair of their males is mentioned as uniform."

The government of the Saxons was patriarchal, as shown by the terms applied to their king and civil officers. Josephus was called, soldier over Egyptaland—an elder over the land of Egypt. A British general is called cat-hormon. Bede says, "The ancient Saxons have no king (such as modern kings), but many chiefs set over their people, who, when war presses, draw lots equally; and whomsoever the chance points out, they all follow as leader and obey during the war. The war concluded, all the chiefs become again of equal power."

Their religion was pagan; and, at first, without an idol or a temple. But when they invaded Britain, they had idols, temples, and priests. Their temples were surrounded with enclosures; they were profaned if lances were thrown into them; it was not lawful for a priest to bear arms, or to ride but on a mare. "Some of the subjects of their adoration we find in their names for the days of the weeks: Sunday is the Sun's day, a male deity; Monday is Moon's day, a female deity; Tuesday is Tiw's day, not known, only the name; Wednesday is Woden's day, chief god of the Saxons, the same as Odin of Denmark and Iceland; Thursday is Thunor's day, same as Thor; Friday is Friga's day, wife of Woden; Saturday is Setterne's day." They had traditions of the creation, and of the destruction of the earth by fire. We shall close our sketch of the Saxon sojourn in Europe with a notice of the sea-kings and vikings of the North. No topic can better illustrate the Saxon sea-discipline and training, than a sketch of the lives of the sea-kings of the North. Our historic notice will be taken from the most authentic sources; principally from the history of the Anglo-Saxons by Sharon Turner.

The sea-kings of the North (in which school were the Saxons), were a race of beings whom Europe dreaded, and beheld with horror. Without a yard of territorial property, without any towns, or visible nation, with no wealth but their ships, no force but their crews, and no hope but from their swords, the sea-kings swarmed on the boisterous ocean, and plundered in every district they could approach. Never to sleep under a smoky roof, nor to indulge in the cheerful cup over the hearth, were the issues of these watery sovereigns, who not only flourished in the plunder of the sea and its shores, but who sometimes amassed so much booty, and enlisted so many followers, as to be able to assault provinces for permanent conquest.

It is declared to have been a law or custom in the North, that one of the male children should be selected to remain at home, to inherit the government. The rest were exiled to the ocean, to wield their sceptres amid the turbulent waters. The consent of the northern societies entitled all men of royal descent, who assumed piracy as a profession, to enjoy the name of kings, though they possessed no territory. Hence the sea-kings were kinsmen of the land-sovereigns. While the eldest son ascended the paternal throne, the rest of the family hastened, like petty Neptunes, to establish their kingdoms in the waves. When any of the land-kings were expelled their inheritance by others, they also sought a continuance of their dignity upon the ocean. When the younger branches of a reigning dynasty were about to become sea-kings, the ships and their requisite equipments were furnished as a patrimonial right, and perhaps as a political convenience.

The ocean swarmed with sea-kings. It is said that one Danish sovereign destroyed seventy of the honorable but direful race. "Not only the children of the kings, but every man of importance, equipped ships, and roamed the seas to acquire property by force. At the age of twelve, the sons of the great were in action under military tutors." Piracy was the most honorable, and the most wealthy occupation. No one was respected that did not return home in winter with ships laden with booty. "The spoil consisted of every necessary of life; clothes, domestic utensils, cattle, which they killed and prepared on the shores they ravaged, slaves, and other property."

"So reputable was the pursuit, that parents were even anxious to compel their children into the dangerous and malevolent occupation. Parents commanded their gold, silver, and other property to be buried with them, that their offspring might be driven by necessity to engage in the conflicts, and to participate the glory of maritime piracy. Inherited property was despised. "They sought their food by their sails, and inhabited the seas."

During the summer months, the land-kings followed the amusements of piracy. They first filled the boys with their ships; after a time they covered the German ocean. They cultivated paroxysms of brutal insanity—howling like wolves and dogs; rising their shields and foaming like bears (to intimidate their enemies). They had no kind feeling. "Such is but an imperfect sketch of the character of these pirate sea-kings—these rulers of the ocean: parents of that race who now covers every sea with its victorious fleets. Such a sea-training, severe and savage in its nature, seemed to be required to develop a race of ocean rulers. The conquest of Britain by the Saxons was the result of such an ocean discipline. But who were these Saxons? Not a race indigenous to Europe. We shall now trace them eastward to the land in which they dwelt before they migrated to Europe.

STUDIES IN "KEY-WORDS."

The Hebrew term commonly rendered "spirit" is ruach (רוּחַ), derived from the verb ruach, which signifies to breathe, to blow. Similarly the Greek for "spirit" is pneuma, from pneo, to blow, to breathe; and the English term "spirit" is from the Latin spiro, to breathe. The term "spirit" itself has various definitions in Webster's Unabridged. the first being "air set in motion by breathing; breath." Commencing on page 150 of "Key-Words," we find the noun ruach rendered in more than ten different ways, as, air, wind, breath, blast, tempest, anger, mind, courage, spirit, etc.

When a word has various meanings, that meaning (as every school-boy at his first lessons in translation ought to know), must be adopted to each place, which will best suit the context and harmonize with the general teaching of the Book. Thus when Solomon says, "The ruach shall return to God who gave it" (Eccles. xii. 7), we know that although ruach is here rendered "spirit" in the Common Version, yet we are not to suppose that Solomon meant a human spirit as an immortal, conscious, disembodied, individual leaving its mortal part in the dust and going immediately to its reward in heaven, if righteous: or that, if wicked, such a spirit

"Ascends to God not there to dwell
But hears its doom and sinks to hell."

I say we are not to suppose that Solomon wanted any such construction placed on his words, for he had already said that "the dead know not anything," and that man had boast "have all one ruach." Certainly the one common ruach that leaves the body of a slaughtered "beast" is no such immortal, disembodied individual.

Nor is Solomon the only one who teaches that ruach, in one of its meanings, denotes the principle of life, the vital breath, whether in man or other animals; for the same is taught in Gen. vii. 15,—"They went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the ruach (breath) in C. V.) of life." And, speaking of the richly varied forms of animated nature, the Psalmist says, "Thou takest away their ruach (breath," in C. V.), they die, and return to their dust." Psa. civ. 29. The death of man, and the extinction of his thoughts, are described in almost the very words of Solomon, "His ruach (breath, in C. V.) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. If it is proper to say "his breath goeth forth," in the last quotation, why would it not be equally proper to say "the breath shall return to God who gave it?" Certainly the vital breath is from God, and when the body returns to dust this breath is yielded up to him. "He giveth breath unto the people." Isa. xlii. 5. "He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things." Acts xvii. 25. At death he "taketh away their breath." Psa. civ. 29.

But, in some places, ruach has a much higher meaning than "air," "breath," or "wind;" for we read, "The spirit (ruach) of God moved upon the face of the waters," (Gen. i. 2). "The Spirit (ruach) of the Lord shall rest upon him." Isa xi, 2. "They rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit (ruach)." Isa. xxxi. 3. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit (ruach). Psa. cxxxix. 7. In such places ruach means the divine Spirit or power which, though as invisible as the air, wind, or breath, is radiated from God and pervades the universe. So far as the continued being and well being of the Universe is concerned, that divine Spirit is an indispensable in its own higher sphere of operations, as the air, wind, and breath are in theirs.

Both is the Inspired writers have selected the same word (ruach), to denote air, wind, and breath, and also that divine Power which irradiates from God and pervades the universe, to remind us in a manner accommodated to our weak capacities, that as the air, wind, and vital breath, though present, are invisible, mysterious, and unsearchable, so is that divine power which we call "The Spirit of God." Now, if inspiration has decided that ruach in the Hebrew and pneuma in the Greek are terms of sufficient clearness for man in this mortal state why in these last days should one or two uninspired writers endeavor to throw too high for them" (Psa. cxxx. 1), dare to tell us that spirit is electricity! Such an idea is too horrible to be entertained a moment, for electricity is an element of nature that can, to some extent, be controlled and made visible at man's will, and used by the vilest people to carry the most wicked messages, on telegraph wires. One of Ingersoll's harangues could be conveyed to Asia by electricity. Military batteries that send bombs crashing into cradles of sleeping babes can be fired off by electricity.

Ruach, in one of its higher meanings, is contrasted with "flesh," that is, with mortal and corruptible flesh. "The Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses flesh and not spirit (ruach)." Isa. xxxi. 3. So the corresponding Greek term pneuma. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit (pneuma) is spirit (pneuma)." Jno. iii. 6. Compare the expressions, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption;" and, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. xv. 44, 50. The righteous will be partakers of the incorruptible or "divine nature"—the spirit-nature—when born of the Spirit at the resurrection; for "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." In that glorified nature they will be "equal to the angels" who also are called "spirits." Luke xx 36; Heb. i. 14. Their bodies (?) being fashioned thoughout will be "fashioned like unto" the "glorious body" of the Lord Jesus, who is called "a quickening Spirit (pneuma)." 1 Cor. xv. 45.

And here pneuma is used in its very highest sense, when it is applied to the Father saying, "God is a Spirit;" or father, as the American Bible Union and the margin of the Revised Version render it, "God is Spirit." (This rendering accords better with the Greek, pneuma ho theos, iv. 24. But we are not, hence, to fall into the gross mistake of inferring that God is incorporeal or without body. For though the term "spirit" is applied to the Lord Jesus, the angels, and the future state of the redeemed, yet it is abundantly plain that the Lord Jesus and the angels are corporeal beings; and so will the redeemed be when their bodies, instead of being incorporeal, are "changed" and "fashioned like unto" the "glorious body" of their Redeemer. Phil. iii. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 49; 1 Jno. iii. 2. Now, the Redeemer "is the image of the invisible God," "the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person." Col. i. 15; Heb. i. 3. Is it not equally proper to say "the breath shall return to God who gave it?" Certainly the vital breath is from God, and when the body returns to dust this breath is yielded up to him. "He giveth breath unto the people." Isa. xlii. 5. "He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things." Acts xvii. 25. At death he "taketh away their breath." Psa. civ. 29.

But, in some places, ruach has a much higher meaning than "air," "breath," or "wind;" for we read, "The spirit (ruach) of God moved upon the face of the waters," (Gen. i. 2). "The Spirit (ruach) of the Lord shall rest upon him." Isa xi, 2. "They rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit (ruach)." Isa. xxxi. 3. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit (ruach). Psa. cxxxix. 7. In such places ruach means the divine Spirit or power which, though as invisible as the air, wind, or breath, is radiated from God and pervades the universe. So far as the continued being and well being of the Universe is concerned, that divine Spirit is an indispensable in its own higher sphere of operations, as the air, wind, and breath are in theirs.

Both is the Inspired writers have selected the same word (ruach), to denote air, wind, and breath, and also that divine Power which irradiates from God and pervades the universe, to remind us in a manner accommodated to our weak capacities, that as the air, wind, and vital breath, though present, are invisible, mysterious, and unsearchable, so is that divine power which we call "The Spirit of God." Now, if inspiration has decided that ruach in the Hebrew and pneuma in the Greek are terms of sufficient clearness for man in this mortal state why in these last days should one or two uninspired writers endeavor to throw upon all the inhabitants of the earth." Psa. xxxiii. 13, 14; "Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do." Heb. iv. 13; etc. From such testimonies it is plainly to be gathered that while we are to address him as "our Father which art in heaven," yet by his Spirit he places himself in the most perfect communication with every part of his universe, and brings it under his omnipotent superintendence. When the risen Savior said to his apostles, in sending them out on their mission, "Lo I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age" (margin of Revised Version), I cannot suppose he meant "personally or bodily with you," for in that sense he was about to leave them and go to be "with the Father," or "to appear in the presence of God for us." 1 Jno. ii. 1; Heb. ix. 24. His bodily presence with his people is an event in the near future, when he "shall so come in like manner as he ascended into heaven." Acts i. 11. And this I regard as, to some extent, illustrative of how the Father is, in one sense, "in heaven," and, in another sense everywhere.

Crabb, in his "English Synonymes," an educational work of high standing, and taken a high and Scriptural view of the subject than that expressed in the encyclopedia. He says, "God is a spiritual, not merely an incorporeal or immaterial being; the angels are likewise designated, in general, as the spiritual inhabitants of heaven."

We have now seen that ruach and pneuma embrace a noble field of thought, and that their shades of meaning are to be carefully distinguished according to the context and its correlative portions of Scripture.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to make an apology for closing my last letter so abruptly. I was interrupted by a visit from Rabbi Belwin, he came with such a long string of wants that required my attention that I found it impossible to finish my letter. I can scarcely make you realize how much there is to do here, and, as my mission is to the suffering poor here, I do not feel at liberty to refuse. The Jewess, to whom you send THE RESTITUTION, cannot read English, she speaks it a little, but the paper is eagerly sought for among the Jews who do read English, and they will interpret to her; her name is Amelia, I cannot now recall the family name, her husband is quite blind, she however is a lovely woman. My letter was copied entire from THE RESTITUTION and sent to Mr. Spofford, with much comment. The Mission have forbidden their members to attend service at the Americans, under threats of excommunication; there is much excitement here on account of the "heresy" preached by Mr. Spofford, the said "heresy" being "no eternal torment," and "consecration." Certainly they are a blessing to Jerusalem, they share all their goods with the poor and continually make sacrifices of money, and loving care for the sick and afflicted all for Christ's sake.

You may enlarge upon this as much as you please. I have given some of the facts, and I think it will give your paper considerable notice, as their friends in America are a class of very wealthy influential people, and I am sure they are reading with great interest all that is said about them. I mailed four cards of flowers to Mrs. Westlake, last week; shall send two for your sisters next mail. There have arrived today 10 travellers, nearly all Abberjeans; they are all stopping opposite my house at the Mediterranean Hotel. I was pleased to watch them on their arrival from my window. It is now raining and blowing a tempest, the storms are sometimes fearful among these mountains.

Please excuse haste, I have six unanswered letters lying before me. As I have told you often, I am no writer, and have no ambition to see my name in print, so what I do not write you will kindly add. Perhaps some time when I shall get out of the snarl that I am now in I can do better. If you could only sit a spectator for one day in this house, you would not expect much of me; as an example I will give here a true sketch of my room as it is this moment: Before me is a large table covered with flowers and unfinished cards, a pile of unanswered letters, on the divan at my left lies two shirts for a poor Jew to be made, not the first stitch yet, on my right is a large American flag, 6 feet in length, just cut to be made, at my back is a dress to be made with ruffles and tucks, and last, but not least is two cwtsuns of wood, sent by my kind friends and left piled up for me to stow away somewhere. Well such is life in Jerusalem.

In hope.

Unexplored Australia still contains prizes for enterprising travellers. The central desert theory, and many others to this, have long been exploded, but an immense area of country remains practically untrodden. In two colonies alone—South Australia and Western Australia—there are upward of 800,000 square miles of which little or nothing is known, and in the northern peninsula of Queensland another 10,000 square miles remain unexplored. Mr. Christie Palmerston, a Government surveyor, has just opened up the table lands between Herberton and the Queensland coast. He reports that this highly favored region possesses a flora of incredible luxuriance, broad sheets of water falling over high basaltic precipices, and the richest soil in Australia, and is inhabited by tribes exhibiting characteristics which distinguish them from the other natives of Queensland. Some of them are said to reside in scrub so dense that they have never seen open country. They are armed, not with spears, but with wooden swords resembling in shape the weapons which the Dyaks of Borneo carry in their head-hunting expeditions.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 4, 1883.

SOME deferred communications next week and others as soon as we can give them and keep up variety.

PROF. GARDNER gives a literal translation of some important Scriptures this week from the Septuagint. It will benefit our readers to compare this rendering with the rendering made in our Authorized Version from the Hebrew.

BR. MAGRUDER'S article on Baptism was too late for this number. will give it next week. This is to be followed by two more on the same subject. The design of his essay is to present this ordinance in a comprehensive, critical, and Scriptural manner.

SINCE our last issue we have received the March number of "The Hebrew Student"—edited by Prof. William R. Harper, of Morgan Park, near Chicago. It contains several instructive articles, of which we give one in the present number of our paper entitled —Glimpses at the Scrip of the Present. An extra, received with this, details the plan of teaching the Hebrew language by correspondence, of which we will speak more definitely hereafter, as some of our readers may become interested in learning Hebrew in this way. We have also received three numbers of the—Biblical Expositor and People's Commentary—edited and published by Jacob M. Hirschfelder, lecturer in Oriental literature, University college, Toronto, Ont. The object of this periodical is to give accurate translations from the Hebrew of difficult passages with critical notes and explanations. We shall give a fuller notice hereafter, as our paper is too nearly full to set forth the design and merits of this work at this time.

We clip the following from Masonic Herald. It is easy to see that the priestly line may have been preserved intact, notwithstanding all the vicissitudes that dispersed Israel has passed through. The wonderful preservation of this people is a miracle of history. Any one, by consulting Wigram's or Young's Concordance, will see that the [illegible] term always [illegible]. MODERN HEBREW NAMES.

"The most common name among the Jews is that of Cohen. To English Jews it is what Smith is to Englishmen. The second most common name is Davis. The name of Moses stands very low down in the list. It is unpopular, has been ridiculed, and seems to have been very generally abandoned.

The foregoing, clipped from the Boston Journal, reminded us of something we had read in Mrs. E. A. Finn's book, "At Home in the Holy Land." She had a "many years' residence in Jerusalem," and is well qualified to speak of Jewish customs and history. On turning to it again we find the following conversation described as occurring between the Rev. Mr. Anderson and a young man. In reply to a question the clergyman says:

"The Jews believe that the line of priests has not been lost, and that every person bearing the name of Cohen is of the line of Aaron,—as also, that every one bearing the name of Levi is of that tribe,—and they act upon this. In the reading of the law in the synagogue, the portion is divided and read by various persons of different degrees, who are called up each in their order by the reader, and the person first summoned must be a Cohen, and the second a Levi. A Cohen also is always obliged, in case of death, to leave the house in obedience to the command of God, Lev. xxi: 1-5. And the firstborn son is always considered the property of the Cohen, and bought back—redeemed from him by the parents, Ex. xxxiv, 20. There are circumstances of daily occurrence.

"Would it not be easy,' asked Walpy, 'for a person to assume the name of Cohen who has no right to it?'

"I have asked that very question of the Jews, and they say no. That, in the first place, there is no sufficient inducement in the way of privilege or advantage to be gained; and in the next, that the Jews know each other's families and descent so well, that detection would be almost certain. I find that distinction between the families of Cohen, Levi, and the other Jews, is kept up among all the great divisions, that is, the Sephardim or Spanish, the Ashenazim or Polish, and the Morocco or Mogrebee, as well as the Persian or Indian Jews.'

"'Are these classes very distinctly marked?'

"'Very. By language, customs, and descent. The Sephardim look upon themselves as belonging to the royal tribe of Judah, who took refuge in Spain, and some in Italy, at the dispersion, and who returned here in large numbers when Ferdinand and Isabella exiled them from Spain. They utterly despise the Ashenazim—above all, they despise their corrupt accent in reading. The Spanish is certainly the most musical and pure. All the men speak, read and write Hebrew—but the women, being uneducated, cannot speak it, therefore they have besides a family language, used at home. Among the Sephardim this is Spanish, among the Ashenazim, very corrupt German; among the Mogrebees, African-Arabic. The common language is Hebrew, and it is used for religious purposes, as well as literary and ordinary intercourse of letter writing, conversation, etc., etc., so that in the family language all principal words are still Hebrew, though the rest may be Spanish German or Arabic."

"'Then Hebrew ought not to be called a dead language?'

"'By no means. It is never called a dead language here. All receipts, leases of houses marriage contracts, etc., etc., are made out in Hebrew; and it is spoken all day long in the Jewish quarter.

"'One more question. Are there any Jews in Palestine whose families may have lived here uninterruptedly since the days of our Lord?'

"'In Jerusalem, of course not; but possibly in Hebron, and in the north, especially in Tiberias, there is every probability that they were allowed to remain. The Jews believe that there have always been some of their people in Tiberias and Galilee."

PALMONI.

The term yefeyni — phelmouni — which occurs in Dan. viii. 13, in the Septuagint is a word that is not translated from the original Hebrew, but transferred. Its form in this latter language is פלמני—pal-mok-nee. By Gesenius the word is derived from פלני—pĕloh-nee— a distinguishing, and אלמני—al-mok-nee—one kept silent, i. e., whose name is not mentioned. Tafel, in his Interlinear Translation, renders the term some one; and, in his notes, defines the word—the one shut up, isolated, soliteary, for unnamed, unknown. We may remark that all the above words, Greek and Hebrew, are accented on the last syllable. Barnes, in his notes, and after commenting on the original terms, says: "It is language, therefore, which would be properly addressed to an unknown person with whom we would desire to speak, or whom we would designate by the finger, or in some such way, without being able to call the name. Thus applied in the passage here, it means that Daniel did not know the names of the persons thus speaking, but simply saw that one was speaking to another. He had no way of designating or distinguishing them, than by applying a term which was commonly used by a stranger, when one wished to address him, or to point him out, or call for him. There is no foundation in the word for the meaning suggested in the margin. Theodotion does not attempt to translate the word, but retains it—φάλμωνι—phalmoni. The Latin Vulgate well expresses the meaning, dixit unus sanctus alteri neccio cui loquenti. The full sense is undoubtedly conveyed by the two ideas, (a) that the one referred to was unknown by name, and (b) that he wished to designate him in some way, or to point him out."

We may add that the word belongs to a class grammatically designated hapax legomenai, i. e., words occurring but a single time. This word occurs in no other place in the Hebrew Scriptures, as shown by the Lexicons and Concordances. Notwithstanding what the learned commentator, Barnes, says above, the word, from its derivation, seems to us to mean—the wonderful unknown one, or that distinguished unnamed one; as the remoter root פלה—path-lah signifies to make wonderful or admirable.

Who Is the Subject of God's Plan of Salvation?

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life!

From the foregoing statement one thing is clearly established, i. e., the subject of the above proposition is not an immortal being. To talk of a deathless being perishing, is as absurd as to offer everlasting life to a being that can not die. The Bible contains no such thing as a "plan to save immortal beings." In all the varied literature of that Holy Book not one command, threat or promise is made to a deathless being. Beings possessed of endless life, instead of being subjects of salvation, are exalted patterns to which those must attain who seek salvation. "Neither can they die any more." They have become angel equals born of God, into the family of God. Having attained a deathless nature, the consummation of their salvation has been reached. This glorious exaltation is promised to all who are worthy to obtain that age. The Son of God declares that none of that class should be lost. But what pledge is given that they will be saved? "I will raise him up at the last day." The domain of death is large. To man, darkness, clouds, and doubt rest upon it. But David assures us, that large as this vast area is, there is no spot in it that is concealed from the omniscient One. Does skepticism stand aghast at the declaration "the dead shall live again?" Does feeble faith ask:—

> How shall the dead be raised again,
> Whose flesh is scattered wide and free
> Mangled by cruelty, beasts, birds and fires
> And trodden in fragments everywhere?

If so, it declares unto us the power of God to accomplish the mighty work then

> And how the moving dust shall wake,
> And assemble all in their place;
> They ask if God can raise the dead
> Who made, and fashion'd, and made us there.
>
> Behold the sun's bright, day-time rays,
> That lights the world at which we live,
> They ask if God is dead or gone to sleep,
> Who does each daily blessings give.
>
> Ask if the ocean's mighty roar
> With fury doth against the shore,
> Then ask if God is buried in the waters,
> Can unto life the dead restore.
>
> Yes! he that formed the man of dust,
> Can bring him back to life again;
> Great power and skill his word to trust,
> Nor think his promises are vain.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" Out of senseless dust God formed the representative of the race. Surely no greater power will be required to reproduce man. No greater skill is required to properly adjust the delicate parts of a piece of completed mechanism than was exercised in its original construction. Is the doctrine of the re-living of the dead a pleasant thing to contemplate? Do we desire to see again the familiar faces of long buried friends? Yes, even though they bear traces of pain or care. Do we wish to clasp again in warm friendship the hand long since palsied by death? Aye, even though the hand be wrinkled by age. Does the mother long to gaze again upon the face of that sweet child, long since laid away to rest? How tearfully she gazes upon even the imperfect image made by the photographer's skill, when from memory's tablet is fading the lineaments of that cherub face; then ask the mother if she wants to see her darling again.

Could even these desires be gratified how the heart would swell with joy. But the resurrection that is to consummate the Christian's hope brings not back the care-worn and tear-stained faces, nor bowed forms and palsied hands, but glorified resplendent bodies stamped with the eternal seal of immortality. No tear shall ever dim the eye that is to glow with the fire of eternal youth. No line of care will ever be written upon that face that is radiant with everlasting joy. No twinge of pain shall ever annoy the perfect organization that is fitted to exist through countless ages. No wonder David exclaims, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness" or that Paul desired to attain that glorious boon "a resurrection from the dead," and the rhapsody of John, "Blessed and holy is he that has part in the first resurrection." O blessed hope! No wonder it is called a "purifying hope" for "he that hath this hope purifyeth himself." God grant that we may stand firmly rooted and grounded in the truth, clad in the whole panoply of Christian warfare. Thus equipped we are safe. Then all along the line for the watchword be "holiness to the Lord," for only those who have clean hands and pure hearts can dwell in the holy hill of the Lord." For the crown, the robe and palm await only those who keep themselves unspotted from the world.

Yours in the blessed hope.

J. F. WADSWORTH.

Editor Restitution:

It is somewhat relieving to the Christian mind that now, while infidelity is flourishing and blasphemy bold as never before in England, the City Solicitor of London has prosecuted the editor, publisher and proprietor of the Freethinker for blasphemous libels in the Christmas number of that paper. I saw a copy of a newspaper and variety store, and at first thought of mailing it to you as a specimen of devilishness, unequalled by any publication in the world's history, so far; but feeling doubtful about the propriety of sending it, I advised the woman behind the counter to either burn the copy or send it back to the wholesale firm in Manchester.

That there has been a scattering of the paper (this No. is a magazine form) to some considerable extent is certain from the fact of a second edition being issued, and the thought of such an exhibition of pictures being before the eyes of thousands of boys and girls is indeed dreadful. Perhaps some have thought that no public scene of insult to the Supreme ever exceeded the dragging of the Sacramental Emblems through Lyons at the time of the first French revolution; this, however, is far outdone by the Freethinker.

What days are these?

H. HEYES.

PROSECUTION OF THE "FREETHINKER."

At the London Mansion House yesterday, George William Foote, William George Ramsey, and Henry Arthur Kemp were summoned before the Lord Mayor, at the instance of the City Solicitor, for publishing a blasphemous libel in the Christmas number of the Freethinker for 1882. Mr. Poland conducted the prosecution for the City Solicitor; Mr. Lickfurd appeared for Ramsey and Kemp.

Mr. Poland said he was instructed to prosecute the defendants for publishing a series of blasphemous libels contained in the Christmas number of the Freethinker. It was only necessary to look at that publication to see that it was undoubtedly and beyond all question an offence against the law, and all persons connected with the publication of it were liable to be dealt with in a criminal court. He need hardly say that there could be no desire in the present day to interfere with full and fair discussion on matters in which persons were "greatly interested;" but what was complained of in this case was that this publication was no course — he was going to say brutal—in character that it gave pain to persons who saw it, and no doubt it also did a vast amount of mischief.

It was under these circumstances that the City Solicitor had determined to prosecute the persons connected with this publication. He would not read at length the passages complained of. There were several passages of the most outrageous character, and in addition to the letter-press there were pictures illustrating the written matter. Beneath one illustration there purported to be a quotation from Exodus xxxiii. There was also a series of pictures which were described as "A New Life of Christ," in which they held up to ridicule our Savior. Certainly no one could look at those pictures without seeing that the publication of them was a very gross outrage.

The Freethinker had been published for some time at 28 Stonecutter street, and he should produce a certificate of registration under the Act of Parliament. It appeared that it was registered by H. A. Kemp as printer and publisher, and the person who was registered as the proprietor was Mr. Jas. Ramsay, publisher, of 20 Brownlow st., Holborn. With regard to Foote, he was stated on the paper to be the editor. Mr. Poland added that when the court heard the evidence which he would call, it would be of opinion that all three defendants were responsible for the publication.

Mr. Lickfurd said there was already a prosecution proceeding against the paper, which had been removed by certiorari to the Court of Queen's Bench, and he suggested that the present case should stand over until the result of the other trial was made known.

Mr. Poland replied that this number had not been prosecuted, and it was different from the others. He therefore could not accede to the suggestion.

Mr. Hayling, a clerk in the office of the Public Prosecutor, produced a list of that official authorizing the prosecution.

Detective Edgar spoke to buying two copies of the Christmas number of the Freethinker at Stonecutter St. Kemp served him, and on Jan. 20 he purchased two other copies of the second edition.

Mr. Low, the rate-collector of St. Dido's, Field St., produced the last poor's rate, in which the premises, 28 Stonecutter street, were rated. The date of the rate was the 5th of October, and at that time Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant were rated as the occupiers. The usual demand was sent, and afterwards the witness received by post a cheque signed by Ramsay in payment of the rate.

After some further evidence had been heard, the case was adjourned till Monday, the defendants being admitted to bail.

I have been much interested in Prof. Gardner's essays on Greek words, and would like, through your paper, to ask his opinion upon the meaning and object of the Greek article in 1 Cor. xv. 22. It rarely occurs in such position and, I perceive, the revision is, that, Paul is not expressing union with Christ's a thought often occurring, but always without the article; but rather drawing a parallel and a contrast, and consequently, the one parallel, "in the Christ," extends as far as the other, "in the Adam."

This verse is usually maintained to limit the result of "being made alive" to those "in Christ." Were it without the article, there would be no show, I think, against such a view; but with it, the line of thought is not only extended but does not run in the same select channel.

A list of the verses where "in Christ" occurs without the article, and where it occurs with "in the Christ" will help the Professor and your readers by saving his and their time in research.

Without the Greek article Rom. xii. 5; xvi. 7; 1 Cor. iii. 1; xv. 18; 2 Cor. v. 17; xii. 2; Col. i. 2; Gal. i. 22; 1 Thess. iv. 16. I find these are all I have noted in the margin of my Bible. If there are others the principle will be the same.

With the article 1 Cor. xv. 22; Eph. i. 10; xii. 20; iii. 6, in A. V. or Textus Receptus, but omitted in the text adopted by the revisers. The internal or doctrinal evidence is in favor of the latter I think.

A comparison of these verses will reveal a different line of thought in each section, not so perceptible to the English reader; and if my view be correct would open up at once a far more extended view of what "being made alive" constitutes. Surely not to be immediately recast into death, especially when we remember not only that myriads had never heard of life in Christ, or Christ, and Paul tells us they must hear, Rom. xv. 22, R. V., and that it is God's will they should know it, but that myriads also were brought into this world with hereditary taints of sin physically and mentally, which led them as inevitably, under their surrounding circumstances, to gravitate downwards, as the nature of sparks tends to make them fly up" words.

Then comes their resurrection on a different plane, 1 Cor. xv. 23, with Eze. xxxvii. 12-14, and in another rank or order or species tagma to that of the church, his body; and then comes into play the declaration of Christ in Luke xii. 47; Matt. xi. 24, and also the New Covenant (if we are under "promise," not covenant) described by Jer. xxxi. 29, 30; Eze. xviii. 2-[illegible].

I should be glad therefore to see Mr. Gardner's critical opinion upon the Greek of 1 Cor. xv. 22, in your columns, if he will kindly oblige.

Yours faithfully in Christ.

Conference Report.

The second session of the Quarterly Conference of the second district of Arkansas, met with the Church of God worshiping at Damascus, Conway Co., on Saturday morning before the second Sunday in March, and continued over the following Monday.

The following ministers were present, W. H. McCarty, W. J. Sowell, District Evangelist, S. H. Etheridge State Evangelist, J. D. Martin, J. J. Smith, C. S. Norman, H. W. Porter, N. B. Etheridge, from abroad: J. A. Cargile of Stevenson, Ala.

We will not go into full detail of the business transacted by the Conference, but, suffice it to say, everything was done for the glory of God. If we were to say the preaching was good, the half would not be told, and as Secretary, I am happy to say, as all other visiting brethren said, it was one of the most harmonious meetings they ever attended.

At 11 o'clock a. m. Sunday, Brother Cargile gave us an able discourse from Dan. ii, using his chart. Bro. McCarty took up the same subject, using the chart, in the afternoon.

At night we enjoyed a feast that will never be forgotten. One came out and sold by his acts that he wanted to serve the Lord. Much rejoicing was had over him. God's children then assembled around the Lord's table to commemorate his death and sufferings.

Again on Monday night the Lord blessed us. Three more came out on the Lord's side. Two of them very old people. Many arose and testified for Jesus, until the whole house was filled with the praises of God.

Brother Cargile's preaching had a telling effect; he was with us about a year ago, and had the pleasure of seeing some of the seed sown at that time coming forth and producing fruit. He will never realize how much good he has done throughout here, until he hears that welcome approval, Well done, thou good and faithful servant. We all feel that we have made a nearer approach to the Lord. The good work is rapidly spreading through this part of Arkansas. Our state evangelists are doing noble work.

The Conference adjourned to meet with the Church at Green Briar, Faulkner Co., on Friday before the third Sunday in June.

W. H. McCARTY, Pres.

JOHN W. TEAS, Sec.

P. S.—As secretary I am receiving many letters of inquiry about Arkansas. I will cheerfully answer all letters if parties writing will enclose a stamp for return postage. Address to John W. Teas, Box 58, Morrilton, Conway Co., Ark.

TALKING FROM HERE TO CHICAGO.

The Postal Telegraph Company yesterday opened its line for private test between New York and Chicago, and everything worked perfectly. The resistance of the wire showed only 1,522 ohms, as against 5,000 ohms on the best iron wire, and 15,000 ohms on the average iron wire. Prof Elisha Gray and H. Crimmins, Vice-President and General Manager of the Postal Telegraph Company, conversed freely and distinctly with Mr. Taylor, the company's electrician in Chicago, a distance of 1,000 miles. — *N. THE ECHO YOU CAN HEAR IN OREGON.

One of the most remarkable echoes we have noticed in this vicinity is observable on the other side of Lowland Clarke's. A shot fired at the point opposite echoes and re-echoes, and then all is still for a moment, when a rattle like the discharge of musketry is heard, and then a thundering reverberation away in the direction of Saddle Mountain.—*Astorian (Ore.) On the ascent of the Mount of Olives adjoining the Jewish Cemetery is a plot of ground which has been preserved to the Jews from time immemorial as the burying place of the prophets Haggai, Zacharian and Malachi. How we the world over have been distressed by the report that this sacred spot was about to be sold by the Turkish authorities to a Christian sect which intended to build a church upon it. At last accounts the completion of the sale had been deferred by Raouf Pasha at the urgent solicitation of the spiritual heads of the Jewish community. The intending purchaser is said to be the Russian Archimandrite in Jerusalem, and the price agreed upon is £80.

The great meteor which was seen in Connecticut and Rhode Island on the night of the 27th of February seems to be worth more than passing notice, especially since it is now learned that another meteor, closely resembling it in size and in the startling effects it produced, was seen in Mississippi and Alabama a little over a week before. It will be remembered that two or three shocks, which were believed to be earthquake shocks, closely followed the appearance of the Connecticut meteor. Some persons who were awake and out of doors at the time believed that the shocks resulted from the explosion of the air caused by the explosion of the meteor. This opinion seems to be supported by the phenomena attending the meteor seen in Mississippi. That, too, appeared to explode, and, following the explosion, houses were violently shaken, and a great noise was heard. The earth appears to have been running of late through a region abounding in large meteors, for half a dozen of these celestial bombs have been seen in this country since the beginning of the winter, to say nothing of the ordinary shooting stars, some of which may be seen on any clear night. — *N. SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE AND THE JEWS.

On October 24, 1884, Sir Moses will, if he should live, have reached the hundredth year of his age. The comparatively near approach of an epoch so interesting to all friends and religionists of the still hale and hearty philanthropist has attracted attention abroad as well as at home. A movement is on foot among the Hebrews of New York to prepare a suitable testimonial to Sir Moses Montefiore on the expected centennial of his birthday. An ardent advocate of the old faith, he did not let the toils of money-getting blind him to the unjust political disabilities under which the British Jews labored in his early days, nor to the benighted and unfortunate condition of his brethren abroad, particularly in Palestine. In 1827 he made the first of a series of trips to Palestine with a view to personally investigate the causes of the abject state of his brethren in that land. The result of that first visit was the founding of the Palestine Fund, of which he has since constantly been the administrator. In 1862 his beloved wife and helpmate died. Her death marked an epoch of princely charities and donations by Sir Moses. Though grief burdened his soul and physical debility bowed his whitened head, it did not prevent him from immediately proceeding to Morocco in the following year, 1863, to plead the cause of the persecuted Jews of Fort Efni, who were being massacred and tortured by the Spanish on a trumped-up pretext that the Spanish consul at that port had been murdered by the really inoffensive and innocent Jews. The venerable man succeeded once more in throwing oil on the troubled waters and restoring peace and happiness to his persecuted brethren and also securing valuable privileges for resident Christians there from the Grand Sherref of Morocco. In 1875 he made his seventh and last visit to the Holy Land, the land of his love. Upon his coat of arms is a flagstaff, and there from flowing a banner, on which, inscribed in Hebrew characters of gold, is the word Jerusalem. To see Palestine the seat of a Jewish state, with Jerusalem as its capital, is and has been the fond ambition and dream of his life—never to be personally realized in his time, as he himself is fully aware. But to the consummation of this wished-for end he has bent the best efforts of a longer life than is usually allotted to man. — London Christian Herald.

A little balloon filled with hydrogen gas, was recently sent up from Paris by a Russian, who attached to it a card with its name and address. The other day he was surprised to hear tidings of the balloon all the way from Russia. M. In view of the approaching coronation of the Czar, the court jewellers of St. Petersburg are now busily cleaning and repairing the jewels of the crown, the value of which is estimated at six and a half million dollars. The crown itself, valued at $600,000, is adorned with magnificent diamonds, fifty-four enormous pearls without a flaw and a ruby of extraordinary size; it is of exquisite workmanship. It was made by Pauzie, the Genevese jeweller, and was first worn at the coronation of Catherine the Great. The sceptre, which was made for the coronation of Paul I., is tipped with the famous Orloff diamond, which, like the Koh-i-noor, came from the treasury of the Grand Mogul. It remained for centuries in a conglomerate, and, passing through various hands, it was at length purchased for a paltry sum by an Armenian of the name of Lazarew, who had it cut in Amsterdam, where Alexis Orlow bought it for 450,000 roubles in order to present it to the Empress Catherine. The Orloff is eight carats heavier than the Koh-i-noor.

PRAY!

BY ADELAIDE WINCH.

If you never prayed before, pray!
Truth, hath need of prayers today—
Satan's minions crowd the way.
Pray! Pray!

Faint at sight of flashing tide,
Coward feet quick turn aside.
Loath, with dauntless to abide.
Pray! Pray!

Leaders bend to siren hand,
Go at touch of golden wand,
Sell for pottage all the land.
Pray! Pray!

Many too, for tinseled toys,
Equities, and home alloys,
Trade the infinite's fadeless joys.
Pray! Pray!

Hear you not the Savior's call,
"Snares are set alike for all,
Watch and pray, lest ye too fall."
Pray! Pray!

"Calmly from living rock,
Voice and life alike are mute,
Withered branch can bear no fruit."
Pray! Pray!

Budding figtree tells her mood,
Eastern skies aglow with red,
Betoken true what prophets said.
Pray! Pray!

Our redemption now is nigh,
Lift, oh lift the crucician cry,
"Let the day-star dawn on high!"
Pray! Pray!

THE ENDLESS LIFE.

Discourse I.—Part 2.

A DISCOURSE ON THE THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHURCH IN HAWLEY ROAD.

I desire to-day to offer a distinct answer to the question so often publicly, so much more often privately, proposed, "How is it, if this doctrine be true, and, according to its advocates, so easily to be seen to be true by careful inquirers, that such numbers of ministers of religion, whose piety, ability, knowledge, and usefulness you will be the first to acknowledge, do not perceive the force of your argument, but still apparently give the weight of their authority to the established doctrines"—1. That man is naturally immortal in his soul; 2., that Christ does not confer immortality of the soul on believers, but only holiness, and blessedness, because they are already immortal; 3., that God will inflict misery on the wicked for ever, because they, too, are by nature immortal? Why is this? Why has not this argument for Life in Christ affected these good and able men all over the world?"

To this question we reply—1. That, as a matter of fact, which we have learned by extensive inquiry, the tone and method of preaching on these subjects is greatly modified both in England and America. I believe that there are now seldom phrases as they used to be with the notion of their own natural and necessary immortality, except by Universalists. Very widely preachers have come back to the model of the Apostles, who never use anything of man's natural immortality in either body or soul. No public or formal confession is made of change of opinion, but practically the language of the orthodox preachers who have grown up during the last thirty years is far more in accord with Scripture than was the language of their predecessors. Very much more attention is paid everywhere to the doctrine of life in Christ, which, whatever it may signify, holds the central place in the New Testament;

2. Similar careful inquiry satisfies us that the whole tenor of language used in the pulpit on future punishment has undergone a great modification in nearly all Churches. Thirty years ago scarcely a sermon was preached without some phrase indicating the belief that unsaved persons, whether in Christendom or Heathendom, being immortal, would suffer for ever, would go to "endless woe," or "endless misery," or be banished from the presence of God in "eternal remorse." I believe that such unscriptural expressions are now more rarely employed, the words used in Scripture are employed instead, and left to produce their own effect on the minds of the hearers, without further commentary. Those ordinary ministers have all heard that much more enlightened Greek and Hebrew scholars than they themselves can ever hope to be, and quite equal to any on the side of traditional opinion, strongly affirm that there is no philological or psychological reason why the terms of Scripture should not be taken in their obvious sense, and naturally this has weighed with the younger men.

3. In the next place, to my certain knowledge, among the numerous ministers supposed to adhere to the old doctrine there are not a few who feel no vocation to involve themselves with the more ignorant and passionate members of their congregations, who yet distinctly acknowledge the immense modification of nearly all men's thoughts since those questions were raised at the beginning of this generation. For example: at the autumnal meeting of the Congregational Meeting in 1861, Mr. Griffith John, of Hankow in China, a notable and noble missionary, who on his previous visit to England, ten years ago, maintained, at Exeter Hall, something much like the doctrine of endless misery as the basis of mission work, now as openly argued at Manchester, for the toleration of the three distinct theories of human destiny,—everlasting misery, conditional immortality, and universal restoration, in the mission field. For myself I repudiate this loose proposal, believing that truth is one, and that only truth ought to be taught. But it is easy to see that if such is the movement of the mind among missionaries, it is much the same with ministers at home. Numbers of them are in an unsettled state of opinion, or are too busy with Church controversy to study the matter of human destiny carefully from end to end. They have forsaken their old anchorages, and are drifting they know not whither. Meantime they do not commit themselves to any definite dogma, but denounce "dogmatism," as if it were a reproach to hold a definite belief, or a belief more definite than theirs.

You will have observed that during the last thirty years no one of our honored neighbors in the ministry within the radius of a mile, whether Episcopalian or Nonconformist, has thought it necessary to oppose openly, in a controversial form, what has been taught here. If the preachers now were exactly where most men were formerly, some of these faithful men would certainly have done this. Had we denied here the Deity of Christ, or the Atonement, and diligently circulated the denial, they would, one and all, have openly remonstrated with us, and testified against us in distinct courses of sermons. But the doctrine of man's utter death by the law for sin, and of Life in Christ, was too much like the natural sense of the whole Bible for them to do so.

No one need therefore be afraid of this doctrine, simply because comparatively few Christian ministers openly declare it a controversial form in its favor. The English rule of declaration of belief is, first to avoid them scrupulously, and then publicly, after the laity is sufficiently prepared for them, and I must say, wisely, for it is in the power of one fanatical and ignorant man or woman, in any church, to frighten the whole congregation respecting their pastor's orthodoxy, and the more ignorant they are the more obstinate and unscrupulous.

4. Let us further demand of our honored neighbors and friends who hold any special faith as Scriptural, as the result of careful study, whether the circumstance of the silence of other ministers is regarded by them as a valid argument against such special belief? Do the Baptists consider the silent refusal of all the Pedobaptist ministers in England to answer their arguments, or to be affected by them, as any reason for distrusting their own conclusions? Do they not at once say, in effect,—"The Independent, Methodist, and Episcopal ministers were to this topic of baptism ill taught they are bound together by denominational ties, they have not very carefully studied this question." And do not the Independent ministers and college tutors say the very same thing of the Baptists?

Again, the belief in the advent of Christ at the end of the times of the Gentiles, to destroy Antichrist, and to establish the kingdom of God on earth for a thousand years, is now widely spread among Christian people, excepting the Independents and Baptists, who, almost to a man, repudiate it,—although nearly all their forefathers held it in the days of Puritanism. If you are one of the great company of those who hold this blessed hope, and love the appearing of the Lord, as an Apostolic Christian ought to do, does the general contempt of the dissenting ministers of England for "The Millennial Hope" in the last degree shake your faith in that which Bishop Lightfoot demonstrates to have been the primitive faith of Christendom, and which such men as Chevalier, Stoit, Alford, and a thousand others, hold to be the plain doctrine not only of St. Paul in the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, but everywhere else the doctrine of the Old and New Testaments?

We conclude then, that the still general abstinence from any open and dogmatic confession of adhesion to the doctrine of Life in Christ by the generality of Christian ministers, is not of so much weight as it might at first appear to be.

5. Especially since, in the last place, men of the greatest calibre as to knowledge and ability, and of equal weight as to Christian character and devoted-ness, are at length boldly avowing their adhesion to the truth, so long almost hopelessly proclaimed at an earlier date.

It would be easy to read a long catalogue of names of scholars and divines of every rank, and of almost every country; theologians, linguists, critics, philosophers, missionaries, who, having carefully studied these disputed doctrines on human nature and destiny, now openly and earnestly avow the conviction of their truth.

But I will take as an example the names of four distinguished men only, known to all by reputation, who have recently, in various ways, declared their assent. Professor Stokes, Mr. Dale, Mr. Thomas Walker, and Mr. Skrefsrud, of the Santhal Mission in India. These four eminent persons divide between them nearly all the graver intellectual and literary accomplishments of our time; and they are all devout and earnest Christians—spiritual, and not simply formally religious men. Professor Stokes, Secretary to the Royal Society, and Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge, brings to bear on the study of Scripture, a mind which is the finest result of University culture in habits of calm and exact thought. Mr. Dale is sufficiently well known as an accomplished and well-balanced theologian, all whose tendencies lie in the direction of evangelical orthodoxy. Mr. Thomas Walker, formerly editor of the Daily News, adds to a large acquaintance with European literature, and a habit of Biblical study, an intimate knowledge of the unbelieving world, and the causes of their objection, which he has set forth in his recent critique on Mr. Tennyson's poem on Despair. Mr. Skrefsrud stands in the front rank of Indian philologists, and is now employed by the Indian Government in writing a Comparative Grammar in seventeen languages, so that he knows more than most men the force and signification of Asiatic words. He is also, as you know, one of the most devoted and successful missionaries now living. These four distinguished men, with no leaning whatever towards heresy, after the most careful study of the questions concerned, and knowing all the critical devices by which the argument for Life in Christ is usually met and entangled in the popular religious magazines, have all recently declared their clear and firm assent to the doctrine that the hope of human immortality is in Christ alone, and that this hope is restricted to men who are "born again" of the Spirit.

Now, as I have mentioned names on one side, I will mention one honored name on the other. No one yields to me in hearty admiration and affection for the Rev. Charles Spurgeon. But his refusal to listen to the doctrine of Life in Christ has formed a more serious obstacle to its popular diffusion than that of any other living man during the last twenty years. Now, the interests of truth (not my own infallibility) compel me to say, whether the decided judgment and belief of four such scholars and thinkers as I have mentioned, men who have carefully studied this matter, ought not, if opinions are to be influenced by authority, to outweigh a hundred times, the opposition of even the most popular preacher on earth, from whom we have never once been able to extract a deliberate and reasoned statement in reply to this positive and cumulative argument; but who simply persists in repeating, year after year, that life in the Bible, does not signify life, but something else; and that death signifies separation from God in a state of sin and misery for ever. Frankly, I regard the deliberate judgment of four such modern inquirers, and of Irenæus (A. D. 100) as of much greater weight than that of Mr. Spurgeon.

GLIMPSES AT THE SYRIA OF THE PRESENT.

The old Tyropœum valley, which cuts the city of Jerusalem from north to south and extends from the western hill of the city (the falsely so-called Mount Zion) to the hill of the Temple has been from most ancient times the industrial quarter. It is in these densely peopled lanes and streets that the degeneracy and decline of the Jewish people is most evident. By a long stay in the Orient one becomes accustomed to many things that are found here, and yet over and again he is most unpleasantly surprised by unwholesome orders and accumulations of filth encountered in the narrow lanes of this quarter, swarming with an unwashed population.

Numerous vaulted alleys and covered passage-ways afford opportunity for this general filthiness, for in their obscure nooks and corners are piled together things of every kind in all the stages of putrefaction and decay. In the eastern bazaar alley which extends in a southerly direction into the Jewish quarter, are, if possible, greater accumulations of filth and refuse than elsewhere. Small work and antiquarian shops and wine rooms that are scarcely enticing, abound in this locality.

Disgusting to a stranger are the meat markets, which in unappetizing and disease-breeding odors excel even those of the Moslem bazaars. The ground near them is soaked with the blood of slaughtered animals; bloody heads of lambs and goats are piled in front of the markets, and hides as soon as removed are stretched upon the surface of the street in order to be tanned, in the easiest way, by the feet of the multitude that unceasingly passes.

The people of this quarter give the impression of a physically degenerate race. A pale, sickly look characterizes them all. The women are small and scantily built, generally with blonde or reddish hair and gray or light blue eyes. The cut of their clothing reminds one of European style, but the large white linen cloth, which they wind about the head, banishes from their appearance the last element of grace. Among the men there are occasionally found some of remarkably large stature, yet even these have a haggard look.

A very large portion of the Jews at Jerusalem live, as is well known, upon the charity of their wealthy European co-religionists without further occupation than the conduct of religious study and exercises. These last consist in maintaining regular prayers, and are commonly carried on under the direction of their European benefactors.

Of Jewish craftsmen there are but few, chiefly stone cutters and workers in a limited way in metals. The Bazaars of Jerusalem are not to be compared with those of Cairo, or of Damascus. Excepting, perhaps, the products of certain saddlery and shoe making establishments, there is nothing to be seen in their vaulted and gloomy shops that lays any claim to originality or good workmanship. It is evident enough that their stock in trade is designed exclusively for the poorest class of Jews, and for Bedouins. The grain and fruit markets with large heaps of various kinds of grain, are interesting. Here one meets many Bedouins from the Haulan and Jericho valley. Their women bring milk, cheese, oranges, lemons, cucumbers and olives to sell; and, at a convenient distance from their husband, sit down upon the ground with their wares before them in decorated metallic vessels, or upon palm-leaf baskets. Of late for caravans Jerusalem has but few, a fact explained by the lack of extensive trade and industry.

The unwearying commercial spirit of the Jewish race is throughout Syria, checked by fear of the government to which, under an oppressive and exhausting system, a wealthy Jew is legitimate plunder. There is, however, in the city of Jerusalem a large number of small Jewish traders and merchants, and in respect to honesty and trustworthiness they stand in the same good repute as the modern Arabians—a reputo which the Christian merchants of Syria do not in general enjoy.

Among the Ashkenasim there are said to be at the present time a number of very wealthy families who have wandered to Jerusalem from other lands. Besides a first precaution, to put themselves under the care of the consul, they take others also, and live in the simplest manner possible, avoiding all display that might draw on them the eye of the Turkish government. The synagogues and numerous costly buildings for charitable institutions, erected here by the families of Rothschild and Montefiore, and by associations of large Jewish firms in England, France and Germany, have, during the last few years, extended considerably the Jewish quarter.

That a real improvement in the distressing state of the political relations of the Jews at Jerusalem would not be brought about by these lavish contributions of their co-religionists, was, and still is, perfectly clear to the persons whose interests are concerned. Upon the recognition of this fact was based the now almost forgotten scheme to found a great Syrio-Jewish colony in old Gilead and Moab. An area of 800,000 hektors, at present inhabited by nomadic Bedouins, was to be the territory of this new Jewish kingdom. At its head was to stand a prince of Jewish race, but he was never to be under the supremacy of the Turkish government. The entire plan was laid before the Sultan by the English embassy, and no decided opposition was encountered. The initiatory steps toward compassing the financial part of the undertaking were successful. The scheme involved the construction of two railroads—one from Joppa to Jerusalem, the other from Haifa to the country beyond Jordan—and of a canal from the Mediterranean to the Gulf of Akabat. The leading spirit in this enterprise, which, it seems, is aimed at financial rather than religious objects, is reputed to have been a well known English diplomat.—D. Temple, in Hebrew Student.

Youths' Column.

The Old Homestead.

Ah, here it is, the dear old place
I've longed through all these years,
How like some sweet familiar face
My childhood's home appears.
The grand old trees behind the door,
Still spread their branches wide:
The river wanders as of yore,
With sweetly running tide:
The distant hills look green and gray,
The flowers are blooming wild:
And every thing looks glad to-day
As when I was a child.

How careless how the years have flown.
Half wondering I stand,
I catch no fond endearing tone,
I clasp no friendly hand:
I think to see mother's smile to greet,
To hear my father's call,
I pause to hear my brother's feet
Come bounding through the hall:
But silence all around me reigns,
A chill creeps through my heart;
No trace of those I love remains,
And tears unbidden start.

What though the sunbeam fall as fair,
What though the budding flowers
Still shed their fragrance on the air
Within life's golden hours?
The loving ones that clustered here
Three walls may not bedew;
Voices that filled my youthful ear
Will greet my soul no more,
And yet I quit the dear old place
With slow and lingering tread,
As when we kiss a cold dead face
And leave it with the dead.

How a Little Child's Life Was Saved.

Last Thursday afternoon a woman, looking from her back window in the city of Newberg, saw in the house opposite a little child hanging from a window sill, but kept from falling by a dog, who had caught the child's dress in its teeth. The woman had left her baby, 18 months old, on the floor of the front room playing with her toys and a little terrier dog that is its constant companion. The mother was away just three minutes, but when she came back and opened the door her infant's head, arms and shoulders were hanging beyond the stone sill of an open window, and near it, with its feet on a chair, stood the little dog, holding on to the child across the dress. Her child, unconscious of any danger, was crowing at some object in the yard, while the dog holding on the dress, looked a mute appeal for haste and help. In an instant she was by her baby's side, and the danger was passed. When the dog had been relieved of his burden he pranced around the mother and child with a delight that was almost frantic.

Character in the Home.

Home life is the sure test of character. Let a husband be cross and surly, and the wife grows cold and unamiable. The children grow up saucy and savage as young bears. The father becomes callous, peevish, hard; a kind of two-legged brute within clothes on. The wife bristles in self-defense. They develop an unnatural growth and sharpness of teeth, and the house is haunted by ugliness and domestic brawls. This is not what the family circle should be. If one must be rude to any, let it be to some one he does not love—not to wife, brother, or parent. Let one of the loved ones be taken away, and memory recalls a thousand sayings to regret. Death quickens recollection painfully. The grave cannot hide the white faces of those who sleep. The coffin and green ground are cruel magnets. They draw us farther than we would go. They force us to remember. A man never sees so far into human life as when he looks over a wife's or mother's grave. His eyes get wonderous clear then, and he sees as never before what it is to love and be loved; what it is to injure the feelings of the loved. It is a pitiable picture of human weakness when those we love best are treated worst.

The Shining Light.

The night was dark, and as the wind whistled through the trees, it all seemed dreary to Ludwig, a woodchopper's boy, for not being able to find his path, because even the stars were all hidden behind the heavy clouds—he was lost. How desolate he felt; he could only grope his way, now getting his feet entangled in the underbrush, now stumbling over a hidden slope, tired and hungry and sad. No wonder he was sad when he remembered how his mother was impatiently waiting for his return, and no wonder that he was hungry when he thought of the good bread and cream-cheese that were to have made his supper.

I wonder what you would have done out in that black forest, all alone. Perhaps you know that his mother had taught him to carry all of his cares and troubles to God. He had not forgotten that, and, kneeling down upon the dried leaves, he told God all about it—how he had become lost, and how tired and hungry he was. Besides, he acknowledged his helplessness to get out of this great trouble, and asked his Heavenly Father to lead him home.

He arose from his knees, greatly comforted, for he knew that he was safe. God loves to help us when we throw ourselves upon his mercy, and trust ourselves to him; that is what the Bible means when it teaches us to "ask in faith, believing."

Ludwig not only asked God, but he believed that help would come. When he stood up to look about him, the trees were just as high, the night as dark, and the winds as rough, but he turned to look first one way, then another, expecting relief. You will not doubt that his heart throbbed with joy when at last he saw the twinkle of a light, a light shining out into the darkness. His knew what it was: it meant for him, rest, love, and home. Keeping his eye fixed upon the light, he soon got back again to the path from which he had strayed, and ere long he stood before the candle which his anxious mother had placed in the window to guide him to safety.

Do you love to carry your troubles to God, and do you ask his help believing that he can and will grant it? Above all, do you let your light, the light of your example, shine out in the midst of the sin and darkness of the world, that a lost brother or friend may be guided by it in his wanderings and brought at last safe to the heavenly home?—N. Y. Observer.

The Anointing at Bethany.

How prone am I to forget that Jesus needed human sympathy! Was it not among his most bitter afflictions that he so often suffered internally from exhausted vital energy, and no one about him saw how his life was racked out of him, and no one soothed him? There was an hour of trial at the beginning of the Great Teacher's last week on earth. He knew the awful work before him, but he did not allow himself to be turned from the path of ordinary duty. He went as he was invited, and took his meals in the midst of those whom he had loved and saved—with Simon, whose leprosy he had probably cured; Lazarus, whom he had certainly recalled from the dead, and Martha and Mary, whom he had consoled with such divine consolations in their bereavement.

And, dear Mary—how sweet was her service! She could not do too much for that dear friend who had given her back her brother from the grave in the hour when her heart was breaking with sorrow. Perhaps she had been saving all her little earnings and denying herself many a bodily comfort and ornament that she might make some approach to a suitable recognition of a debt of love which she could never discharge. It was such a sweet instinct with her when she found that she, a plain woman, who had never done a worthy deed before in all her life, had now enough to buy what none but the wealthy ever purchased. Some caravan, perhaps from India had brought this costly ointment to Jerusalem. Perhaps she bought it secretly and kept her sweet secret from even Martha and Lazarus. Perhaps she waited for the proper moment to pour the rich contents of the alabaster on the Friend's head. Perhaps she often asked herself how he might like it. But she could not do for him anything useful. He needed nothing. There was nothing she could buy for him. He needed no home comforts, for he had no home. He needed no rest, for he always walked. He needed no clothes, as he wore a simple, seamless garment, and carried no luggage. He needed nothing, but her heart needed to find vent in that which should beat his admiration and take the place of caresses she could not give.

So may my heart be filled with longings to do that which will honor and satisfy my Lord. And when I do it, Lord, make shod for me such a lovely apology as thou didst for Mary.

But how I stand rebuked by this saying—"She hath done what she could!" What's sublime eulogy! Have I done what I could to make the world know that I feel that all I have I owe to Jesus, and that nothing is too good for him? Have not I rather been controlled by ideas of utility, and so lost the beautiful without giving the useful? Have not I sometimes excused my failure in one department by setting up the claims of another? Does doing great things keep one from doing small things? Who did most for the poor, Judas Iscariot or Mary of Bethany? Lord, search me, and try me! Fill me with love, and my spiritual instincts will be healthy.—Dr. Dewar.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $360. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the papers send the contributions to THE RESTITUTION [illegible] paper be [illegible] Will Ofterors." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be sent gratuitously will thank God bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

IT IS WELL.

"Is it well with thee, and well with thy husband, and well with the child?" And she said, It is well."—2 Kings iv. 26.

Yes, it is well! The evening shadows lengthen;
Heaven's golden gates fall on our ravished sight,
And though the leaden fear we strove to strengthen Break one by one—at evening time 'tis light.

'Tis well! The way was often dull and weary:
The spirit fainted oft beneath its load;
No sunshine comes from hearts all gray and dreary,
And yet our feet were bound to tread that road.

'Tis well that not again our hearts shall shiver
Beneath old sorrows, once so hard to bear;
That not again beneath death's darksome river
Shall we deplore the good, the loved, the fair.

No more with tears, wrought from deep, hard anguish,
Shall we behold the dear hopes crushed and gone:
No more need we in doubt and fear to languish;
So far the day is past, the journey done!

As vanguards, by fierce winds beat and broken,
Come into port, beneath a calmer sky,
So we, still bearing on our brow the token
Of tempest past, draw to our haven nigh.

A sweet air cometh from the shore immortal,
Inviting Homeward at the day's decline:
Almost we see where from the open portal
Fair forms stand beckoning with their smiles divine.

'Tis well; the earth with all her myriad voices
Has lost the power our senses to enthrall;
We hear, above the tumult and the noises,
Soft tones of music, like an angel's call.

'Tis well, O friends. We would not turn—retracing
The long, vain years, nor call our lost youth back;
Gladly, with spirits braced, the future facing,
We leave behind the dusty, foot-worn track.

DANIEL CHAPTER VIII.

1. In the third year of the royalty of Belteshazzar the king, a vision was made manifest unto me, I, Daniel after (ve-anee) the sovereignty was seen by me;

2. Yea, also in Susa, the place of official power, which is in a province of Elam and I was upon the bank of the Ubal.

3. And I lifted up my eyes and saw, and lo, a ram was standing before the Ubal, and his horns were high and one was higher than the other, and the high one arose last.

4. And I saw the ram butting toward the west and north and south; and none [illegible] would stand before him, neither was there any to deliver [illegible] out of [illegible] understanding. And the goat of goats came from the south upon the face of all the earth, and he did not touch the earth, and the he-goat's horn was between his eyes;

6. And he came as far as the ram who had the horns, the one I saw standing before the Ubal, and he ran toward him in the impetus of his strength;

7. And I saw him draw nigh unto the ram and he became exasperated against him; and he smote the ram and crushed both his horns; and the ram had no strength to stand before him; and he threw him upon the earth and trod upon him, and there was no one to deliver the ram out of his hand.

8. And the he-goat of the goats became magnified exceedingly; and while he was strong his great horn was broken, and four other horns arose beneath it towards the four winds of the heavens;

9. And from one of them there come out a strong horn, and it became exceedingly magnified toward the south and toward the ability to [illegible] (tzeb dunamis commonly translated "the host").

10. And it became magnified even unto the ability of the heavens, and there fell from the ability of the heavens and from the stars, and they trod them down;

11. And until the time when the Chief Captain shall have rescued the captivity, even for his sake hath sacrifice been thrown into a state of disorder; and by him hath it been restored to a right way, and the sanctuary will have been laid desolate;

12. And sin hath been allowed upon the sacrifice, and righteousness hath been hurled to the ground. And he (the Chief Captain) did and was prospered.

13. And I heard a saint talking; and a saint said to his fellow (re pehyoni, not a Greek word but translated in the Douay "fellow" and in King James version "that certain saint") who was talking, until when will the vision stand, namely the sacrifice that hath been taken away, and the sin of desolation that hath been allowed, and the sanctuary and the ability have been trodden down?

14. And he said unto him, until an evening and a morning two thousand four hundred days, and the sanctuary will have been cleansed.

15. And it came to pass, when I Daniel saw the vision, I also sought understanding, and lo there stood before me, as it were a vision of a man,

16. And I heard a man's voice in the middle of the Oubal, and he called and said, Gabriel, make this one understand the vision.

17. And he came and stood next to where I was standing, and when he had come I was astounded, and fell upon my face, and he said unto me, understand, O son of man. For the vision is still unto the end of a period,

18. And while he was talking with me I fell upon my face upon the ground, and he touched me, and stood me upon my feet,

19. And said, lo I make thee to comprehend the things that are about to be at the close of the wrath. For the vision is still unto the end of a period.

20. The ram which thou sawest, the one that had the horns is a king of the Medes and Persians.

21. The goat of the goats, a king of the Greeks; and the great horn which was between his eyes it is the first king,

22. And the four horns which arose beneath it when it was crushed, are four kings who will have arisen from out his nation, and not in their own strength.

23. And at the close of their royalty when their sins have been fulfilled, a king will have arisen fierce of countenance and who understandeth military strategy (memkeren—problmata),

24. And his strength will be mighty and he will corrupt wonderfully, and will prosper and will do, and will corrupt exceedingly, even a sanctified royal people.

25. And the yoke of his collar will prosper. Deceit in his hand and in his heart will have been magnified, and with deceit will he corrupt many, and he will stand upon the loss of many, and as it were eggs will he crush with his hand.

26. And the Vision of the evening and the morning that hath been spoken is true, and do thou seal the vision, because it is for many days.

27. And I Daniel slept and was indisposed, and I arose and did the works of the king, and wondered at the vision and there was no one who understood it.

EXODUS CHAPTER XV. 1-22.

1. Let us sing unto the Lord. For he hath been glorified gloriously—Horse and rider hath he cast into the sea.

2. A helper and a coverer hath he become unto me even to the extent of salvation. He is my God and I will glorify him. My father's God and I will exalt him;

3. A lord who hath crushed enemies, Lord is his name.

4. Pharaoh's chariots and his ability (hayan—dunamis) hath he cast into the sea, chosen rulers who stood third in rank, they were engulfed in a Red Sea.

5. With a deep sea he covered them. Into a depth they sank like a stone.

6. Thy right hand, O Lord, hath been glorified with strength; thy right hand, O Lord hath terrified enemies;

7. And in the plenitude of thy glory, thou hast crushed the adversaries thou didst send forth thy wrath: It devoured them like stubble.

8. And at the breath of thine anger the water stood apart. Like a wall the waters were led up; the waves were led up in the midst of the sea.

9. The enemy said, Pursuing I will overtake, I will distribute spoils, I will astonish my life, I will take up my sword; my hand will lord it.

10. Thou didst send forth thy breath. A sea covered them. They sunk down like a plummet of lead in much water.

11. Who among gods is like to thee O Lord, who is like to thee? Thou who hast been glorified in saints, thou who art wonderful in glories, thou who doest wonders.

12. Thou didst stretch forth thy right hand. Earth drank them down.

13. Thou didst guide this thy royal people, whom thou didst redeem, with thy strength thou didst help thy sanctified one unto a place of rest.

14. Nations heard and became wrathful. Woes seized hold upon dwellers in Philisteiem.

15. Then did haste leaders of Edom and rulers of Moabites. Trembling seized hold upon them. All those who dwelt in Canaan melted away.

16. Trembling and fear fell upon them. With the greatness of thy right arm let them be petrified until thy royal people shall have passed by, O Lord, until this thy royal people whom thou hast acquired shall have passed by.

17. Do thou whom thou hast led them in, plant them in a mountain of thine inheritance, in thy dwelling-place prepared, which thou hast restored to order, O Lord, a place of sanctification which thy hands, O Lord, have made ready,

18. O Lord, thou who art King for the age and unto an age and still on.

19. Because Pharaoh with chariots and riders went down into the sea, and the Lord led over them the water of the sea; but the sons of Israel went their way by dry land in the midst of the sea.

20. And Mariam (Mary) the prophetess the sister of Aaron when she had taken a tympanum in her hand, and all the women after with tympanums and in choral throngs went out.

21. And Mariam led them, saying, Let us sing unto the Lord, for he hath been glorified gloriously; horse and rider hath he cast into the sea.

DANIEL CHAPTER XII.

1. And in that period Michael the great ruler (sarem—archon) will stand up, the one who standeth over the sons of thy royal people; and there will be a period of tribulation, tribulation such as there hath not been since the time when there came to be a nation on the earth until this period. In this period thy royal people every one who hath been written in the book will have been saved;

2. And many of those who sleep in earth's dust will have been awakened to life, these unto everlasting life and those unto reproach and everlasting shame.

3. And those who understand will shine, as it were the shining of the firmament, as it were the stars, because of the many just ones, for the ages and still on.

4. And do thou Daniel seal up the words and seal the book until a period's consummation until many shall have been taught and comprehension shall have been enlarged.

5. And I Daniel saw and lo, two others stood, one on this side of the brink of the river and one on that side of the brink of the river.

6. And said unto the man who was clothed in fine linen, and who was over the water of the river, until when is the end of the wonders of which thou hast spoken?

7. And I heard the man who was clothed in fine linen, and who was over the water of the river, and he raised his right hand and his left toward the heavens and swore by the One Who Liveth Forever, that it was until a period of periods and half of a period: when the dispersation shall have been consummated shall all these things be comprehended.

8. And I heard and did not understand and said, O Lord, what are the last of these things?

9. And he said, come hither Daniel, because these words have been shut up and sealed up until a period's end;

10. Will they have been chosen out and made white and purified with fire, and many will have been sanctified. And transgressors will transgress, and no transgressors will understand, and some who think will understand.

11. And from a period when the daily sacrifice is taken away, there will have been allowed the abomination of desolation for one thousand two hundred and ninety days.

12. Happy is the one who expecteth and attaineth unto one thousand three hundred and thirty-five days.

13. And do thou come hither and rest, for there are yet days and hours unto the fulfilment of a consummation, and thou shalt have stood up in thy lot in a consummation of days.

DANIEL CHAPTER IX. 17-27.

17. And now O Lord our God hear the prayer of thy bond-servant, and his supplications, and show thy face over thy place of sanctification which is desolate, for thine own sake, O Lord.

18. Incline thine ear, O my God, and hear. Open thine eyes and see our desolation and that of thy city upon which thy name hath been invoked. Because not on account of our own acts of righteousness do we cast our appeal for pity before thee; but in view of thy many expressions of pity, O Lord,

19. Hear O Lord, be merciful O Lord, attend O Lord. Mayest thou not have tarried O my God, for thine own sake, because thy name hath been invoked upon thy city and upon thy royal people.

20. And while I was yet speaking and praying and enumerating my sins and those of my royal people, Israel, and casting my [illegible] for mercy before the Lord my God in behalf of his sacred mountain;

21. Even while I was yet speaking in my prayer, lo even a man Gabriel, him whom I saw in the beginning (rishon) flying, and he touched me, about the hour of the evening sacrifice.

22. And he enlightened me and talked with me and said, Daniel, I have come out now to give thee understanding to

23. The extent of thy prayer. Word went forth and I have come to declare it unto thee, because thou art a man who longeth with desire; and be thou of an apprehending mind in the spoken word (and—remer) and understand the vision.

24. Seventy weeks, (heptads) have been cut short (abridged) for thy royal people, and for the sacred city in which to consummate sin, and to seal up sins, and to wipe out the iniquities, and to atone for iniquity, and to lead in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up vision and prophet, and to anoint a Saint of saints.

25. And mayest thou have comprehended and thou wilt understand that from the going forth of the word (see word in 23d verse) to give answer (answer to Daniel's prayer) and to build Jerusalem until an Anointed Leader, is seven weeks* and sixty-two weeks; and they (thy royal people) will return and public square and wall will have been built, and the periods of time will have been emptied out.

26. And after the sixty-two weeks ointment will have been utterly destroyed and there will be no judicial efficacy in it; and the city and the sanctuary will they (thy royal people) corruptly destroy along with the Leader who cometh. They (the city and Leader) will have been swept away in a flood, and unto the end of a war that hath been cut short (abridged) will they (thy royal people) array (military term) for desolations.

27. And (as the Leader) will confirm a covenant with many for one week, and in the half of the week my sacrifice and libation will have been taken away and upon the temple site (upat—hieron) will there be an abomination of desolating (influences), and until the consummation of a period, a consummation will have been allowed for the desolating (influence).

CONSENT.

These periods as above given worked out on the scale as given in last article based upon the type in the Book of Numbers is as follows:

7 divided by 4 equals 1.75 multiplied into 30 equals 52.50 years: 62 by 4 equals 15.50 into 30 equals 465.00 years; 70 by 4 equals 17.50 into 30 equals 520.00 years; 52.50 add 465, equals 517.50 years equals the point of time at which Daniel stands when his prayer is answered. Now we learned in last article that the "date from the fall of the captivity in Babylon to Christ or the Anointed Leader" was according to the type 444 4-0 yrs. Let us see how this bears as practical test now from this prophecy of Daniel. The most reliable historical dates on side of the Scriptures give the final carrying away into Babylon 588 before Christ. Daniel is standing at a point subsequent to this; and the same sources of information give the date of the return, the building of the public square and wall of Jerusalem "to be 444 years before Christ; (the type was 444 4-0 rebuilding). Now the reason Daniel gives at the beginning of this chapter for making the rebuilding of Jerusalem a subject of special prayer seems to be that he knew from sacred writings that the 70 years of Jerusalem's desolation was about expiring. Let us see now how the historical dates and the type correspond. 588 less 70 equal 518 (type says 517.50); 518 less 444 equals 74, (type says 517.50 less 444 4-0 equals 70 plus). Now the remaining period a separate 7 must be considered separately and only. In connection with "the confirming of the covenant with many" in the half of it that is not cut off or abridged. According to the type it is 625 less 517.50 equals 7.50 divided by 2 equals 3.75 years. As I understand it this period has had two fulfilments. One in the ministry period of Christ (or an Anointed Leader as David calls him) and the other in the final siege and destruction of Jerusalem when idolatry and idolatrous sacrifice is set up in Jerusalem and upon the site of God's house. The rest of text explains itself I think.

CHAS. GARDNER.

*Sabbatic — Athanasius — because any period of seven and I have simply followed the usual interpretation to translate it "weeks." Of course it does not mean a literal week, and I doubt whether it would not be better to simply translate it "seventy sevens."

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 8.

THE TOMB OF DAVID.

On the southern brow of Zion, outside the modern walls, there is a little group of buildings distinguished from afar by a dome and lofty minaret. These, according to an old tradition, believed in alike by Jews, Christians, and Mohammedans, cover the sepulchre of Israel's ministrel king. As matters now stand the truth of the tradition can neither be proved nor disproved. The Turks esteem the spot one of their very holiest shrines, and they will neither examine it themselves nor permit others to do so. No place about Jerusalem, not even the Haram, is guarded with such jealousy. I visited the building frequently: I walked round and through it: I peeped into every hole, window, and passage accessible to me: I tried soft words and true: a liberal bakhshish with the gentlemanly old keepers but it was all in vain; I saw no more than my predecessors had done.

The principal apartment in the group of buildings is a Gothic chamber, evidently a Christian church of the crusading age, though probably built on an older site, or perhaps reconstructed out of an earlier model. Tradition has filled it with "holy places," making it the scene of the Last Supper (hence its name Coenaculum), of the meeting after the Resurrection, of the miracle of Pentecost, of the residence and death of the Virgin, and of the burial of Stephen. At its eastern end is a little chancel where Romish priests sometimes celebrate mass; and on the south side is a mihrab where Moslems pray. It is thus a grand centre of tradition, superstition, and imposture.

The crypt is the real holy place. A portion of it has been walled off and consecrated as a mosque-mausoleum. So sacred is it, that none have the entree, not even Muslem santons or grandees—except the sheikh who keeps it, and the members of his family. Furer, a German traveller of the sixteenth century, tells us he gained access to it, and he probably saw the interior. In 1839 Sir Moses Montefiore was permitted to approach an iron railing and look into the chamber which contains the tomb; but he could not enter. The Jew is shut out alike from the Temple and tombs of his fathers.

Miss Barclay, a young American lady, (daughter of the author of "The City of the Great King,") has been more fortunate. She gained admission to the mausoleum with a female friend, a near relative of the keeper; she spent an hour in the sanctuary, took a sketch of the interior, and has given us the following description of what she saw: "The room is insignificant in its dimensions, but is furnished very gorgeously. The tomb is apparently an immense sarcophagus of rough stone, and is covered by green satin tapestry, richly embroidered with gold. A satin canopy of red, blue, green, and yellow stripes hangs over the tomb, and another piece of black velvet tapestry, embroidered in silver, covers a door in one end of the room which, they said, leads to a cave underneath. Two tall silver candlesticks stand before this door, and a little lamp hangs in a window near it, which is kept constantly burning.... The ceiling of the room is vaulted, and the walls covered with blue porcelain in floral figure."

Such then is the present state of the reputed tomb of David. It is well known, however, that the Muslems carefully shut up their most sacred shrines, and construct others either directly over them or close beside them, which they visit and venerate as the real places. So it is at the tomb of Abraham in Hebron, and so, doubtless, it is here. The real sepulchre, if there at all, is in a vault beneath, and the door mentioned by Miss Barclay probably leads to it. No fact in the Word of God is more plainly stated than this, that David and most of his successors on the throne of Israel were buried in the city of David, that is, in Zion. 1 Kings ii. 10; xi. 43; xv. 24, etc. The royal sepulchres were well known after the return of the Jews from Babylon, and Nehemiah, in describing (describes their position (lit. 1? 16 Josephus says that Solomon, David with great pomp, and [illegible] treasures in his tomb: [illegible] remained undisturbed until Hyr[illegible] when besieged by Antiochus, opened one room and took out three thousand talents to buy off the enemy. Herod the Great also plundered the tomb; and it is said that two of his guards were killed by a flame that burst upon them when engaged in the sacrilegious act. We have still later testimony to the preservation of the tomb in the words of the apostle Peter regarding David: "His sepulchre is with us unto this day." Acts ii. 29. We hear no more of it till the 12th century, when Benjamin of Tudela relates the following strange story, which I insert as perhaps having some slight foundation in fact:—

"On Mount Zion are the sepulchres of the house of David. In consequence of the following circumstance, this place is hardly to be recognised. Fifteen years ago one of the walls of the church on Zion fell down, and the patriarch ordered the priest to repair it, and to take the stones requisite from the old wall of Zion.... Two laborers when thus employed, found a stone which covered the mouth of a cave. This they entered in search of treasures, and reached a large hall, supported by pillars of marble, encrusted with gold and silver, and before which stood a table with a golden sceptre and crown. This was the sepulchre of David; to the left they saw that of Solomon in a similar state; and on the sepulchres of the other kings buried there. They saw sheets locked up, and went on the point of entering, when a blast of wind rushing out threw them lifeless to the ground. They lay there senseless until evening, and then they heard a voice commanding them to go forth from the place. The patriarch on hearing the story ordered the tomb to be walled up." The royal sepulchres were doubtless hewn in the rock, like all those of great men in that age; and they must still exist. Excavation, or at least a full exploration of the place, will alone solve the mystery. Of one thing we may be assured, that the sepulchre of David cannot have been far distant from the building now said to stand over it.

TOPHET.

On one occasion, after a long visit to Zion, I walked down through the terraced corn-fields on its southern declivity into the deep glen of Hinnom. The sun was low in the west, and the ravine, with its rugged cliffs, and dusky olive groves, was thrown into deep shadow. Not a human being was there, and no sound from the city broke in upon the silence. The high rocks along the whole southern bank are honey-combed with tombs, whose dark mouths made the place look still more gloomy. Already the jackals had left their lairs, and numbers of them ran out and in of the sepulchres, and prowling among the rocks and through the olive trees. As I wandered on down Hinnom towards the Kidron I observed that the tombs became more and more numerous, until at length, at the junction of the valleys, every available spot in the surrounding cliffs and rocks was excavated. They are mostly plain chambers, or groups of chambers opening into each other, hewn in the soft limestone, without any attempt at ornament, save, here and there, a moulding round the door. I observed a few Hebrew and Greek inscriptions, but of late date — certainly not older than the ninth or tenth century.

Here, in the mouth of Hinnom, was situated the Tophet of the Bible,—originally, perhaps, a "music bower," or "pleasure garden" of Solomon's; but afterwards desecrated by lust, and defiled by the offerings of Baal and the fires of [illegible] horrid rites, celebrated with blood, of human sacrifice and [illegible] lewdness."

It finally became so notorious for its abominations that it was regarded as the "very type of hell," and the name of the valley, Ge-Hinnom, in Greek Gehenna, was given by the Jews to the infernal region. Jeremiah gives some terrible sketches of the fearful atrocities perpetrated in this spot in the name of religion (vii. 31); and he depicts the judgment which the Lord pronounced on the city and people on account of them, xix. 6–15. Standing on the brink of the valley I saw how literally one part of the curse had been fulfilled:—"Wherefore the days come when it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of Ben-Hinnom, but the valley of Slaughter; for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place." vii. 32. And as I returned that evening up the Kidron to my home on Olivet, I say what seemed to me another terrible illustration of the outpouring of the curse. I saw hyenas, jackals, and vultures tearing the corpses from the shallow graves in the modern Jewish cemetery. With what harrowing vividness did the prophet's dire prediction then flash upon my mind.—Their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof." xix. 7, 8.

ACELDAMA.

On another occasion I went to the necropolis of Tophet with a double purpose,—to explore the rock-tombs more thoroughly, and to see the paintings of the Valley of Jehoshaphat, which the lamented Mr. Seddon was just then completing. He had pitched his little tent at the door of an old sepulchre on the brow of the hill, and as we approached an armed goat-herd was before him, whom he was working into the foreground. I was quietly delighted and surprised at the boldness of design, the faithfulness of coloring, and the scrupulous accuracy of detail in that admirable picture. He kindly left his work, and walked away with us to Aceldama. Another artist was of our party, whose brilliant genius was then reproducing, with all the vividness of the Morning, and a fresh and rare selection of music. At an appendix he adds a selection of Favorite Hymns, whose music is to a somewhat more [illegible] than the words. Those having (as Christian Psalmodist) ... [illegible] ... will find this work all they will want. Price 60 cts.; cloth $1.00.

Important archæological discoveries have just been made at Mitla, a village in Mexico, which is situated between twenty and thirty miles from Oaxaca, in the table land of Misteca-pan. Extensive remains of old palaces and tombs have been revealed, and they are exceptionally remarkable from the columns supporting the roof, a style of architecture peculiar to the district of Mexico in which they have been found. These ruins have been explored by Mess. Emil Hestrenger although he was not permitted to excavate the sites. In describing the ruins Herr Hestrenger states that the chief hall contains three columns, and is 80 yards long by 5 broad. Each column is 20 feet in thickness, and is of rough stone. The roof, which is covered by three doorways, was used as the sanctuary for the Royal Guards. The tombs are all of equal size and T shaped. The walls are embellished with floral devices.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
THE RESTITUTION advocates the Apostolic "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," as a means to that end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on this earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

WILL THE INVASION AND DESTRUCTION OF GOG OCCUR AT THE ADVENT?

I take the liberty to reproduce an article on the above subject for THE RESTITUTION, which I wrote for the Gospel Banner, published in Nov., 1886. B. WILSON.

There are many persons who both speak and write about the events described in Ezek. xxxviii and xxxix, as though it was an undoubted and settled truth, that they must inevitably occur at the advent of the Messiah. This has probably arisen from viewing the events described by Ezekiel as synchronous and identical with those foretold by Zechariah in chap. xiv. 1–11, and by Daniel in chaps. xi and xii. And as the invasion of "the king of the north" is spoken of in immediate connection with the standing up of Michael—the time of trouble—the deliverance of Israel, and the resurrection of the dead, many persons think that they are warranted to assert that the invasion of Gog is identical with it, and therefore his overthrow will take place at the advent. And also since Ezekiel speaks of the motive which will induce Gog to go up "to take a spoil, and to take a prey," from those who have been gathered out of the countries, and who are dwelling securely in the land of unwalled villages, another conclusion is arrived at, viz., that the restoration of Israel, or at least a partial one, must take place prior to the advent.

That the Messiah will come at that time is inferred from what is said in Zech. xiv. 4, 5.—"And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, . . . and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." And also from Dan. xii. 1—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people," etc. These two references are thought to refer to one period, when all nations will be gathered together against Jerusalem to battle, and when "the king of the north" shall come to his end, and none shall help him—but we see no evidence that the Gogian invasion will occur at the same time. Both Daniel and Zechariah connect the events they describe with the advent of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead, while Ezekiel makes no mention of either, but speaks of a state of things subsequent to both, viz., the settlement of the children of Israel in their own land.

There is no positive testimony that the restoration of Israel will be pre-adventual. It is part of Messiah's future work "to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel;" therefore he must first come, and employ such means, as in his wisdom, will accomplish this end. That there will be Jews in the land at the time of his coming, we have no reason to doubt. There always have been some; and commercial and political advantages may increase their number. But that there will be a gathering such as seems to be indicated by Ezekiel when Gog invades the land, before the auspicious and glorious apocalypse of Christ takes place, will scarcely admit of a serious consideration. We do not think that the theory of a partial restoration, or rather a mere colonization of Jews, for agricultural and other purposes, under the protectorate of an European power, will fulfil the terms of the prophecy. Its language implies more than this. In this prophecy Palestine is described as "the land that is brought back from the sword"—"the desolate places that are now inhabited"—and "the land of unwalled villages;" while the people are said to be "gathered out of the nations"—"brought forth out of the nations," and "dwelling safely all of them"—and "that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates"—"and which have gotten cattle and goods." These expressions are such as to convey the idea that not only Judah, but Israel also, will then have been restored, and have been settled for some time, so as to have acquired confidence, and a feeling of security, and great wealth. The restored people are called by Jehovah "my people of Israel," and "the house of Israel;" and on account of the signal deliverance which he will effect for them, in the destruction of Gog and his mighty hosts, he declares "that the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward." But to know and experience this deliverance, they must be present in the land at the time when it is effected, in far greater numbers than at present, or which a mere colonization will warrant; and indeed such a return seems to be indicated as is spoken of by the prophets, when "the Lord will set his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people . . . from the four corners of the earth."

The Gog of Ezekiel is the autocrat of Russia, at the head of many nations, who will be induced to invade the land of Israel, "as a cloud to cover it." This will be the last great confederacy of nations, led on to make their final onslaught upon the rising kingdom of Israel, before or about the beginning of the millennial era. Probably this event will terminate the "war of the great day of God Almighty," and will secure to Israel rest from their enemies round about, and establish the kingdom in peace and righteousness.

Gog was typified by the Assyrian of old. Thus saith the Lord God, art thou not he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years, that I would bring thee against them?" Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, was a good type of him; and the destruction which came upon his army was entirely from the Lord. Sennacherib invaded the land, but did not enter Jerusalem, nor shoot an arrow against it; for the Lord said, "I will defend this city to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake;" and we do not read that Gog will be permitted to devastate the land, or to enter the city. He too is to fall by the hand of the Lord; "for the Lord will stir up a scourge for him according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb," Judg. vii. 22, "when every man's sword was against his fellow, even throughout all the host;" and in addition to this the Lord will plead against him with earthquake and pestilence, and blood, and an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, and fire and brimstone." By the prophet Isaiah, the Lord also says, "Surely, as I have thought so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed so shall it stand, that I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him underfoot," etc. Isa. xiv. 24–28. "For through the voice of the Lord shall the Assyrian be beaten down," xxx. 31; and "then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword not of a mean man shall devour him; but he shall flee from the sword, and his young men shall be discomfited. And he shall pass over to his stronghold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid, of the ensign, saith the Lord, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem." Isa. xxxi. 8, 9. Thus will be accomplished what we read of in Psalm xlvi—"Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he has made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder, he burneth the chariot in fire. (See Ezek. xxxix. 9–10). Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth." And such the confidence of the restored tribes as they say—"The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

Thus will Jehovah save his flock, and "they shall no more be a prey;" for he "will be the Lord their God, and his servant David a prince among them; and they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid." Messiah will then be his Shepherd; and as such he will feed and protect them. He will cause the evil beasts (the rulers which have preyed upon Israel) to cease out of the land, "and they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." As when David watched his father Jesse's flock, and was able to protect it from the lion and the bear, so will the "Good Shepherd" be fully able to deliver Jehovah's flock in the hour of danger. The prophet Micah thus speaks concerning this Shepherd, who was to be born in Bethlehem, as the "Ruler in Israel"—"He shall stand and feed (rule) in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God; and they (Israel) shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth. And this man shall be the peace when the Assyrian shall come into our land." Micah v. 4, 5. But before Israel can thus be delivered from the Assyrian, when he enters their land, and treads within their borders, they themselves must of course be in the land. This necessitates their return from captivity, and as the advent precedes the restoration, it consequently follows, that when Gog or the Assyrian goes up "to take a prey, and to take a spoil," it will be after the battle of all nations of Zech. xiv. where it is said "the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee:" and after the invasion of "the king of the north" of Dan. xi, if that is to be located at the time when Michael shall stand up, at the period of the resurrection. It may be, however, that the events of Dan. xi, 41–45, will come, chronologically, after those of Dan. xii. If this be admitted, then "Gog" and "the king of the north" are identical with "the Assyrian" of other Scriptures.

The destruction of Gog we think is identical with the binding of the dragon of Rev. xx, 2, for one thousand years. This binding will introduce the millennial era of peace and truth and righteousness, when the nations will learn war no more. Now it will be readily conceded that before the kingdom of Messiah is fully established, the whole house of Israel must be restored to the land of their fathers, and that a crushing or binding power will be exercised upon the governments of the earth; and as it appears from Ezek. xxxviii, that Gog will then be leader or chief of many nations, he, like the Assyrian of old, is brought upon the mountains of Israel for an utter overthrow. This destruction will completely eclipse all former ones, and "break in pieces the oppressor." Human governments will be fully subverted, and their power for evil will then come to an end. Thus "in mercy shall the throne (of David) be established; and he (whose right it is) shall sit upon it in truth, in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness." Isa. xvi. 5.

But before this chaining of the dragon at the close of the war of Armageddy God occurs, there will be many a sanguinary conflict. We read that "the nations will be angry"—that there will be a confederacy of European nations, represented by the ten horns of the beast, who will "make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them"—and that "when the King of kings, and Lord of lords" shall go forth in righteousness to judge and make war, the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, will gather together to oppose him, but will also meet with a signal overthrow. The hour of judgment will be a terrible time for the nations. It is called by the prophets, "the day of vengeance of our God;" "the day of the Lord's vengeance," and "the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion;" when "the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies. For the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword, will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." And all these terrible judgments will end with the overthrow of Gog on the mountains of Israel.

From what has already been adduced, we think that there is no Scriptural proof whatever, that the invasion of Gog, as described by Ezekiel, will take place at or before the coming of the Lord; but that probably it will be the last sad catastrophe which will happen prior to the full introduction of the glorious millennial era.

THE BIBLE BAPTISM DEFENDED AND PROVED BY SCRIPTURE.—No. 2.

"Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee."—Paul to Timothy.

Referring to what is contained in the preceding No. of this series, it is surely no answer to our reasoning so far, to charge, that as Peter on the day of Pentecost is not recorded to have used the words of the commission given by Christ in Matthew we are thence to conclude that the apostle suppressed his Lord's words and substituted a new formula of baptism of his own invention. Such is the ground held by the new school of interpreters. To support that extraordinary conclusion it would be necessary to have before us in Acts ii. all that Peter said on that occasion, and if the words of Jesus in Matthew or those of equivalent import, did not appear, the inference would be plausible, if not tenable. But in view of the statement by Luke that besides the few words recorded in verses 38, 39, Peter "testified and exhorted with many other words" etc, we are estopped from maintaining that he dispensed with the words in Matthew saying that we do not know what these "many other words" may have been, and seeing also that Peter neither gave a formula of words in baptism nor himself baptized at all. Yet it is upon this slender conclusion—this mere assumption—that the tremendous conclusion is based, that the words of the commission in Matthew referring to the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, were suppressed by Peter and that the solemn charge of the Master in his valedictory to his faithful servants, is to be lightly discarded as superfluous and unmeaning!

Since, then, we do not know what words were used by those who actually baptized the three thousand first converts who will venture the assertion that they did not use the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit as well as the name of the Lord Jesus, in that act, and that they disobeyed the divine mandate of the Master? Who can prove that they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus only? Until these assumed statements are proved by the testimony of man can, could, except upon mere hypothesis and conjecture, any trustworthy theory as a reason of his action in rejecting the words recorded by Matthew. Surely every considerate and reasonable man will be slow in the absence of indubitable testimony, to adopt a conclusion which necessarily involves a contradiction of statements and a conflict of authority on such premises, between Christ and Peter, which cannot be easily credited.

The phrase employed by those who favor the new movement—Christian baptism not in three names—necessarily implies that baptism in, or into, the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, is not Christian baptism, whatever else it may be. Those who hold this position have recognized for years past as Brethren in Christ, all of us who have been immersed "in the name"—that is, in the sense of "into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost." Do they now consider that they can no longer do so? and must of necessity unchristianize all of that class, and logically make them now, "aliens and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel—to the covenants of promise, and living without God and without hope in the world?" This is a call, though grave and serious, should not alarm or deter any brave soldier of the cross from still "holding the forts" but surely no bold a soldier should be prepared to make good his position by wounding the plainest and direct orders from the Captain of his salvation. He cannot otherwise expect ready obedience and obedience from those who have not so learned Christ, and whose faith and practice he undertakes to subvert.

Had such innovators addressed themselves to the task of pointing out the ignorance of the unscriptural practice of trine-immersionists, baby sprinkling, and other sectaries, who, without knowing or caring for the false translation of the text "in" instead of "into" the name, etc., their work would have been useful and legitimate. But, in the broad terms in which they have phrased their thesis a far wider scope is given to it and the consequences we point out of necessity follow. There are many instances in Scripture, even in our common version, of the use of "in" and "into" a person when present and "into" the name of that person when absent. Thus it is written that the Israelites at the Red Sea "were baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea." They thereby took him as their leader, Prophet and King, (for "Moses was king in Jeshurun")—that "as many as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ" and that of the twelve disciples of John whom Paul met at Ephesus, they were baptized (eis) into not in the name of the Lord Jesus—see New Revision.

There are those who express surprise that we do not find a trace of such a formula of baptism as they oppose, in the whole apostolic ministry or writings—an incautious and mistaken statement in view of the undisputed fact that Matthew, who certainly was one of these apostles, has recorded the obnoxious words in his apostolic writings. We have seen the statement also that many instances are on record where the apostles administered the rite of baptism and yet not one allusion is made to the three names—an assertion equally unfortunate, in the face of the fact that we have no account whatever of any one of the twelve apostles ever personally administering baptism after the resurrection of our Lord. Paul, who while testifying that he was "not sent to baptize" enumerates the number (being less than he could count on his fingers) that he baptized at Corinth, and adds, "besides these I know not that I baptized any others." Peter, at the household of Cornelius, did not himself baptize the first Gentile converts; but commanded them to be baptized, and being accompanied by "six brethren" from Joppa, they no doubt performed that office.

Will our critical brethren tell us how many instances are recorded of John, Matthew, Peter and Bartholomew baptizing their converts and give us chapter and verse? We say this, not to disparage baptism, but to meet the assertion that "the apostles" baptized "using the name of Jesus only." We do this by showing that the apostles, except in Paul's case, did not baptize at all, as far as the Scriptures testify, and so could not have been guilty of the omission imputed to them. Is it not a new thing under the sun, to see the Christian believer instituting an investigation into the comparative accuracy of two of our Lord's chosen apostles and witnesses, whose mission and work it was to speak and write as they were moved by the Holy Spirit? Is not such an enquiry a virtual impeachment of the truth and consistency of the divine wisdom? How much simpler and safer to take the testimony of both with childlike docility, seeing that there is no real contradiction between them. We are sure that both spoke the truth; both spoke the words of the Lord, and their testimony needs no reconciling. Luke in chapter xxiv. 47, is authority for the doctrine of remission of sins in baptism through or in the name of the Lord and as signifying the authority of the act, while Matthew is equally trustworthy when commanding the use of the words "into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit."

Thus we see clearly all the prerequisites of the ordinance plainly made out from the divine testimony before we go to Pentecost, and we easily understand from their combined testimony that the ordinance was to be administered "in the name of the Lord"—to a believer of the gospel—and "into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." Can any doubt that when the time came to practice the act, such a baptism would have been strictly in accordance with the divine law? It is hard to believe that Peter changed all this at Pentecost and taught baptism "in the Lord Jesus" only, omitting Matthew's version of the commission so far as the latter clause of the nineteenth verse is concerned.

Nor is this all, for let it be observed that Peter is not reported as preaching "the gospel" specifically as Mark words the commission. Shall we on that account (if the omission imputed to Peter actually occurred) discard also so much of Mark's commission as Peter failed to quote? Is there not as much authority to reject Mark's testimony as Matthew's and for the same reason? We dare not do so. We recognize it as a duty, on the contrary, to preserve both and all unimpaired. We may ask, however, as no one imputes any want of authenticity to Matthew's words—for what purpose were they spoken, if not with reference to the act of baptism? Are not all who advocate the new theory fairly bound to answer? But we have listened in vain for a reply to a question so pertinent. Surely our Lord never spake vain words.

But let us not forget that Matthew and Luke must have written their respective books of the New Testament long after the day of Pentecost when Peter first preached to the assembled Jews at that great national jubilee. This is easily established by all the facts of the case. Pentecost, as its name imports, was the fiftieth day after the Feast of the Passover which Jesus partook of with his disciples when he instituted the Lord's Supper, and was on that same night betrayed into the hands of his enemies.

During forty days of this interval he was on earth and became visible to his brethren: "They did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." In his last interview with them, when he ascended to God's right hand in their sight, he commanded them "to tarry at Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high."

They obeyed this command and accordingly the sound of their voice was not heard in teaching or preaching during this interval. But when the day of Pentecost was fully come being assembled together in the upper chamber of their abode, suddenly the Holy Spirit—the promised power from on high—came upon them and then they spake and taught as the Spirit gave them utterance."

During their incessant labors in preaching the word in Jerusalem and in the midst of the bitter persecution of their enemies, it is almost certain that Matthew had not time or opportunity to write his history nor Luke to compose his acts, and as to the latter, for another obvious reason, that the events he records had not taken place. But Matthew and Peter were both apostles of the original twelve and Luke was undoubtedly one of the one hundred and twenty disciples assembled at Pentecost, for he testifies that he "had perfect knowledge of all things from the beginning."

When, therefore, Peter preached on that day, both Matthew and Luke were present and must have heard him, and must have known the reason, if there was one, for Peter's alleged disuse and disregard of so imposing a part of the great commission under which they were acting, and if such reason really existed the latter would naturally have recorded it. It is quite unaccountable that he has not done so. Matthew too, having long afterwards reunited and recorded the alleged omitted formula, afford us every ground to believe that there was no such omission by Peter or his colleagues, of whom Matthew was one of the chief. Yet there are those who maintain, without proof, that Peter's Brethren did not baptize the new converts "into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," and further that Peter did not even mention their name in his discourse, hence they justify themselves in an utter suppression of Matthew xxviii. 19, notwithstanding the imposing, inconvenient and damaging facts already stated to the contrary.

If the words which are admitted to have been spoken, were not intended to be used in baptism, for what object, we repeat, were they uttered? Why were they spoken at all? If originally so designed, but their author afterwards changed his mind and repealed them, may we not ask who says so? and where is it so written? and why did Matthew put into his gospel words that he knew were not to be employed and were superfluous and void?

I submit to the candor of all fair reasoners that such facts as these should lead us to conclusions, the very opposite of those we have been led to consider. They afford the strongest presumptive evidence that these words of the commission were not ignored or suppressed, at Pentecost and afterwards, as now supposed, but remain now in all their original force and virtue. We think it is not to be credited that Peter should have forgotten, or, worse still, should have deliberately disobeyed the Master's express command with the connivance of his colleagues and brethren, Matthew and Luke. We may safely disregard any argument based on such an assumption. Who can affirm or deny what else or what more Peter may have said in the "many other words" (not recorded) that he testified and exhorted on that occasion? We have seen what strong motives he was under and speaking by divine inspiration too, to deliver the command of his Master as recorded in Matthew and the entire absence of any reason or motive to change or omit that command. It is therefore a violent and unwarrantable conclusion, we submit, that he made a mistake or wantonly disobeyed the Lord's command and actually suppressed his words.

We need not be surprised that all that Peter said on that occasion is not recorded. Luke's gospel and the Acts, like the other books of the New Testament, were only compendious and abridged histories and not full narratives of all that was said and done. We remember the testimony of the apostle John. He writes: "There are many other signs which Jesus did in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this book, but these are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God and that, believing, ye might have life through his name." Under all these circumstances the suppression in baptism of the precise words of the commission by Matthew, would be an anomaly so glaring and flagrant as to involve a moral impossibility. On that hypothesis, as we have seen, the words in question, not the command, they simply never had any meaning or effect at any time. Unlike all other words our blessed Lord ever spoke, these alone were absolutely vain and nugatory, and were never heeded or employed by his disciples for any purpose or on any occasion! There was no opportunity to use them in baptism or to quote them in their preaching, for in the interval of time from their utterance until Pentecost there was neither preaching nor baptism, so that on such assumptions we have the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ (which Paul exhorts us to be "mindful of") rendered null and void. One more No. will suffice to close this essay.

To Flood Sahara.

Count de Lesseps has explored the route for himself, and he declares that the construction of a canal to flood the great African desert with the waters of the Mediterranean is feasible. There has been doubt as to whether the surface of Sahara is higher or lower than the surface of the sea, but his triumphant dispatch from Tunis indicates that he has obtained information that to perform his feat it will not be necessary to make water run up-hill. It is proposed to cut a channel through the narrow neck of land which separates the salt marshes south of Tunis from the Gulf of Gabes, and thus pour an ocean into the vast basin of sand whose farther rim is the border of the Soudan—a land of the riches of India and the population of the United States. France has been eager to bring the heart of Africa to the light of civilization and the wealth of the same to the pockets of Frenchmen, and Col. Flatters expended three years of toil and $100,000 of treasure in the attempt to fulfill his ambitious prediction: "I will cross Africa with a railway." Since his slaughter by Arabs the scheme to penetrate the heart of the "dark continent" with a railway has dropped from public attention, and Count de Lesseps, the great maker of the earth's waters, has laid his stupendous project before his admiring countrymen, with sublime confidence in his ability to secure $15,000,000 for the work by merely asking. The count is now nearly 90 years of age, and in his long and romantic career he has accomplished prodigious achievements, but if he restores to the burning sands of Sahara the waves which in a remote age rolled over them, the creation of an ocean and the civilization of a continent will be the climax of his career and the chief marvel of his fame.—New York Mail and Express.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series, Number 10.

OLIVET AND BETHANY.

"In the daytime he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives."—Luke xxi. 37.

The name Olivet goes direct to the Christian's heart, and awakens the deepest and holiest feelings there. It recalls so many memories of Jesus,—of his wondrous power and still more wondrous love,—of his human sympathies and his divine teachings,—of the greatness of his agony and the glories of his triumph,—that the heart overflows with love and gratitude the moment the name falls upon the ear. With Gethsemane on one side and Bethany on the other; with paths, well marked by contrasting them, often trodden by the Saviour Man; with gardens of olives and orchards between, where he was wont to pray for his people and weep for a sinful world; with one spot upon those terraced slopes overlooking the wilderness, where his feet stood on the eve of the Ascension, and where his wondering disciples received from white-robed angels the joyful promise of his second advent.—With these hallowed associations clustering round it, surely it will be admitted that, above and beyond all places in Palestine, Olivet witnessed God manifest in flesh."

"Here may we sit and muse
Over the heavenly theme,
Till to our soul the former days return.
Or choose that we, apart,
In Kidron's stricken fell,
Seeks the spring of bitter tears for sin,
Among the olives kneel, or
The chill night hour to few
And watch the moon that saw the Master's agony."

Yet I was disappointed in Olivet,—not in its associations, no Christian could be disappointed in these,—but in its appearance. One always expects to find something in a holy or historic place worthy of its history. Here there is nothing. When approaching Jerusalem from the west I looked, but I looked in vain, for any "mountain" or even "mount" that the eye could at once rest on and identify as Olivet. Beyond the grey battlements of the city lay a long ridge, barely overtopping the Castle of David, and the higher buildings on Zion,—drooping to the right it spans a view of the distant mountains of Moab, and running away far to the north it fills in the whole background. This is Olivet. It has no striking features; it might be said to have no features at all. It is rounded, regular, colorless; and the air is so clear, and the coloring so defective, that it seems to rise immediately out of the city. In the distance the outline is also at horizontal, but as one draws near it becomes wavy, and at length three tops or summits can be distinguished, the central and highest crowned with the dome and minaret of the "Church of the Ascension," and the other two about equi-distant to the right and left. Photographs show these peculiarities, and consequently look flat and uninteresting; while in every sketch I have seen, the imagination of the artist has greatly increased both the apparent distance and elevation of Olivet, thus sacrificing truth to effect.

When I passed round the city, and stood on the brow of the Kidron, at the north-east angle of the wall, the view was much more impressive; in fact, this is one of the most picturesque views about Jerusalem. Olivet now assumed the appearance of a "mount." At my feet was the deep glen, shaded with dusky olive groves; and from the bottom swelled up in grey terraced slopes and rocky fences, nearly six hundred feet, the hill-side. Close on my right was the city wall, running south in a straight line near—but upon—the rocky edge of the ravine, till it joined the loftier and more massive wall of the Haram. The depth of the Kidron and the comparative elevation and respective positions of Moriah and Olivet are seen from this point to great advantage. The sides of the two hills meet, and here and there overlap in the bottom of the narrow crooked glen; while the summits are hardly half a mile apart,—Olivet overtopping its sister three hundred feet. The side of Moriah is steep and bare as if scarped; while the whole of Olivet is cultivated in little terraced fields of wheat and barley, intermixed with a few straggling vines trailing along the ground or hanging over the rude terrace walls. Fig trees are seen at intervals, but olives are still, as they were in our Lord's days, the prevailing trees on the mount. It has as good a title now as it perhaps ever had to the name "Olivet." Olive trees dot it all over,—in some places far apart, in others closer together, though nowhere so close as to form groves. Most of them are old, gnarled, and stunted, a few are propped up and in the last stage of decay, and I saw scarcely any young vigorous trees.

I endeavored, when residing on the Mount of Olives, to localize every incident of Scripture history of which it was the scene, to bring together the sacred narrative and the sacred place,—so to group, in fact, the various actors on the spots where they acted, that the stories might be made to assume to my mind as far as possible the semblance of reality. I tried to follow every footstep of David, and of David's Greater Son,—to recall every circumstance, and note every local characteristic, and every typographical feature that might illustrate the prophecies and parables, the discourses, miracles, and walks of our Lord. Some of the leading points are fixed, and cannot be mistaken, such as Bethany, and Jerusalem, and the one great road from the city, deeply cut in zigzag lines down the steep side of Moriah from St. Stephen's gate to the bridge over the Kidron. Then there are the two main roads over Olivet to Bethany, branching at the bridge,—the one crossing the summit almost in a straight line, it is steep, rugged, and only fit for pedestrians or active cavaliers; the other, diverging to the right winds round the southern shoulder of the hill, and is easier, and better adapted for caravans and processions. Many difficulties met me in the arrangement of details. Gradually, however, they cleared away. Daily study of the Record, and daily examination of the mount, removed one after another, until at length the spots and places, the stories and the scenery, so completely harmonized and blended that they formed one series of graphic and vivid life pictures.

I shall now try to show my reader what I saw myself, and make Olivet to him what it must ever henceforth be to me,—one of the most venerated and instructive spots on earth. True, Christianity is not a religion of "holy places," on the contrary, the whole spirit of the Gospel,—the whole writings and teachings of our Lord and his apostles, tend to withdraw men's minds from an attachment to places, and to lead them to worship a spiritual God in spirit and in truth." It was not without a wise purpose that the exact scenes of the Annunciation, the Nativity, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, and the Ascension, were left unknown; and that these events themselves were made to stand altogether unconnected with places, giving no sanctity to the

Will the Kingdom of God Be Set Up In the Land of Palestine, and Will there Be Kingdoms up the Earth Outside of God's Kingdom After It Is Set Up.

I purpose to prove these two truths by the Scriptures of Israel. In the first place I will prove that there has been a kingdom of God on earth. But first let me say what constitutes a kingdom. First of all there is the territory with its boundaries, second the people or subjects, third its king or sovereign, fourth its capital city, fifth its laws by which the kingdom is governed, sixth its government by which its laws are made. All of these constituents were and will be found in the kingdom of God.

Now to the first point. Was there a kingdom of God on earth? Turn to the 16th chapter of Ezekiel and 13th verse, we read the Lord said concerning Israel, "Thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom." But was it God's kingdom? Turn to 1 Sam. viii. 7, and you will find that when Israel asked for a king, God said unto Samuel (who was viceroy of God on earth) "they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." Here you will perceive that God reigned over Israel, and hence the people of Israel were the people of his kingdom. Turn again to 1st Chron. xxix. 23, and read as follows, "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father." Here you see that after Saul reigned over Israel, it did not cease to be God's kingdom, for he afterwards called them his people saying, "this same Saul shall reign over my people." Again the words of our Lord are, "the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Matt. xxi. 43. How could the kingdom be taken from the Jews if they did not have it? Having established the truth that God had a kingdom on earth, we now pass on to define its boundaries.

Turn to Genesis xv. 18, and you will read, "unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." By far the greater portion of this enchanted territory has not been occupied as yet by Israel. From 1 Kings iv. 21-24, we learn that Solomon reigned over this very territory given to the seed of Abraham. And as Solomon ruled the kingdom of God, the unavoidable conclusion is, the land between the above named boundaries, (the two rivers) is the territory of the kingdom of God. The land of Palestine is but a small portion of this promised territory, hence Israel must return and occupy to the full extent the land God gave to Abraham's seed, or else the word is of none effect. The boundaries of the kingdom of God are then, the two rivers, the river of Egypt and the river Euphrates. "His dominion shall be from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth." Psa. lxxii. 8. This is a prophecy showing that Messiah's rule shall extend beyond his kingdom.

Having proven from the Word of God, that God had a kingdom on earth, and also where it was located, we shall now pass on to prove that when the kingdom of God is set up in the future it will be upon the same location, or between the same boundaries. You all believe that at some future time God will set up a kingdom on earth. The question is, will it be setting between the boundaries of the land given to the seed of Abraham, or will it be set up all over the earth at one time? This is an important point, for it involves the age of restitution for of this kingdom of God is set up under the whole heaven at first, it makes null and void the time of restitution of all things, and of Christ reigning until he makes his foes his footstool; for remember, that when God sets up his kingdom in the future, he gathers out of it all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and if the kingdom is all over the earth when it is set up, and if all that offend and do iniquity are gathered out and destroyed, then the earth will be left without enemies, and in that case, Christ cannot reign until he puts all enemies under his feet, whereas, on the contrary, the Word of God declares, and abundantly teaches, that after his kingdom is set up, there will be found those that offend, or enemies; this is an important point; now for the proof. "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies." Psa. cx. 2. No one will deny that the rod of Israel's strength is Christ, and Christ does not rule before his kingdom is set up, and when he does rule it is in the midst of his enemies. Thus enemies will exist outside of his kingdom, for they are all gathered out of his kingdom.

Again see Psa. lx. God says he will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Observe also the same work is promised to the saints in Rev. ii. 26, 27, which locates the work beyond the resurrection, hence after the kingdom is set up. Again in Zech. xiv. which all intelligent Bible readers admit to be wholly future, if you will read from the 16 to 19 verses of that chapter, you will find a punishment denounced against any of the left of the nations who will not go up to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, who will then be reigning in Mount Zion. Why this punishment, if no offenders outside of the kingdom? We conclude then, in view of the plain testimony of God's Word, that the kingdom will not be set up over all the earth at first, but in the land of Palestine or between the two rivers, which we now pass on to prove. In the first place I will refer to the prophecy of Micah iv. 8. "And thou O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." Here we learn that the first dominion is to come to Israel. The word dominion must here be used in the sense of the district governed. In the sense of rule or government it can never come to Israel, and if it did it would be an unrighteous one, for it is the first that is to come, hence there is no alternative but to accept the sense of district governed, which was Palestine. And as Palestine was the first dominion, Palestine must come again to the daughter of Jerusalem. If we regard the tower of the flock to be Christ to whom the first dominion is to come then the word dominion cannot be used in any other sense than that of territory, for the first right to rule is passed, never to come back, and if it comes it will be unrighteous still. In any case it must be the territory governed. But will the first territory come to the daughter of Jerusalem? "Thus saith the Lord God: behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt." Eze. xxxvii. 21, 22, 25; see also Jer. xxxii. 37-44. Then it follows, that as the kingdom is to come to the daughter of Jerusalem, and as the daughter of Jerusalem is to be gathered to her own land and dwell therein forever, the unavoidable conclusion is, the land of Israel is the territory of God's kingdom.

We will now pursue another line of thought founded on the prophecy of Daniel 2nd chapter. In his interpretation of the image the king saw in his dream, Daniel interprets the stone that smote the image upon the feet, to be the kingdom of God. "The stones that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." This is what the king saw. And this is the interpretation: "And in the days of these kings will the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever." Notice the kingdom of God does not break in pieces till the other kingdoms before it is set up, but after it is set up. God's kingdom after it is set up, will break in pieces and consume all the other kingdoms of earth be they ever so strong, for that is its work to accomplish. But if the kingdom is set up over all the earth, how then can it break in pieces other kingdoms? This would be a kingdom divided against itself. If the kingdom is set up over all the earth, it would have to break in pieces the kingdoms before it was set up, which is impossible, for it cannot be a kingdom before it is set up. But what are we to understand by God's kingdom breaking in pieces the other kingdoms? If the kingdom of England should break in pieces the kingdom of France and Germany, we should understand that the armies or people of England would conquer France, and make it a part of the British empire. So we understand that the people or subjects of God's kingdom will conquer the people or armies of all the other kingdoms of the world. Hear the word of the Lord to Israel, "Thou art my battle-ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms." Jer. li. 20; see also Micah iv. 11-13; v. 8; Zech. x. 5. You will perceive that Israel or the subjects of God's kingdom will be the agency by which God breaks in pieces the kingdoms or nations.

We will now prove that the stone that smites the image is Jerusalem or Israel. In that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it." Zech. xii. 3-8. Now it is clear that Israel will be God's agency of conquest in subduing the nations, or breaking in pieces the kingdoms; and as the stone that the king saw in his dream is to do the same work, and as the word of God declares that he will make Jerusalem a stone to do just such a work, is it not clear that Jerusalem is the stone that is to smite the image. But further, what does the stone become? a great mountain, and what then? it filled the whole earth. Note the progressive stages, first a stone, then a mountain, then the whole earth.

Jerusalem the capital city, stands as the representative of the 12 tribes of Israel or the kingdom of God. What will this great mountain, Jerusalem, do? it will fill the whole earth. With what will it fill the whole earth? The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea." Hab. ii. 14. Yes, thank God, Jerusalem's destiny is to fill the whole earth with the knowledge of God's glory. For the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Micah iv. 2; see also Isa. lxvi. 19; lxii. 1, 2. You will perceive from these Scriptures, and a great many more might be cited, that Jerusalem will be God's instrumentality through which we will make known his glory and knowledge to all the surrounding heathen so that the whole earth may be filled. And as the Jews are scattered among all nations, and have learned their languages, they are in this respect amply fitted for the work. Now listen to the parable of our Lord, "For the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field: which indeed is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." Matt. xiii. 31, 32. Now brethren can you not see a similitude between what we have shown from God's word concerning the kingdom in its progressive stages, and this parable? first a stone or seed, then a mountain, then a great tree, then it fills the whole earth.

It seems to me you cannot fail to see that the kingdom of God will first be set up in the land of Israel, and that there will be other kingdoms outside of it, and that will be broken in pieces and consumed by it. And as the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Spirit, it follows that when the kingdom of God shall have accomplished its work in the conquest of the nations, that righteousness, joy and peace will prevail as far as the earth extends.

We will now give some attention to the locality of the sanctuary, mentioned in Daniel's prophecy viii. 14. It is there said at the end of a specified time, the sanctuary shall be cleansed; what and where is the sanctuary, and how will it be cleansed. In the song of Moses we read: "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary, O Lord which thy hands have established." Ex. xv. 17. David is speaking of the same work of God, when he says, "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased." Psa. lxxviii. 54, 69. Here is a description of Canaan, it is called God's holy habitation, Ex. xv. 13.

Now this was not the sanctuary or the temple which Solomon built, nor the one which Nehemiah built, but it is Canaan, the land of Palestine, and ever since called the Holy Land. In Isa. lx. 13 the Lord speaks of this land and of planting trees to beautify the place of his sanctuary. There are a large number of texts to show that the land of Palestine is God's chosen land, his sanctuary. Now we know what and where the sanctuary is. Now we ask how will it be cleansed? Hear the word of the Lord. "And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them (that is Gog and his multitudes) that they may cleanse the land," read also Eze. xxxix. 11-16. When we call to mind the great battle that is to be fought in the Holy Land, which ends Gentile supremacy, when the blood shall be to the horse bridles, for the space of 200 miles, according to Rev. xiv. 20, we can readily see a cause for the cleansing of the sanctuary. The Holy Land will then be justified, for the Gentiles shall no more tread down Jerusalem. And then Zechariah, the prophet asserts, "And the Lord shall inherit [illegible] Judah, his portion in the Holy L[illegible]m. Then two angels [illegible] and shall choose Jerusalem [illegible]" Zech. ii. 12. Now let me ask, why is it the Lord has spoken so much about that little spot of earth called Palestine, if it is no more to him than any other spot of earth? Does not Scripture and reason unite in compelling us to believe that it is here God will set up a kingdom in righteousness, joy and peace, whose destiny is to bless the nations and fill the whole earth with the knowledge of the glory of God as the waters cover the sea? And now let me say in conclusion, have I written the opinions of the wise of this age, or have I written in harmony with the voice of Israel's prophets, who wrote as they were moved by the Spirit of God, to make known the things that shall come to pass hereafter?

BIBLE TIMES.

The Bible presents times and seasons, times of judgment and times of blessing. The seven times of Israel's punishment reach over all the years of a nation's desolations, and the land of promise keeps her Sabbaths. Next we have the times of the Gentiles, which are measured by the metallic man, commencing with the head of gold and continuing until the stone rolls from the mountain without hands. Next we have the time, times and an half, which embraces the last half of the great week of Israel's captivity and the Gentile supremacy. During these times we have the times of ignorance and the partial blindness of Israel, then, at the close we have the time of the end, which reaches over the transition period, standing between the ages of war and the ages of peace. After this comes the times of restoration, times of refreshing and the dispensation of the fulness of times, styled by Paul the times of Messiah. Then the mystic table will be supplied with white-robed guests, the mystic body will be replete with members, and the symbolic tree shall be full of branches and the fulness of the Gentiles will be come in. Bible times will succeed the times of war and death, and times of blessings will fill the world.

A Prayer.

Lord, speak, to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tongue,
As thou hast taught, so let me seek
The erring children, lost and long.

O teach me, Lord, that I may learn
The precious things thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

And fill me with the fullness, Lord,
Until my heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, thy praise to show.

The Straight Path.

"The Bible is a strict and old-fashioned," said a young man to a gray-haired friend who was advising him to study God's word if he would learn to live.

"There are plenty of books written now-a-days that are moral enough in their teaching, and don't bind one down as the Bible does."

The old merchant turned to his desk and took out two rulers, one slightly bent. With each he ruled a line, and silently handed the ruled paper to his companion.

"Well" said the lad, "what do you mean?"

"One line is not straight and true, is it? When you mark out your path in life don't use a crooked ruler."

After all has been learned, the old man is a boy again, and turns to yoga and prayers that he heard when the nursery was his divinity school, and the mother the senior professor. Out of that seminary he may go to groves of philosophy and halls of ethical culture, sit at the feet of wise men and become himself an interpreter of thought, a founder of schools and of sects, and fill the world with records of his inner life and his experience in learning how to live. But at last he must come back to the simple faith that his first teacher taught him. The little child gets the kingdom.—N. Y. Observer.

The Ascending Lord.

After Jesus came out of his tomb, he staid in this world forty days. He met his disciples ten times, and talked to them about the kingdom of God. Then he told them to stay in Jerusalem until God sent his Spirit upon them, to teach them how to preach and do his work. They wanted to know whether he was going to begin his kingdom then, but he said they need not know when he would do it, but only do the work which God gave them power to do. Just when Jesus had finished saying this, he began to go up into the air, and a cloud came around

Modesty Rewarded.

During a time of famine in France, a rich man invited twenty of the poor children in the town to his house, and said to them: "In this basket is a loaf for each one of you; take it: come back every day at this hour till God sends us better times."

The children, seizing the basket, wrangled and fought for the bread. Each wished to get the largest loaf, and at last went away without thanking their friend. Francesca alone, a poor but neatly-dressed girl, stood modestly apart, took the smallest loaf which was left in the basket, gracefully kissed the gentleman's hand, and went away to her home in a quiet and becoming manner. On the following day the children were equally ill behaved, and Francesca this time received a loaf that was scarcely half the size of the others. But when she got home, her sick mother cut the loaf, and there fell out of it a number of bright silver coins.

The mother was alarmed, and said: "Take back the money this instant, for it has no doubt got into the bread by some mistake."

Francesca carried it back; but the benevolent gentleman declined to receive it.

"No, no," said he; "it was no mistake. I had the money baked in the smallest loaf simply as a reward for you, my good child. Always continue thus contented, peaceable and unassuming. The person who prefers to remain contented with the smallest loaf, rather than quarrel for the larger one, will find throughout life blessings in this course of action still more valuable than the money which was baked in your loaf of bread."—The Morning Star.

According to the Chicago Times, a remarkable electrical phenomenon was lately exhibited on the line of the Union Pacific Railway, between North Platte and Sidney, Neb. The rails were surcharged with a current of electricity, moving from west and east, to so high a degree that handcars standing on the track were impelled at a fair rate of speed by it. The influence of the current was felt by many persons along the track.

DESPONDENCY.

Sometimes there comes within the life,
This shuttered life of ours,
So much of loss and pain and strife,
That eye and eyes, without disguise,
Look up and see no flowers.

A sudden sorrow clouds the day
And the tired heart grows faint,
For strength and courage die away,
And lips that have been firm to pray,
Can only make complaint.

And life becomes at such a time
An unattractive thing;
There is no sound of cheery rhyme,
The days move on in dreary chime,
And bring no heart to sing.

If such a time should come to thee—
And somewhere in the years
For every one its pain within—
Do not despair, but try to see
Some sunshine through the tears.

And know that he whom sorrows teach
To receive a gift from heaven,
His tenderness to some hearts may reach,
To whom the glad in vain might preach,
And they through him be given.

Oh, then, be thou a comforter
To some more sad than thou,
And while thou dost thus minister,
Even as like in thine own heart shall stir,
The grief forgotten be.

Communications.

Editor Restitution:

Having made some broad statements in previous communications to the columns of your paper, in regard to the inadequacy of the eleven year labors of the Revision Committee upon the New Testament Scriptures, I purpose to analyze two or three more passages and show their inadequacy when tried by the ordinary standards of grammatical rule and common sense interpretation, selecting for this purpose passages which lie at the very basis of Christian belief and practice, and the first I will take up for analysis is found in the first four verses of the 1st chapter of Hebrews and reads in the Revised Version as follows:

"God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the worlds, who, being the effulgence of his glory and the very image of his substance, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had made purification of sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high, having become so much better than the angels as he hath inherited a more excellent name than they."

The general inadequacy of this translation emanate in an utter failure on the part of the translators to give the thought of the inspired writer, and thus improperly stating certain relations involving personality and power as they are herein clearly stated to exist between the two persons, Father and Son. The first specific misstranslation consists in omitting to translate the definite article "the" preceding the word God as it is not unimportant here. The second specific error lies in the meaning given to the word translated "by divers portions," which is here a distributive adverb of time and place, as the succeeding adverb is a distributive adverb of manner, this being clearly indicated by the leading qualifying adverb "polue" which is also an adverb of time; the time referred to being past time and this clause being thus shown to be in antithesis with the following clause which relates to present time. Having mistranslated one of the adverbial modifiers of the leading antithetical clause it was but natural to misstranslate the adverb qualifying the secondary clause, viz.: "at the end of these days."

If the writer had intended to say that the end of these days he would have said epi to telei (i. e. using the dative case with or without the preposition epi). The genitive, however, being used here, under the general grammatical rule of time and place in which "of" must be translated by the English word "in" "on" or "upon," instead of "at" and the word teschatou not having the article prefixed, it is thus shown to be general and not specific in its use. The word chronois or kairois or word is to be supplied with it, showing it to be a period of time, not a point of time, and the adverbial clause correctly translated reads "upon a last period of these days," these days" is really referring to the same general period of time as "of old time" in the antithetical clause, viz.: the Levitical period.

The next specific error lies in the insertion of the pronoun "his" before Son thus destroying the writer's intended antithesis between the words "prophets" and "son," an antithesis of office. The prophet speaking as a servant in God's household, Christ as a son and heir over this household; "a son" as contrasted with "the prophets" brings this antithesis out very clearly.

The next specific error lies in translating the 1st aorist tense in the verb "etheke" as though it was a preterit. Instead of saying "whom he appointed," the translator should have said whom he hath appointed.

The next specific error, and a very important one in its bearing, lies in translating "tous aionous" the worlds. Aion means a period of time and the form here used being the accusative plural, the true meaning of the two words is "the periods of time." The same error in using the preterit for the aorist in the translation of the verb "epoiesen" in this clause also occurs and another error in not giving the exact shade of meaning to the verb "poieo" in its relation to an object expressing time. The word "poieo" in its primative sense means to cause, or to be the cause of something, or to cause something to be. And in this last signification it is used here, and the clause correctly translated reads, "through whom also he hath caused the periods of time to be," a very different thought from that wrought out in the imaginations of the revisers.

The next three specific errors are in the following clause and are still more important in their bearing, because they incorrectly state things which belong to the person and being of God and Christ. The revisers translate as follows, "who being the effulgence of his glory and the very image of his substance." Webster thus defines the word effulgence: "a word of superlative signification and applied with peculiar propriety to the Sun and to the Supreme Being." But the word here translated effulgence is "apaugasma," a compound word made up of the preposition "apo" meaning "from," and "augasma" "a glittering," "a lustre," "a brightness," and when compounded the word means "a reflected brightness." Remember the writer is not speaking of the glory of God, per se, but of the reflection of this glory, and also remember that God has said "my glory I will not give to another."

The revisers have also inserted the definite article "the" before "effulgence" to still further mislead the unlearned and unwary. The word translated "very image" has no article either and the revisers have here again taken the liberty to unwarrantably insert one for the same purpose. And they have moreover taken a greater liberty still in giving a wrong meaning to the word. "Eikon" means an image, but, this word "character" (tupos) has been transferred bodily over into the English language and means in the Greek just what it means in the English. We use the word in two senses in English and the Greek used it in the same two senses, viz.: a character as the written or otherwise produced expression of an idea, or as applied to person, that something in which the moral attributes of the person inhere. Examples of the two uses would be, "A letter is a character," That person has a good character." The only further question to determine here by the translator is, which of these uses occur here in this passage, and any child can answer this.

The word translated "substance" in this passage is also perverted from its true meaning here. This is also a compound word made up of "hupo" and "stasis" and means "that which stands under" primarily. Then a "prop" "a stay" "a foundation." Thus as in this case when one wishes to speak of that in which the "ego" resides or inheres in its last analysis metaphysical or in other words of that which upholds the "ego" or "person" what do we say? Do we not say "being"? Do we not speak of a person as a being or as a living being? This is the use here in this passage, and the passage correctly rendered reads, "Who being a reflected brightness of glory and a character (or characteristic expression) of his being, and bearing off (victorious) all things by the spoken word of his (God's) ability, after that he had made a purification from sins, hath sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, having become mightier than the angels by as much as he hath inherited a different name when compared with them."

Having translated the passage, I will now recur to the remaining specific errors in the passage, and first in order is giving to the verb "phero" a very rare and exceedingly doubtful meaning, translating it "upholding" in the sense of maintaining. The primitive meaning of the word is to bear or carry a thing, and is a verb of motion, not of rest. For instance, the soldier carries a spear. Then it comes to mean bear off, as the victor bears off the spoils, which is the meaning and use here, I think. It afterwards comes to mean to bear in the sense of endure or suffer, a derived or metaphysical meaning. This use occurs in the 53d chapter of Isaias, where the prophet speaks of Christ as bearing or suffering for our sins of nature and inheritance, speaking in immediate connection of his illtreatment, insults and rejection as the result of man's transgression of the law of instruction, and thus teaching very clearly by drawing this distinction in what sense Christ is an atonement for sin. He bears away with him to death and the grave or suffers unto death the old Adamic sinful human nature and by the power of God rises victorious with the new Adamic sinless and divine nature, which is the thought of the inspired writer contained in this passage.

The second specific error lies in purposely leaving the pronoun "his" ambiguous as to whether it refers to God or Christ.

Third error in not expressing the indefinite article "a" before the word "purification" which is not unimportant in its bearing.

Fourth error in capitalizing the word majesty improperly. If any capitalizing were to be done the three words "majesty on high" should all alike be capitalized.

Fifth error in translating the word "kreittoon" "better" instead "of mightier," the inspired writer's antithesis here being between the respective power conferred by God upon the angelic host on the one hand and the Son on the other, and not between the moral attributes of the one and the other as the revisors have implied by translating "kreittoon" by our word "better." Now the Greek word "agathos" of which this is the comparative degree, and meaning good, has four different comparisons or four different words to express the different shade of meaning which "good" assumes in the comparative degree, and

1. "Ameinoon" meaning better in the sense of "braver" or "fitter" or "better" in the general sense.

2. "Beltioon" meaning better in state or condition, generally referring to health or temporal condition of life.

3. "Kreisoon" or "kreittoon" meaning "better" in the sense of "mightier" or "more powerful."

4. "Looson" meaning more agreeable or better natured.

This being the case, any one can see that it is quite important to distinguish which is the use here in this passage.

The sixth specific error and last in this passage is in giving to the word "diaphoroteron" a remote or derived meaning instead of its primitive meaning and thus destroying the inspired writer's intended and expressed antithesis between the two names "angels" and "son" and also in giving an unwarrantable twist to the comparative degree of this word which still further obscures the antithesis. The whole passage correctly translated reads "The God who hath in many allotments and in many ways of old spoken unto the fathers in the prophets hath in one of the last periods (or a last period) of these days spoken unto us in a Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things, through whom also he hath caused the ages of time to be, who, being a reflected brightness of his glory and a characteristic expression of his being, and who, bearing on (victorious) all things by the spoken word of his (God's) ability after that he had made a purification from sins, hath sat down at the right hand of The Majesty On High, having become mightier than the angels by as much as he hath inherited a different name when compared with them. For unto which of the angels hath he said at any time, thou art my Son, today have I begotten thee, and again I will be unto him for a Father and he will be unto me for a Son."

I have given this last verse additional to show to the reader more clearly that the inspired writer intends as I have already said, to draw an antithesis between the power and office of angels and the power and office of Christ as respective conformants of the one God and as indicated by the two names "angel" and "son."

Editor Restitution,

I write a few lines to let you know that we are yet a pilgrim in this world yet striving for the kingdom of God. We had a blessed meeting on Thursday, the 23d inst. About thirty-three persons met together, and we partook of the emblems, "eating and drinking" according to the command of our Savior. We feel much encouraged to go on and press forward toward the heavenly prize, eternal life through Jesus Christ. We cordially invite any speaking brother who may wish, to come this way and labor with us.

Yours in Faith in Christ,

THE ENDLESS LIFE.

Discourse II.—Part I.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH OPINION ON HUMAN DESTINY DURING THE LAST THIRTY YEARS; WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY THROUGH THE DIVINE INCARNATION.

"If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 13.

In the discourse of this morning I related the history of the foundation of this church, explaining the doctrine for which, among other subjects, liberty of utterance in London was here first obtained, and some of the changes in English opinion on human destiny, which we have lived to witness and rejoice in.

This evening we shall extend our view over a far wider horizon, an attempt to commemorate at once the mercies of God, and the honor of those of his servants who have assisted in effecting the changes of belief to which reference has been made.

The example of Holy Scripture, and the custom of nearly all churches, warrants such an occasional commemoration of public service on the day of rest; and it happens that scarcely any person is more qualified than myself, by age and by personal knowledge of the actors in this matter, to record their "good deeds towards the house of their God." Most of them have suffered for years for their convictions, and borne their testimony amidst every kind of social discouragement. It shall at least not be our fault today if their courage and patience fail of a loving memorial.

But first of all let us clearly admonish the Christian public, that none of us who have been concerned in these latest endeavors to revive and diffuse a psychology which compels a reformed interpretation of Scripture, have thought of ourselves for one moment as discoverers of a secret not before made known to Christendom. The common charge, preferred against us by many, that we are inviting the world to believe that until some of us arose no one had previously understood the Christian religion, may serve the purpose of theological controversy, often as unjust as political strife; but it is a misconception, founded on want of knowledge. That which we are inviting the world to believe is a simple matter of fact, which any educated reader can verify for himself;—that in the first three centuries of Christianity the doctrine of man's natural mortality in body and soul, and of Life in Christ only, as we now teach it, is found clearly in the pages of the earliest of the Christian fathers; and specially in the pages of Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, in the middle of the second century, separated from St. John by the one life and common bond of St. Polycarp; and that Irenæus and others of that earliest age, explain the language of the New Testament on immortality by Christ precisely as we have explained it.

So that we do not set ourselves forth as discoverers, but only as revivers of forgotten truth;—truth which had been for a time forgotten in England, when we began this revival, but which in no generation since the Apostles has lacked witnesses, emphatically in the ages since the Reformation.

We have only revived the doctrine of Irenæus expounding St. John, when St. John had been dead scarcely sixty years:—"For life is not from us ourselves, or from our nature, but it is given or bestowed according to the Grace of God; therefore he who preserves this gift of life and returns thanks to him who bestows it, he shall receive length of days, for ever and ever. But he who rejects it, and proves unthankful to his Maker for creating him, and will not know him who bestows it, he deprives himself of the gift of duration to all eternity. And, therefore, the Lord speaks thus of such unthankful persons. 'If you have not been faithful in that which is least, who will commit much to you?' intimating thereby unto us, that they who are unthankful to him with respect to this short transitory life, which is his gift,—the effect of his bounty,—shall be most justly deprived of length of days for ever and ever."

"But again, those who assert that he was simply a mere man, remaining in the bondage of the old disobedience, are in a state of death, having been not as yet joined to the Word of God the Father, nor receiving liberty through the Son, as he does himself declare: 'If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.' But being ignorant of him who bore of the Virgin is Emmanuel, they are deprived of his gift which is eternal life; and not receiving the incorruptible Word, they remain in mortal flesh, and are debtors to death, not obtaining the antidote of life. To whom the Word says, mentioning his own gift of grace, 'I said ye are all the sons of the Highest, and gods;-but ye shall die like men.' He speaks undoubtedly these words to those who have not received the gift of adoption, but who despise the incarnation and pure generation of the Word of God, defraud human nature of promotion into God, and prove themselves ungrateful to the Word of God, who became flesh for them. For it was for this end that the Word of God was made man, and he who was the Son of God became the Son of man, that man having been taken into the Word, and receiving the adoption, might become the Son of God. For by no other means could we have attained to incorruptibility and immortality, unless we had been united to incorruptibility and immortality. But how could we be joined to incorruptibility and immortality, unless, first, incorruptibility and immortality had become that which we also are, so that the corruptible might be swallowed up by incorruptibility, and the mortal by immortality, that we might receive the adoption of sons?" — Irenæus against Heresies, Books II, III.

We have only revived the doctrine of Arnobius in A. D. 280. "For souls are of a middle or intermediate quality, as has been learned from Christ's teaching, and they are such that they may on the one hand perish, if they have not known God, and on the other hand be delivered from death, if they have given heed to his threatenings and proffered favors. That is the true death which leaves no residuum."

We have only revived the doctrine of St. Athanasius in his treatise on the Incarnation of the Word, A. D. 363. "Thus God made man, and desired him to continue in incorruption. But men, making light of and rebelling against the knowledge of God, thinking out and inventing evil for themselves, came under the before-threatened condemnation of death.... It was right that men, being emptied of the knowledge of God, and turning to the things that are not (for evil things are things that are not, but good things really are, since they proceed from the really existing God,) should be emptied also of eternal existence, and this is for them, being dissolved, to remain in death and destruction."

We have only revived the doctrine of Sophronius, Patriarch of Jerusalem, in a synodical letter read to the Council of Constantinople in 680, who, after confessing all the rest of the orthodox faith, declares the true faith also to be that men's souls have not a natural immortality. "It is the gift of God that they receive the grace of immortality and incorruptibility."

We have only revived the doctrine of Luther, who said that the immortality of the soul was one of the most gross opinions accumulated on the Papal dung-hill." (Opp. II., Wittemberg, folio 118.)

We have only revived the doctrine of John Locke in his Reasonableness of Christianity and in his Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles, when he says:—"By death threatened to Adam, some men understand endless torments in hell-fire; but it seems a strange way of understanding a law which requires the plainest and directest words, that by death should be meant eternal life in misery. Can any one be supposed to intend by a law which says, 'For felony thou shalt surely die,' not that he should lose his life, but be kept alive in exquisite and perpetual torments? and would any one think himself fairly dealt with that was so used?"

We have only revived the doctrine of a multitude of learned members of the Church of England in the beginning of the last century, and specially of Mr. Pitt, who published a most erudite treatise in 1708, called The Holy Spirit the Author of Immortality, or Immortality a Peculiar Grace of the Gospel, no natural Ingredient of the Soul; wherein it is solidly proved that St. Paul's hath not one sentence of the Fathers to one text of Scripture on the side of Man's Natural Immortality, a book which accomplishes all Mr. Pitts here promises, in relation both to Scripture and to the Fathers.

We have only revived what Dr. Watts taught when he said in his Rule and Repository of Mankind:—"Who can say whether the word death might not be fairly construed to extend to the utter destruction of the life of the soul, as well as of the body? For man by sin had forfeited all that God had given him — that is, the life and existence of his soul, as well as of his body;...There is not one place of Scripture that occurs to me where the word death, as it was first threatened in the law of innocency, necessarily signifies a certain miserable immortality of the soul, either to Adam, the actual sinner, or to his posterity."

We have only revived what Archbishop Whately taught when he said in his lectures on the Future State (p. 281), published in 1832:—"Life, as applied to the condition of the blest, is usually understood to mean a 'happy life.' And that their's will be a happy life, we are indeed plainly taught; but I do not think we are anywhere taught that the word life does of itself necessarily imply happiness. If so, indeed, it would be a mere tautology to speak of a 'happy life;' and a contradiction to speak of a 'miserable life;' which we know is not the case, according to the usage of any language. In all ages and countries, 'life' has always been applied in ordinary discourse to a wretched life no less properly than to a happy one. If, therefore, we suppose the hearers of Jesus and his apostles to have understood, as nearly as possible, the words employed in their ordinary sense, they must naturally have conceived them to mean (if they were taught nothing to the contrary), that the condemned were really and literally to be 'destroyed' and cease to exist; not that they were to continue for ever to exist in a state of wretchedness."

No wonder, then, that this doctrine of Life only in the Son of God has never lacked defenders; and that when the truth has not run in the main channel it has nevertheless always run in scattered and solitary streams, as Protestantism did for one thousand years under the Papacy. The tradition has never quite died out, but has been handed from one to another, although never till our time has a sufficiently resolute attempt been made to attack the fortress of psychological error on the nature of man. Thus it was that good Mr. Fontaine, of Holbeck, published the truth again in his plain English book in 1817, and seventeen years later (in 1835) the Rev. Mr. De Burgh, of Dublin, in his tract on Eternal Life, and four years later Mr. Storrs, of New York, an able but not lettered man, who has done good service in America.

My own public activity in this revival commenced, as I have described, in 1844 (six years after accidentally lighting on Mr. Fontaine's book in 1838) by the circulation of a pamphlet entitled What was the fall?—followed, in 1845, by an octavo volume called Life in Christ, or Immortality the peculiar privilege of Regenerate Men. In the very same two years the Rev. H. H. Dobney, of Maidstone, published, in two forms, his excellent work on Future Punishment, which no one has yet answered, and which, I think, cannot be fairly answered, even by himself, if we are to be guided by the ordinary principles of interpretation.

Our two books, and our two selves, were attacked in the religious periodicals of this day, with a vehemence and contempt which perhaps betrayed our suspicion of weakness in the assailants. But the good men who wrote against us, and stirred up a popular indignation which resulted in a prolonged excommunication, are now long laid to rest, and we will say nothing of their past behaviour. Nothing except that that noble man, and true friend of the people, Mr. Henry Dunn, Secretary of the British and Foreign School Society, himself a firm believer in Immortality through Christ, undertook our defence, as young men against the calumnious attack of the Eclectic Review, and showed to the Nonconformist public how unfairly we had been charged with hostility to the Evangelical system.

For seven years these books, although working beneath the surface, made but one prominent convert to the revived faith of early Christianity. This was Sir James Stephen, then Professor of History at Cambridge, where, he has told me, he always kept some copies in circulation. In the Epilogue to his Ecclesiastical Essays he has plainly expressed his opinion on the necessity for a revision in this department of theology.

It was in the midst of these "seven lean years" that the witness for the doctrine of St. John and Irenæus commenced in this planet this pulpit was absolutely the only spot of church ground in London where the doctrine could be openly discussed.

From that time, however, thirty years ago, began a succession of supporting testimonies, of which it is my delightful task now to trace the development.

In 1853, Mr. Horace Hastings, of Boston, published his Pauline Theology, in which he showed with admirable clearness that in the writings of the Apostle to the Gentiles, there is no trace of the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, or a single expression which, taken in its obvious sense, touches anything else than the doctrine of eternal life by the Incarnation. Rom. viii. 14.

In 1855, Mr. John Sheppard, of Frome, the friend and biographer of the celebrated essayist Mr. John Foster, published anonymously his very learned and compact treatise on the Duration of Evil, in which that accomplished scholar (the author of the Thoughts on Devotion, and of another more learned work on the Divine Origin of Christianity) set forth the argument which convinced him of the truth of the re-awakening testimony.

In 1857 Professor Charles Hudson, of Boston (United States), the author of the most useful Concordance to the Greek Testament hitherto published, gave to the world his great work on Debt and Grace as related to the Doctrine of a Future Life. In this treatise, with a scholarship which places Mr. Hudson in the very front rank of American divines, the whole question of interpretation of the Scriptures on these topics is subjected to a searching investigation, and the general doctrine of Life in Christ vindicated with a learning which obtains the highest admiration from those whose special studies best enable them to appreciate it. This great writer has long since entered into rest. As long as he lived he honored and encouraged us with his correspondence, and his name will become more famous in America whenever American scholars shall think fit to appreciate and re-publish his labors. His chief work has long been out of print.

In 1863, Dr. Leask, who had during the preceding twenty years become acquainted with the earlier writings on the subject, commenced the publication of the Rainbow, and a few years later, in 1868, opened its pages to the discussion of the question of Immortality. In its earlier and later years it has been exceedingly useful in this direction. The kind-hearted editor has perhaps been too easily persuaded to give the benefit of his pages of late to believers in the doctrine of eternal life, who have somewhat damaged the argument by their advocacy of astronomical and ethnological theories which true science must sternly reject. Every good cause suffers from the additions of the weaker brethren who support it. Many of us, also, have frankly differed from the Rainbow in its too tolerant tone towards the doctrine, not merely of the sleep of the soul in death (which, so long as men believe in a surviving sleeper, should form no ground of serious separation between the upholders of the common faith), but also of the doctrine of the actual dissipation of the soul in death, — a theory rendering it impossible for ordinary minds to conceive of the personal identity of man in the resurrection, or even to understand our Lord's words, "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Matt. x. 28. But, although absolutely by my own conscience compelled to make this single exception in reference to the Rainbow, considered as a representative magazine, it is far more necessary to record on this occasion the eminent and persistent service that Dr. Leask has rendered for many years and still renders, at great personal cost, and, with conspicuous ability, to the object which is so dear to his heart.—Edward White.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to such subscribers to contribute at least one dollar each. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

E. E. DWIGGINS, President.

"PRAY ONE FOR ANOTHER."

Look the Master's glorious bidding,
"Ye the little ones today,
That, each other oft remembering,
When they bow their knees to pray,
Love may grow more strong and fervent,
Healing deep and spreading far,
Watered oft and still increasing,
Till no evil thought can enter.

Pray for help, and pray for healing,
For the dear ones that you love,
By your prayers, together helping,
All to be, like him above,
And "agree" in intercession,
Holding up each other's hands;
This, the way we indicated,
Guided by His just commands.

He will answer—if believing
—If his words in you abiding
If you do the thing that's pleasing
Walking closely by his side;
And, if such devout petition,
So according to his will,
He has given his pledge and promise
"I will your desire fulfil."

Send not, agent, unapt petitions,
Ye some kind and loving King;
He would have you tell when passing
Just the things that he shall bring.
Be it friend, or be it brother,
Say their names before him now,
All the wants of each one pleading,
Till they come, his face to know.

God has needed all the members;
None apart from work are kept,
That the answer and the blessing,
Come, because they prayed and wept.
Moses prayed, with tender feeling,
For the courage by others done;
This, the secret of his weakness;
So must now be victories won.

When you kneel, if aught 'gainst any,
In your heart of hearts doth live,
Every rankling hate and malice,
Wrongs and injuries forgive.
Be like him, so gentle and kind
Blessing with your love and calm,
Else will he not listen to you,
All your prayers will be in vain.

So the hands all pure and holy
Where the offering you left,
Grateful incense sweetly rising
With no wrath or doubting there.
Oh, pray oft for one another,
All ye little flock today,
That your God, each lonely pilgrim
Safe may pilot all the way!

SATAN AND HIS ARMY.

I forward herewith an article on, titled "Spiritualism—the experience of a converted Medium," which has been placed in my hands by an intelligent lady of this city who has but recently been liberated from bondage to Satan, and is now eagerly drinking in the Word of Life. The story reads like a vision from another world, as indeed it is, revealing to us some of the workings of "the potentates of this darkness, the spiritual things of wickedness in the heavenlies."

This "experience" is almost identical with that of a reliable Chicago gentleman of my acquaintance, which was published in Our Rest several months ago; and as by the mouth of two witnesses this truth is established it will not do for practical people to pooh! pooh! the testimony away.

Speaking of my own knowledge of these two witnesses, their intelligence cannot be questioned, neither can their honesty be impeached. They are few people more practically minded and less superstitious than I am, yet in investigation of the phenomena called Spiritualism, in connection with the word of God, forces me to the conclusion that, when we have stripped it of all that it owes to legerdemain and humbug, and all that it receives from natural forces, there is still remaining a broad foundation of fact on which to base a belief that intelligent, supernatural beings do work through human "mediums" to produce the phenomena.

Having reached this conclusion, the first question that suggests itself is:—What is the character of these supernatural or spiritual beings?

1. Are they what they claim to be, the disembodied spirits of human beings? To this we are forced to answer No! for the reason that this would be in direct conflict with the word of God, which declares plainly that "the dead know not anything," and in numerous places teaches concerning death that it is a sleep, and shows clearly that the only hope of an existence after this present mortal state is by means of a resurrection of the corporal body.

2. Are they of that class of spiritual beings known as angels? Again we are forced to answer "in the negative, unless we should except the class spoken of as "fallen angels," those who "kept not their first estate." No! messengers from God would bring a false message. If they were heavenly agents they would not represent themselves as being disembodied spirits of human beings. If they were the angels of God, they would not teach that "God was a myth, and Christ and his atonement a cunningly devised fable."

3. There is therefore no alternative but to believe that these supernatural beings are lying spirits, and in some way related to him who was "a liar from the beginning," and upon this hypothesis I believe we can show clearly from the word of God the true source of the phenomena of modern spiritualism.

I am aware that there are, in the age many Sadducees who deny that there is either angel or spirit, but no lover of God's word will doubt the existence of spiritual beings, and it is the hope of every child of God that he may himself, when born of the Spirit, become a spiritual body. The testimony concerning the existence and ministry of angels is overwhelming, and is not doubted. Down through the ages, since the time when they sang together and shouted for joy over the new born world, these heavenly messengers have done the bidding of God, and ministered to the necessities of the saints. Hagar, Abraham, Lot, Balaam, the children of Israel, Gideon, David, Elijah and Daniel were recipients of their ministry, or received through them the message from Jehovah. An angel brought the message to Mary that she should be the mother of the Messiah. Angels announced his birth, and a heavenly choir shouted the glorious anthem, "Peace upon earth; good will to men." They attended the Savior after his conflict with Satan. They comforted him after his agony. Angels rolled the stone away, and announced the glad tidings, "He is not here, he is risen!" and as they attended the ascending Lord these same heavenly messengers shouted the words which are the hope of the true Church today—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Truly, they are all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation;" and in the time of wailing many a child of God has by experience learned that "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."

Among these spiritual beings in the heavenlies who are in harmony with God there are undoubtedly grades and classes, "even as star differeth from star in glory," ranging from the humblest ministering spirit upward through the ranks of cherubim and seraphim, principalities and powers, archangels and princes to Michael the Chief Prince; and, pre-eminent, as Commander in Chief of this host of the armies of heaven stands Jesus, the Captain of our Salvation who has been exalted "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world but also in that which is to come." Eph. i. 21.

Such is the scriptural view of angelic hosts. They come and they go at the bidding of their Chief. They appear occasionally as physical beings, but their ministry is more frequently without being apparent to our natural senses. Even as there are orders of life below the human, so there are gradations of existence above us, and these, because beyond our natural vision, we term spiritual. To discern them we need a sixth, or spiritual sense, which will come at the birth of the Spirit.

It also appears from such glimpses of this higher world as are given to us in the Scriptures of Truth, that there is even there a rebellion against the authority of the Great Eternal One, we read that "the angels that kept not their first estate," but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Jude 6; see also 2 Pet. ii. 4. We read in the book of Daniel, chap. x., how the angel Gabriel was prevented from coming to Daniel with a message by the being known as the "Prince of the kingdom of Persia," until Michael, one of the princes, came to help him; showing plainly a conflict of authority. The idea of this conflict is confirmed by Jude who declares: "Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee." The outcome of this conflict is given in Rev. xii. 7-9, where we read: "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was there place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him."

There is a class of teachers who endeavor to prove the non-existence of a personal Satan and attendant powers of darkness, by showing the meaning of the terms to be adversary, accuser, etc., reasoning from this that any adversary is a devil. I have tried to make myself believe this, but in vain. The reasoning is too specious, and by following the same class of argument to its logical sequence we could reason away God, the angels and the Christ. To illustrate: Satan, adversary, means adversary, and is so translated in some places. There are numerous adversaries; therefore there is no personal Satan. God—Elohim means Mighty One, and is many times translated God. There are many mighty ones to whom the term is also applied; therefore it does not refer to a personal God. So we might say of the original terms for Christ and the angels, and thus at one sweep get rid of Satan, as well as of God and Christ.

But the devil is not so easily gotten rid of, and the numerous references in Holy Writ to his personality must command our respect. Do not suppose that I am arguing for the immortal, omniscient devil of orthodoxy. I would simply show that sin and rebellion against God did not originate among men, but was brought to us by one of a higher order of beings, who with his followers, in the language of Peter "As a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour." Under his various names and titles he is recognized as a personal being by a number of inspired speakers and writers who refer to him, as the Devil, Satan, Apollyn, Beelzebub, Belial, Prince of this world, Prince of Devils, Prince of the Powers of the Air, etc. His great object appears to be to defeat every good work, and to sow tares among the good seed of the kingdom. He met humanity at the fountain-head, and befouled the stream; but his doom was sealed by divine fiat at the same time when the words were spoken, "I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head, but thou shalt bruise his heel."

In due time the woman's seed appeared, and met the adversary in mortal conflict. The Christ was victor, but the conflict between their forces still rages, but as to the final outcome none can doubt, for Satan and his hosts are powerless in the presence of one who bears about with him the ransom of the Lord Jesus; and for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil," 1 John iii. 8. The victory will be complete, and the head bruised which "The devil that deceived them shall be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." Rev. xx. 10.

Jesus in arguing with the Pharisees, who charged him with casting out demons through the prince of demons, recognized that there is such a being, and identified him with the one mentioned in other places as Satan. Matt. xii. 24-28. Now this Scripture clearly teaches three things: Firstly, that Beelzebub and Satan are identical; Secondly, that he is the prince of demons; and thirdly, that there is a class of evil spirits, or demons, who are subordinate to, and under command of their prince. Of this latter point there is abundant corroborative testimony. It is argued by some that the numerous references in the Gospels to those "possessed of devils," are simply descriptions of people suffering from lunacy, and other diseases; but I cannot so read the word, which certainly recognizes them as personal, intelligent beings, who can speak, bear, suffer from fear, recognize the Christ as their foe and judge, and proclaim him to be "The Christ the Son of God." "The devils believe also and tremble." A few testimonies are sufficient to establish these points:

In Luke iv. 33-36 we read, "And in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean demon, and cried out with a loud voice saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee? Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him."

To whom did Jesus speak? Was it to the man or to some other intelligent being that had control of the man? It could not have been the man, because Jesus said, "Come out of him" (the man); thus recognizing the personality of the demon who had addressed him. The same idea is taught in verses 41 See also Matt. viii. 29, where they converse with Jesus and confess him to be the Son of God.

We might multiply testimony but these are sufficient to establish the point that evil spiritual beings known as demons do exist, that they recognized Jesus, and obeyed him, and that Jesus recognized them and commanded them as one having authority. These testimonies also prove that these spirits "possessed" or had control of human mediums. Now if evil spirits could in the past "possess" human beings, and control and use them to do and speak their will, is it strange or unreasonable that they should exercise the same power in these "latter times?" On the contrary, "the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron." 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2.

Testimony of those who have had experience with these evil beings and succeeded in shaking off their influence is unanimous that they are "seducing spirits," that entice with most beautiful visions and promises, and also that they are consummate liars and hypocrites. It behooves those who are of the "elect" that they be not deceived by these beings, "whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders." The power of Satan is great, and in these latter days he is evidently rallying his hosts for the final conflict, knowing that the coming of the Seed who shall bruise his head is very near. They whose trust is in the Eternal Father, and who have his seal upon them have been nothing to fear from these emissaries of Satan. They are encased in an armor of steel that the fiery darts of the adversary cannot penetrate. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Spiritualism—The Experience of a Converted Medium.

Modern Spiritualism being yet in its infancy, it may rightly be termed one of the wonders of the nineteenth century; for while many cavil and debate upon the genuineness of spirit-manifestations, attributing them to science, trickery, etc., I want to say that experience has taught me that Spiritualism is a wonderful reality.

As we search the Word of God, we find there were spirits of divination, soothsayers, magicians, and even subjects of obsession, away back into the patriarchal ages and coming on down through the history of the world we find here and there evidences of its existence, but we always find it wrapped in mystery; and not until the nineteenth century does it boil out with any promise of intelligent acknowledgement. It was about the year 1848 that the first rappings were heard by the little children of a highly intelligent, and Christian gentleman of Rochester N. Y. By this phase of rappings and table tippings communications were conveyed to the curious, mediums were developed, and other phases discovered, and soon the phenomenon of spirit-communications became widely known; until at the present day it has obtained much power and influence, and is acknowledged by intelligent minds.

The phases at the present time are numerous, and the manifestations so convincing that—"if it were possible they would deceive even the very elect."

My own observation teaches me that the power of spirits is almost unlimited, and while it is clearly the work of Satan and he is the undisputed prince of this world, is there any cause for wonder that he reigns in his own dominions?

I have seen spirits fully materialized; walked, sung, danced, play upon various musical instruments, write, talk, etc. I heard also step them come out in the bright light, in the middle of the room in the presence of skeptics, as well as friends, and wear the garments with which they dressed themselves, making those of the finest texture. This face I have also received samples of and handled by the light of day. They have also dematerialized, these filmy outer garments before my eyes, and have them gradually grown down, as it were, from an adult to an infant, and finally disappear from view.

For two years I investigated these things sometimes doubtingly, but daily becoming more convinced that Spiritualism was the only God, and not only the most wonderful, but the only true thing in existence. The Bible faded into insignificance, God was a myth, and Christ and his atonement a cunningly devised fable.

Being a medium, I developed rapidly from the table I first trusted in the spirit power, developed first into a writing medium, my hand being used by spirits to converse with me alone, revealing the plan of the workings of spirits, and the work they intended for me to execute. Then I became Clairvoyant, and could see the forms with which I conversed, and could look through the human system and see disease wherever located, and finally gave myself completely, and unreservedly into their power, and became a perfect subject for trance control. They then commenced to develop me for public speaking, both trance, and inspirational. They also fall out for me a professional work for the healing of the sick; laying gigantic plans for their execution. To carry out these plans the spirits suggested strategems so transparent, that I doubted their truthfulness. They led me into snares time and again, and doubting, I commenced to sift and compare all that I had seen and heard. But still the beautiful forms and faces of my guides were ever before me, showing me bright visions of the beauteous summerland to which they beckoned me away; and I clung to them even after I doubted their truthfulness.

At this time an evangelical minister passing through the city, stopped at my boarding-house, bringing with him the quiet but unmistakable power of God's Holy Spirit. Two hours before I saw his face, I realized the antagonistic spirit he carried with him, my sensitive and Clairvoyant vision showed me almost immediately the situation, my band gathered around me and armed me against him, lest I should be influenced against them; my eyes were beginning to see, and there was but one conclusion to be drawn, viz.: The spirit world must be peopled with two classes, and these at variance with each other; each capable of acting through the human organism; now the question arose in my mind, can these be the spirits of the departed? If they are not, whom do they represent? These thoughts revolved themselves in my mind even in the face of the throng of spirits around me and before I saw the face or heard the voice of the man of God, who had entered the house; so penetrating was my clairvoyance. For several days this strife continued, during which time no influence other than spiritual, had been brought to bear upon me, but I became more and more convinced that I was in the power of demons, and that if there was a God (which I could not yet realize) the stranger with us must be filled with a power from him.

The spirits surrounded me and kept me from his presence, and several times when in the same room they have barricaded the room so I could not see his face, or hear his voice, and so far controlled my senses that I have been obliged to leave the room to prevent them from entrancing me.

Frequently while in conversation with different members of the family I would not hear or comprehend a word said; but would be caught up, as it were, in mind, and carried to the spirit-world; seeing visions of beauty and grandeur beyond the power of mortal tongue to describe.

There were times when weary in body I have been caught up, and never knew how I climbed the stairs to my bedroom; and with spirit-fingers upon my eyelids I have almost instantly fallen asleep, to be awakened in the morning by the same gentle magnetic touch.

After I could no longer doubt the source of these influences, there came bright forms followed me, and with pathetic sadness begged me not to cast them aside; but thanks ever be to God! I was not left to myself; he who is infinitely greater than our hearts, condescended to draw me to Christ.

I tried to cast them from me, I tried to pray; but they surrounded me and scoffing at me they asked me to whom I proposed to pray, and taking possession of me, conveyed me back to the parlor, so far entranced me that I could not recognize a face of the family. I realized I was still in the body, yet I seemed to be in a charmed circle with no power to escape. Presently I heard music, it seemed to be afar off, nearer and nearer it came until I could hear a voice that seemed to accompany it. I listened and distinguished these words, "I'm a child of a King." Like an electric shock the words brought me to myself. They came to me with this significance: You are a child of the Devil. The words thundered in my ears:

"I'm a child of a King."
You are a child of the Devil.

They both seemed to be spoken at the same time and by the same voice. As if affrighted by the voice of a higher power, the spirits left me, and I stood alone. Alone! Oh the significance of that word as it then applied to me! every nerve was unstrung, and in the next hour I suffered more intensely, both mentally and physically than I ever conceived it possible for mortal to suffer. Alone! the dark waters encompassed me about, I had no rudder, compass or chart; tempest-tossed, with no anchor to stay my frail barque. Sinking alone in midnight darkness, and no hand to save.

This state of darkness continued from November 20th until December 3d with only occasional visits from my spirit band, who came with angels of light and beauty, to tempt and hold me in their power; but I began to realize a strength added to my desire for light; probably through the prayers of some of God's children, whom I had asked to pray for me, and I resolved to be free.

On the night of December 3d, I resolved a letter that gave me courage. I felt there was a power back of the words, and I began to reach out blindly after God. I opened the Bible in the presence of the throng of spirits that surrounded me, and they, seeming to see the light that was coming, became enraged. The beautiful, loving, angelic faces that had so often enraptured me, now became distorted by hate. It was the midnight hour; the [illegible] room in which I sat became [illegible] with spirits whose faces were dark [illegible] hideous.

I do not draw an imaginative picture, I am speaking of plain facts that my eyes have seen, and my senses realized. I bid my face upon the pages of my Bible, and tried to pray. At this they taunted me and one said, "Such as you have no claim upon Christ, you have cast him aside, ignored him, and now he will not hear you; there is no forgiveness for you, neither in this world nor in the next."

What! Do demons acknowledge God and verify the word? Surely then there is a God, and his word is true and he promises to save to the uttermost.

I rose to my feet; I shook their hands from my shoulders and my head where I felt and saw them, and in the name of Christ I bade them begone forever from my presence; and my last clairvoyant vision was that of seeing the spirits flee from me. Praise God! All that is within me praises his holy name." I was free from their power. Again I stood alone, but not hopeless. I believed in God, I believed his word; and yet, like the demons, I trembled, as in shame I stood before him. I opened the word and saw the words of the dear Savior, viz.: "All that the Father hath given me, shall come to me. And him that cometh unto me I will in no-wise cast out."

Reader, if you have felt your nakedness, shame, and need in the presence of the God of boundless love and mercy, you know how gladly I came to Christ, and if you know what it is to come unto him in faith, you know how he filled, warmed and clothed me, and sent me on my way rejoicing. It is a story that cannot be told.

In conclusion I have a word to say to that class who are honestly investigating spiritualism. I sympathize with you; but suffering as I have I can intelligently advise you to keep aloof from it. There is always danger upon the enemy's ground, and spiritualism is the most delusive and successful snare that the enemy has ever set for our feet.

TIDES OF TROUBLE.

We clip the following from a recent daily. How rapidly events are shaping the closing times of the Gentiles. Men of little faith feel the shock of impending judgments, but how few are heeding the divine admonition: watch!

DISCONTENT IN EUROPE.

In 1822, Washington Irving, having been seventeen years in Europe, was tendered a public dinner in New York city, which was attended by many of the notables of the times, and the great author, in responding to a toast, said:

"I come from countries lowering with doubt and danger, where the rich wish troubles and the poor more frowns, and where all recline at the present and dread the future. I come from these to a country where all is life and animation, and where everyone speaks of the past with triumph, and of the future with confident anticipation. Is not this a land in which one may be happy to fix his destiny? I am asked how long I mean to remain here. They know but little of my heart who can ask this question. I answer as long as I live."

That was half a century ago, and those memorable words are as fully expressive of the condition of Europe to-day, and even more so, than they were then. The rich man trembles and the poor man frowns. There is wealth in Europe, great wealth; and there is poverty also, and great poverty. The rich are few and the poor are many, and this lies at the bottom of all the troubles that prevail. Europeans do not fear the hungry, and while the force proceeding from concentrated power may keep men in subjugation, it does not produce contentment or loyalty. The poorly-clad and ill-fed citizen is naturally restless. The great mass of the population of those countries are always frowning and scowling at the present while dreading the future. There is no bright bow of promise in the sky. All around are poverty and wretchedness, and what the people of the present suffer the posterity (also) may expect to suffer. Hush may be endured to-day if there is hope for to-morrow; but sad indeed is the lot of those who, half starved in their native land, are debarred from looking forward to better times or more comfortable homes. The lot of the poor man in any European country is a sad one. Instead of getting out of the meshes of poverty, he gets more and more entangled, and, hardly able to stay where he is, he is not able to get away.

Under such circumstances the rich are, of course, uneasy, and princes rest not upon beds of roses. Wealth surrounded by poverty-stricken people does not bring happiness or contentment.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.--No. 25.

Prelude—Great centre of emigration—Great Gentile empires, Whence came they? Unity of plan in peopling the earth after the flood—Saxons traced from their home in Southwestern Asia, to their location in Central Asia—What people were they?

Prelude.—It is very generally conceded, that, after the flood, the earth was settled by the three sons of Noah: Shem, Ham, and Japheth; the first dwelling in Asia, the second in Africa, the third in Europe. This division, is in part, correct. It is true, however, that, at a very early period, they became mixed.

For many centuries after the Deluge the colonies were confined to Asia and Africa. Peculiar circumstances caused emigration to enter Europe. History establishes the fact that Central Asia, or the region east and south of the Caspian sea was the chief emigration centre.

That part of Asia gave birth to the Medes and Persians, who, under Cyrus the Great, overturned the Babylonian empire. The Macedonian and Roman empires had their origin in later emigrations. Still, they can be traced to parts not very distant from the migratory centre. Asiatic soil has ever been fruitful of great nationalities. Central Asia lies within the belt of empires.

There is a unity of plan in peopling the earth after the flood. The distribution of Noah's descendants indicates the work and superintendence of an all-seeing and in omnipotent Actor. The mental powers of Shem, Ham, and Japheth, are accurately weighed, and their bounds fixed. Again, all generations are carefully noted, and the earth is moted out accordingly.

The idea is illustrated in Jacob and Esau, Ephraim and Manasseh. God sees the future, and selects and educates the material for his purposes. The future kingdom of Messiah requires the existence of such a plan. The metallic image, and the stone, in the Divine mind, existed in the days of Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel. Yet the material had to be formed and adapted to the work.

The earth, from its creation, was designed for one family, under the government of one Supreme Ruler. That order was broken up in the first Adam, but will be restored in the second. Every prophetic student should study history as well as the Bible with this unity of purpose in view — Messiah's people and reign. That people will be a selection from the human family; the Messiah will be their Ruler over all the earth.

The reign will be over a righteous people, and in righteousness. Who can contemplate the gradual unfolding of this divine plan without the most profound emotions? The seed of the woman! Mark its checkered pathway through the national convulsions of sixty centuries. How many are its future trials, before it enters the repose of its endless Sabbath!

The Saxons traced from their home in Southwestern Asia, to their location in Central Asia. — This history will form the first part of their broken historic chain. We purpose to trace this part of the chain to the broken link in Media, or in Central Asia. And then, (to keep up the figure) to weld the broken link. This accomplished, we shall have one unbroken historic chain of the Saxons (Anglo-Saxons) from Southwestern Asia to the British Islands—with a hook at each end of the chain.

Before tracing this first part of the chain, it will be well to place before the reader that part of the chain which we have already traced. This shall be done in as few words as a clear view of the subject will allow.

On the British Island (90,000 sq. m.) is erected an empire of 60 colonies, with a population of 250,000,000,—8,000,000 sq. m. That empire belts the globe; rules the ocean; is first in commerce; first in war resources; first to knowledge; and first in missions. The ruling family of that mighty nation are the Saxons (Anglo-Saxons). We traced that family to their European home which they occupied more than one thousand years, till their territory was too strait for them, when they conquered their present island home in Great Britain.

We learned from their history that they were not aborigines of Europe, but that, about the 7th century before Christ (some place it as early as the 8th century), they came, in the second or Scythian, Gothic, or German (modern name, meaning north men) emigration from a region east and south of the Caspian sea; thus establishing their Asiatic origin. In that location B. C. 700, we find them, not the aborigines of that country, but strangers, foreigners, from some other Asiatic home. Here we found our broken link. We drove a stake through the last perfect link, and began our search for the remaining part of the chain, that, of the two parts, we might form one perfect chain. It is established then, that the Saxons, the ruling element in the British empire, came from Central Asia, through Europe to the British Island; that they were foreigners in Central Asia. Whence came they into Central Asia? Their nationality previous to their migration into Central Asia? This problem we now propose to solve. This accomplished, there will be no difficulty in welding the broken link, and perfecting the historic chain. Give us time and attention.

To find the original Saxon home, we propose to begin with the call of Abraham (Abram) out of Ur, in southern Mesopotamia. His call was by Jehovah to a separate nationality. His name is changed from Abram (high father), to Abraham, the father of a great multitude: clearly marking his future destiny.

His anxiety for the speedy accomplishment of God's promise led Abraham into a family trouble. He becomes a father by his bond maid Hagar. Ishmael grows up to be mad in possession of his father's affections, when a change takes place: — a great ethnological change is predicted. In answer to Abraham's prayer, "O, that Ishmael might live before thee." God said, "Sarah (mother of nations) thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, (and) with his seed after him. And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly: twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation. But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee."

After the birth of Isaac Abraham's tent had too many for domestic comfort. Sarah and Hagar fell out about their children. The weaning of Isaac was made the occasion for a great feast. Sarah's jealous black eye caught Ishmael, the son of Hagar, the Egyptian, mocking somebody, Isaac perhaps. This was too much for Sarah, who runs (in hot blood) to Abraham saying, "Cast out this bond-woman and her son, for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, (even) with Isaac." (There was a good deal of human nature in Sarah.)

And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son. And God said to Abraham, "Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad, and because of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice: for in Isaac shall thy seed be called. And also of the son of the bond-woman will I make a great nation, because he (is) thy seed."

Out of these grew a national antipathy that has flowed down through all ages to the present time. The hatred between the seeds of Isaac and Ishmael. Two religions, equally hostile,—the present and the cross—have, perhaps, the same origin. Ishmael was the first born of Abraham: why, then, not the heir? He was the son of Hagar, a bond-woman. And by law, the child was doomed to his mother's bondage. There was another reason for the preference of Isaac to Ishmael, the undeveloped traits of character of these Abraham's two sons, and their posterity. And here again we discover the foot-prints of the divine Ruler. As if God had said, Isaac is the heir of my promise to Abraham, and to that end I bestow upon him the honor, and the name (in Isaac shall thy seed be called). He shall possess the characteristics necessary to carry out my purposes in the future ages. God had a purpose in the creation and control of the earth; and, therefore adapts the means to his contemplated ends. With this divine chart before us let us trace the history of Isaac, and through his chosen posterity the chain of the God-appointed seed.

Isaac and Rebecca had each a favorite: they were twin-brothers, Esau and Jacob. The father was partial to Esau, the mother to Jacob. Esau, being the older, had the birthright. He was by nature a "Bedawy" "son of the desert," free, and nomadic—a child of the desert. This wild son Isaac loved for his excellent venison. How many are governed by appetite rather than by the dictates of reason.

Jacob was his mother's boy; a lad designed by Jehovah for quite another sphere. Having by deception obtained his brother's birthright, he fled from Esau's anger; yet, in a dream, he soon learned that he was in the line of the chosen seed. In a wilderness, with a stone pillow, he slept. Heaven is opened, a ladder connects earth and heaven, "angels ascending and descending on it." Above the ladder stood the Elohim, saying, "I (am) the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And behold, I (am) with thee, and will keep thee in all (places) whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land: for, I will not leave thee, until I have done (that) which I have spoken to thee of." And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put (for) his pillows, and set it up (for) a pillar, and poured oil upon the top of it. And he called the name of that place Beth-el (the house of God), but the name of that city (was called) Luz at the first. And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God: and this stone which I have set (for) a pillar, shall be God's house, and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth to thee." Gen. xxviii. 11-22. God did thus sustain him as requested; therefore, that stone became God's house. On that stone Jacob was crowned, and became a link in that chain of Royal High Priests. What became of this stone—Jacob's coronation stone — God's house? Perhaps we may learn more of its history. Keep this in mind, that it is a coronation stone in the house of Jacob (Israel). About 21 years later, Jacob, wrestling with an angel, had his name changed to Israel (prince of God); for, as prince he had power with God and with men, and has prevailed. Gen. xxxii. 28.

Jacob had his favorite son also—Joseph,—a pet child—about the only favorite not spoiled in the process. Joseph's dreams, and his fancy coat excited the envy and deadly hate of his brothers. By this hatred through God's management Joseph is placed over Egypt, and saves his father and family through a protracted famine of seven years. This famine brought Israel with all his sons into Egypt. From the call of Abraham to their departure out of Egypt was 430 years. Ex. xii. 40, 41. Their real bondage was about 215 years. They came out of Egypt in families (12) and dwelt and marched in the wilderness in tribes; and in the following order: In front of the tabernacle, Benjamin, Ephraim and Manasseh. In the rear, Zebulun, Judah and Issachar. On the right, Asher, Dan and Naphtali. On the left, Simeon, Reuben and Gad. They settled as tribes in the land of Palestine.

The Gothard railway proper is 118 miles long, and there are in all not less that 56 tunnels, comprising more than one-fifth of the line. The main tunnel is nine and one-fourth miles long, and others exceed 6,000 feet in length; the large tunnel is 26 feet wide.

THE BIBLE BAPTISM DEFINED AND DEFENDED. THE NAME TO BE USED.--No. 3.

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."—Paul to the Galatians.

Those who oppose the use of the baptism formula in Matthew xxviii. 19 and suppress the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit in the act, cite instances from the New Testament of ministers wrought and of baptism administered in the name of the Lord, as if they supposed those who differed from them denied or would deny that statement. It is difficult to see any reason for the waste of time—the misapplied industry in accumulating proofs of that which no one disputes. The frequent reference to that name in the preaching of the gospel, etc., is easily accounted for. The question in dispute between the apostles and their Jewish gainsayers and persecutors (among whom exclusively they preached for nearly the first ten years of their mission) was whether Jesus was the Messiah—both Lord and Christ (as Peter and the other apostles affirmed) or whether he was an Impostor and Pretender, and whether they were not to look for another. It was not to be expected that the apostles should abate one jot or tittle of the claims of their Lord as the true Messiah, of whom Moses, in the Law, and the prophets did write. Hence it is written, in the Acts, that "Paul, as his custom was, went into the synagogue of the Jews and reasoned out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that the Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ." "And that he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks, and that when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia Paul was pressed in the Spirit and testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Messiah; and that they insisted that God had raised him up from the dead and, as Peter and John declared, that he was now exalted to God's right hand as a Prince and a Savior to give repentance unto Israel and remission of sins," and that he had sent them to preach, to work miracles and make disciples of all nations in his name and by his authority.

Those of their hearers who believed their proclamation and recognized the crucified Jesus as their now risen Lord, readily yielded everything else and accepted the teaching of the apostles without further question. This sufficiently explains the repeated reference to "the name of the Lord," as the source of the authority for what they said and did. But who is thence authorized to infer that this invocation of the name of Jesus, involved the least disparagement of those other words the same Lord uttered in respect to the Father, Son and Holy Spirit? Who can perceive any antagonism or opposition, the one to the other? Our Lord himself has taught us that a house divided against itself must come to destruction. Is he to be supposed, by any stress of argument, to disparage himself or to deny his own words? Surely not. Are we then to presume to do so? Yet is not that exactly what some over-wise critics have done and persuading others to do?

Doth not our Lord say, "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken: the same shall judge him in the last day"?

As to any question of the baptismal formula, in Matthew xxviii. 19, it may be said that men never improve on the divine models, and while it is always safe to follow the words of Jesus which are "the words of eternal life," it is always perilous to depart from or supplement them, or mix our inventions with divine precepts. To "speak as the oracles of God," to give a "thus saith the Lord" as authority for what we do, and "thus it is written" for what we teach and preach, "to keep the ordinances" as the apostles delivered them to us and to "hold fast the form of sound words" is to use "sound speech that cannot be condemned," and to be safe. We run no risk of wrong, therefore; in using the divine words when truly translated.

With these premises before us we are at no loss whatever as to what is to be believed and what is to be done in order to constitute the valid baptism which the Master and the apostles ordained. The penitent believer of the gospel, wishing to obey the truth, was, in the name or by the authority of Jesus, the Christ, to be baptized into the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; and he was farther to be taught by the apostles to "observe all things whatsoever the Master had commanded them."

In Acts we read that "they that gladly received his word were baptized," that "when the Samaritans believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptized, both men and women"—that as Philip and the Eunuch went on their way, the former "preached unto him Jesus" and that coming to a certain water, "Philip baptized him," that Lydia and her household and the Philippian jailor and his house, believing the word of God which Paul preached, "were baptized," and that "many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed and were baptized."

Now in these several instances, six in number, no mention is made of the use of the name of the Lord or of that of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit in baptism. But are we thence to jump to the conclusion that all reference to the authority of the Lord and to the new relations which the baptized sustained to the Father, Son and Holy Spirit were concealed, suppressed or omitted? Would not that position prove too much and thus overthrow their argument?

As to the language to be used by the administrator of the rite, such words, spoken at the time of the baptismal act, as the following, or any words of equivalent meaning, would seem to all every reasonable requirement and condition of our Lord's command, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ and upon the confession of your faith in the gospel of the kingdom of God (or in the things of the kingdom of God and of the name of Jesus Christ) I baptize you into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." In such a baptism every constituent element of the divine command is embodied and there cannot be any superfluity, omission or error. Now we ask in candor, can we say the same if we purposely reject and suppress that part of the commission, as recorded by Matthew, which embraces and requires the use of the "name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit?" Does not such suppression mutilate the divine command and leave it more than half unsaid? Nay, it is not rejecting, in the act, not in the words of Jesus only, but the invocation, presence and co-operation of the Father and the Holy Spirit?—setting aside the Fatherhood of God and the inspired guidance of the Spirit, in the holy ordinance? Does it not accord to be a Godless and a Spiritless act?

Is it lawful to add to or take from the words of the Lord? Is it not changing the terms of salvation offered in the gospel and to that extent perverting the gospel and making it another gospel, which Paul certified the Galatians that neither the apostles nor even an angel from heaven had any right to do? and could not do with impunity? Is not such a change in God's law like offering strange fire on the altar of the Lord?

Doth not the Master say, "He that entereth not into the sheep-fold by the door but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber"? Does he not say emphatically, "The words that I speak unto you they shall judge you at the last day?" Is it wise or safe to reject these words? Does he not say also this through his servant Peter, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God," and testify to us, through his apostle Paul, with equal solemnity, "If any man teach otherwise and consent not to wholesome words—even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself."

Have the advocates of the new baptism considered this testimony and its consequences in their length and breadth?

We are not a little surprised to see resort had to quotations from Neander, a Jewish historian, and to avowed Unitarians, to uphold the new theory of baptism—certainly not a very imposing authority to be weighed in the balance against our Lord and his apostles. Surely a Bible position should be upheld and proved by Bible testimony, and it borrows no strength in the esteem of intelligent Christians, from merely human authority proceeding from fallible man. The use of such names in matters of Christian faith and practice, among our brotherhood, who have long since rejected humanisms in our divine religion, would seem to argue a conscious sense of weakness in one's cause.

It is appropriate here and in this connection to propose a fair test of the accuracy of those inferences as to the saying of the apostle Peter and of the transactions on the day of Pentecost, for it is mainly, if not exclusively, on Peter's saying in Acts ii. 38, that the whole opposing theory hinges. We have already seen that we have in the apostle Matthew and in the historian Luke two witnesses of all that was said and done on that occasion and we have the proof in the Holy Record that they wrote their respective histories, as we have seen, after the day of Pentecost and with a full knowledge of what Peter taught and of the baptisms which took place on that memorable day. Now our proposed "fair test" is to interrogate these witnesses, for they have given their depositions (which are fortunately preserved for our use) and to abide by the result of their testimony. Who can consistently refuse to appeal to two such competent witnesses to the point in dispute between us?

1. We affirm that Jesus commanded the penitent believers of the gospel to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, and we give the proof in the very words of the Master as recorded in Matt. xxviii. 19.

2. Now it is not denied that our Lord so commanded, but on the contrary, it is admitted, but it is said also that neither Peter nor his colleagues did so baptize on Pentecost, and it is affirmed that they baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus "only," suppressing and disobeying that part of the commission which commanded them to baptize either in or into "the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," thus setting aside and ignoring altogether these words of the Great Teacher.

This statement of the case represents the position of the parties to the issue. It is already proven and admitted that our Lord commanded the baptism to be "into the name etc.," and we need not stop to insist that all the presumptions and probabilities are in favor of his servants obeying and literally carrying out his orders. It is by no means to be presumed or argued that these special apostles and witnesses would signalize their service in the cause of their divine Lord and Savior and bring upon themselves shame and disgrace by an act of disobedience and treachery, thus early in their missionary career.

We here the right, therefore, and are in duty bound to believe that they delivered the gospel's message and terms exactly as they were commanded and that they would see to it that the baptism was practised as they had been taught. He who denies this and affirms the contrary, cannot expect to be believed; in the absence of the most absolute and unquestionable testimony to the contrary, and the burden of proof lies on them to make good their assertion. Now let us examine the witness, Luke, on this point of the testimony. Does he say that Peter suppressed or rejected these words of Jesus? Does he say that the suppressed words were not uttered by Peter or that the baptisms were not so administered? It must be admitted that no such testimony exists. What then does he say? Simply this, that the anxious enquirers should "repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus" for the remission of sins; and the narrative adds that "with many other words he testified," i. e., bore witness of what Jesus had commanded to be told them. Yet this so-called testimony from Luke's Acts, supplemented by citations from the same book, that baptism was, in other cases, performed "in the name of the Lord," constitute all the testimony from Holy Writ to support such startling and sweeping conclusions and consequences!

So far we see no conflict between Peter's statements by Luke and Matthew's narrative. Both are entirely consistent. Luke says Peter told the new converts on Pentecost to "Repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord," and Matthew deposes that Jesus commanded all such to be baptized "into the name etc." Cannot both be true and both have been actually performed? We seek in vain for any proof of what is now asserted that (only) "the one name of Jesus Christ" was used at Pentecost, that the apostles "used only the one name," that the "apostle Peter baptized in (only) the one, all saving name" and that Philip.... "baptized in that name only," statements entirely unsupported by any Bible testimony whatever, the words "one name," "only," and "single name" of Jesus being not found in the whole Bible. So much for Luke's deposition.

Again as to Matthew's: as he must have known what Peter said and did at Pentecost when he wrote his gospel, is it at all credible that he should not have known that the words "into the name etc.," (if it were so) were not to be used in baptism, as is now asserted and yet he makes no mention of the fact and proceeds to record the words of the commission which flatly contradict that statement? Is not the contrary statement to make the divine Record self-stultifying and to destroy all confidence in its authenticity and accuracy? [illegible] respective questions [illegible] and let him compare [illegible] with the proof we have thus [illegible] lated, then decide which is truly [illegible] and which is deplorably destitute of all logical proof. Those who deny this conclusion seek to prove that the Lord did not intend to [illegible] particular formula of baptism, by using the words reported by Matthew and failing to find any Bible testimony to sustain them in that assertion, betake themselves to profane authority and to musty tradition to the opinions of Justin Martyr, Meyer, Neander, Dr. Priestly and others to prop up an argument which can find no Scriptural sanction. Is not this to copy after the commandment and doctrines of men and not after Christ?

When the authority of the act of baptism is to be set forth the preposition en (in the Greek) which signifies in (in English) is always employed. This is shown by many examples. But when the Greek eis is used it is according to the usage of the Greek language and literature to render it into. Numerous examples in our common version show this. Thus we have "As many of you as have been baptized (eis) into Christ have put on Christ."

A greater than all the prophets is said to be expected at Bokhara. In the last week of February a man appeared in Bokhara who said that he had come from Namkan, and he demanded in Allah's name, to be led before the Emir. The interview was granted, and the man thereupon informed the Emir that he was sent to announce that the age of the Mehdi (Messiah) was close at hand, and that the Mehdi would himself appear on the tenth day of the sixth month. He wished the Emir to send him with a greeting to the Mehdi, and was told to stay in Bokhara till he should depart upon the message to send. The Emir had him examined by experts, who pronounced him neither a madman nor a beggar. He was lodged in a handsome dwelling, a Mohmendar was appointed to serve him, and the choicest food sent him by the Emir. He refused to touch it, and said that he had not come to eat food or garment, but to deliver a message. He contented himself with eating a few ounces of a medicament with he carried about with him, and, so far as any one could discover he tasted nothing else day or night. He said that the Emir was free to accept or reject his demand to be sent as the bearer of a special greeting to the coming Mehdi.

THE ENDLESS LIFE.

Discourse II.—Part 2.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH OPINION ON HUMAN DESTINY DURING THE LAST THIRTY YEARS, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY THROUGH THE DIVINE INCARNATION.

In 1863, Mr. Henry Dunn published his two volumes on The Destiny of the Human Race. Mr. Dunn made no pretensions to be a critical scholar, and therefore sometimes stumbled; but he was something better than a mere verbal critic, he was a most broad-minded, honest, and devout thinker; above all a man who walked ever with God, whose house was a temple, and whose study-table was like the golden altar. In response to [illegible] his principal [illegible] immortality, and on a fundamental denial of [illegible] immortality through the incarnation of God in Christ,—in those eternal life he held, with Mr. Isaac Taylor, that multitudes of man would be made sharers hereafter, who had enjoyed no opportunity of becoming sharers in it here. Mr. Dunn was not a Universalist, inasmuch as a few months before his death he intimated to me his general agreement with the argument for evangelization of the race and its final issues, as stated in the later editions of Life in Christ. Mr. Henry Dunn's work on The Study of the Bible is a manual which deserves perpetual remembrance. I stood by this dear friend's open grave at Norwood a few years ago, and it is a grave which deserves a reverent pilgrimage from those who know how to revere a pioneer in the search for truth, one of the most princely-hearted and generous of mankind.

In 1864, the venerable Ami Bost, father of the celebrated philanthropist of La Force, published his pamphlet on the Doom of the Wicked, in which he expounded the Christian doctrine of Immortal Life in Christ.

In 1865, Professor Barlow, of Trinity College, Dublin, published his work on Eternal Death, in which he maintained the same views.

In the same year, Mr. Letton, of Dublin, a barrister, now one of the Irish Land Commissioners, published his excellent volume on Life and Death.

In 1866, Rev. W. Ker, Vicar of Tipton, published his work on Immortality in Christ; followed by another in 1880, called Immortality: Whence, and for Whom? — perhaps the best shilling manual of introduction to the study of the question.

In the same year, the Rev. Thomas Davis, M. A., revered throughout Yorkshire as Vicar of Roundhay, near Leeds, a ripe scholar and a charming poet, published his critical treatise on Endless Sufferings not the doctrine of Scripture, which has passed through several editions.

In 1867, Prebendary Constable appeared for the first time in the field. He published his great work on Future Punishment, one of the clearest, and I think most decisive, books in modern popular controversy. It has happily passed through several editions. Mr. Constable is now occupied in replying to Dr. Samuel Cox's Salvator Mundi in the pages of the Rainbow.

In 1868, the Rev. Samuel Minton, M. A., after holding [illegible] a very long period, for reasons assigned in his Fragment of Autobiography, the belief of Life in Christ, was at length so deeply impressed with the importance of the truth, that he avowed his belief to his congregation at Eaton Chapel, with the result of awakening a general discussion in the country, ten times more earnest and searching than we had been able to excite in the preceding twenty years. To this bold and self-sacrificing clergyman, who abandoned all hope of promotion in order to advance the cause of his Master, is due, more than to any other individual, the first wide diffusion of these ideas throughout the English-speaking world; and it is chiefly to his sacrifices that subsequent writers owe the freedom with which they have been permitted in the Church of England to treat the whole question without serious loss of reputation.

In 1869, Mr. William Maude commenced those papers on Immortality, in the Rainbow, which, as long as they lasted, were the chief ornaments in scholarship of that periodical. To Mr. Maude is due no small share of the honor which belongs to the few disciplined scholars who took an early part in this discussion.

In 1870, Dr. Petavel, of Geneva, read to a Theological Society, originated by Professor Godet, his argument entitled The Struggle for Eternal Life, since published with this title in English, with a preface by Dr. Dale of Birmingham, and in French as La Fin du Mal. Dr. Emanuel Petavel, formerly pastor of the Swiss Church in London, brought to the discussion the habits of a carefully-trained scholar, and the aid of no small erudition, both in classical and oriental tongues. In earlier years he had known England well, and had become conversant with the controversy there proceeding. God was thus preparing him to become the leading representative in the French-speaking countries of the revived doctrine of Immortal Life through the Incarnation —a doctrine which is at this moment maintaining in the Chrétien Evangélique of Paris, against the misrepresentations of the younger Godet, with a learning, a logic, an energy, and a success, which have raised the admiration of impartial readers.

In connection with Dr. Petavel's name it is proper to mention here, though it properly belongs to the year 1874, that of the Rev. Charles Byse, now of Brussels, then in Vaudois pastor, a man of extraordinary attainment in the classical languages, as well as in Hebrew and Arabic. He was brought in God's providence to spend a year in England, and through Dr. Petavel he was brought to worship in this church. This seemingly accidental combination has borne fruit. Mr. Byse became a learned and able assertor of the doctrine on Eternal Life, and both of these foreign friends, being excellent English scholars, honored us by devoting two years to translating "Life in Christ" into French (Mr. Byse translating, Dr. Petavel assisting the revision); thus giving it currency amidst the vast population of France and Switzerland. Few English books have ever enjoyed the fortune of falling into the hands of more accomplished translators.

The result of their labors already begins to appear. The whole question of conditional life has been formally discussed in several important conferences of pastors in France and Belgium; with the result of revealing among not a few of the wisest of their number, a profound sympathy with the theology of Irenæus and St. John. In Paris, in Lyons, in Montauban, and in other places, there are vigorous supporters of the main argument. In Paris, Monsieur E. Monogox, Director of the Theological Faculty in the Protestant Seminary, has just published a book on Sin and Redemption, in which he declares St. Paul's faith in Life in Christ. In Montauban, the Pastor Choisy has courageously avowed his convictions in the same direction. In Geneva, Monsieur Cæsar Malan, one of the foremost thinkers in Switzerland, and Mademoiselle Gautier, the able daughter of a learned father, are warmly devoted to the same doctrine.

In 1870, Mr. Pottingell, Chaplain of the American Embassy in Brussels, prepared a work, called The Theological Trilemma; or, the Three Theories on Human Destiny considered in the light of Reason and Revelation. Mr. Pottingell has now returned to America, and is at this time bringing out a considerable volume in support of the main thesis, which will also contain a Symposium, or series of contributions made by American and English writers on the bearings of this doctrine. Mr. Pottingell has the ear of a wide circle in the United States, and we trust that he will succeed in making it clear throughout the United States that the doctrine of the immortality of the children of God only is not a "passing [illegible] as Dr. Dexter truly declared it to be in the Congregationalist newspaper, but a belief deeply rooted in the convictions of scholars as profound, and of Christians as devoted, as any who entertain the conviction that evil is eternal. It is too late for language like that of the Congregationalist to arrest the controversy in America. Dr. Dorner, of Berlin, has spoken of the mode of discussion adopted in at least one of its representatives [illegible] in a letter to the translator as being "thoroughly scientific," and it must be a strange "fanaticism" which attaches so vast a company of devout and accomplished inherents and proclaimers in all lands.

In 1870, the Rev. John Denniston, M. A., a learned Baptist minister, brought out his work on the Perishing Soul, which has reached a second edition. The calm and scholar-like tone of Mr. Denniston has been the means of convincing no small company of discerning readers. He now lives in Jamaica, where, doubtless, he still holds up the light of truth in that thickly-peopled centre of the West Indian Archipelago.

In 1870, also, appeared the work of the Rev. William Griffith, of Eastbourne, called the Entire Evidence of Evangelists and Apostles on Future Punishment, with Notes on the Teaching of Dr. Angus. This work is now approaching a second and much enlarged edition, and contains a chapter called Immortal Life the Golden Thread of St. John's Gospel, which will doubtless, attract attentive readers.

In 1870, also, appeared Professor Birks' work on the Victory of Divine Goodness, interesting chiefly as an evidence that the conscience of argument was beginning to tell even upon the strongholds of orthodoxy at Cambridge. But the extent of Mr. Birks' concession was only to throw out the extraordinary idea that God would perhaps create an inferior Paradise in Gehenna for the solace of the eternally damned. Naturally such a theory gained few converts.

In 1872, Mr. Dale, of Birmingham, after preaching the doctrine of Life in Christ for some years in his own congregation, avowed more publicly his conviction of its truth in a meeting of the Congregational Union. Thither he has repeated his adhesion—I, in a preface to the English translation of Dr. Petavel's work in 1875; I, in an article in 1876 in the Congregational Magazine, of which he was editor; and I, at a meeting held in this church in the year 1877. The influence of Mr. Dale's confession of faith throughout the country has been very considerable, multitudes of preachers having taken courage, at least to commence an inquiry into the doctrine set forth, whom no inferior authority, or prima facie appearance of evidence, would have persuaded to the investigation.

About this time, when the tide had begun to turn rapidly in favor of the more simple interpretation of Scripture language on life and death, the opponents, of various schools, began to consider of resistance. In 1875, Mr. Baldwin Brown published his lectures on what he called the Miserable Doctrine of Annihilation, regarded in the light of the Gospel of Love, in which the matter was set forth in such a manner as to persuade me that a restatement of the whole controversy had become necessary. This, thirteen years to the publication at the end of 1876 of an entirely new work, to which I attached the old title of Life in Christ, the growth at least of a lifetime of study.

This publication was the signal for a renewed interest in the discussion. In 1870, occurred the Meeting at Cannon Street Hotel, of the leading advocates of the revived belief in Conditional Life, specially of those who thought it of unspeakable importance in relation to Foreign Missions. Through the liberality of one gentleman, an edition of 50 000 copies of the addresses then delivered by Mr. Constable, Mr. Heard, Dr. Lorimer, and others, was widely distributed by post. A large exposure—a copy being specially sent to every English-speaking minister on earth, whose name could be ascertained—a measure which is rightly believed to have contributed the modification of the thoughts of a multitude of missionaries in all heathen lands.

During the years from 1870 up to 1876, the cause received important aid from a variety of careful writers in magazines and pamphlets — notably from the Rev. T. W. Hobson, M. A., of Douglas, in his crushing reply to Garbett; from Mr. James Waylen, an artist, a scholar, and a theologian; from the Rev. Thos. Warleigh, rector of Ashchurch; from Dr. Weymouth, headmaster of Mill Hill, (who expressed in one pregnant sentence his impression as to the meaning of the leading Greek terms employed in the New Testament in rendering the words of Christ); and from the Rev. J. H. Tinling, B. A., of Eastbourne, whose wide experience in Home Missions added special weight to the argument of his book on the Promise of Life.

In 1876, Canon Farrar preached those sermons on Eternal Hope, in Westminster Abbey, which shook the whole country with astonishment, and woke into inquiry innumerable slumbering divines who had dreamed on contentedly on the edge of what they professed to believe was a hell of endless torment for unsaved mankind. Dr. Farrar's point of view was the practical incredibility of the orthodox faith as it stood. As head master of Marlborough he had met with much occasion for thought on the religious character of boys, and on the eternal destiny of boys dying at fourteen to fifteen years of age, with good moral dispositions but no developed godliness. Had these poor fellows really gone to everlasting torments under the government of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? Accordingly, taking just advantage of a public feeling prepared and excited by the labors of previous writers, he openly attacked the prevailing opinion with a directness and passionateness of assault, which, if it added little to the argument, certainly shook the foundation of established errors in the higher classes of society. —Edward White.

"My mind fails to conceive a grosser misinterpretation of language than when the fire to strike amongst us [illegible] which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying "destroy" or "destruction," are explained to mean annihilation as a refuting but not a real sentence. To translate white as black is nothing to this."

Submission.

My God, I thank thee! may no thing
Which checks thy cherished loved purpose
But may this heart, by chastening, sanctify,
Calm each wild wish, each idle fear.

The world's ways all manner bloom:
The sun shines bright, and man is gay!
Thine, all sweetly spreads the gloom,
That darkens o'er his little day.

Yet living a thorn of grief and pain—
Thy Spirit and crying child must know!
But not one prayer is breathed in vain,
Nor do'st one tear unheeded flow.

Thy various messengers employ
Thy purposes of love fulfil:
And build the work of human joy,
Let trembling faith adore thy will.

As Christ, the first fruits, passed through the grave and went up to glory, so there shall come from their sleeping dust in Asia, in Africa, in Europe, and America, from every mountain-top, from the depths of the sea, from deep ravines, and from lofty outspread Oh there shall come, in the time of the glorious harvest—the uprising of humanity, waking from their long sleep to shout the harvest home! For Christ invites his followers to overcome and sit down with him on his throne, as he overcame and sat down with the Father on his throne (Rev. iii. 21). In that is the pledge of our resurrection from the dead. Can I die sinless, since Christ suffered? Can I rot the since Christ died? Let the grave be my resting-place, for Christ rested there. Is it cold? The warmth of his animation is in it. Is it lonely? He shall be beside me in all his Spirit's power. Does the load of earth drove me, and beneath which I am placed, press upon me? Christ hath power to burst the tomb, though deep it be, and I shall rise through his almighty power. Then, rejoice in God. Dry up those tears. Cast away that dowdest look. Child of the dust, you are an heir of glory.

Antioch.

About three hundred miles north of Jerusalem, and twenty miles [illegible] the river, stood the city of Antioch. Located near the base of Mount Casius in a beautiful and fertile plain through which flowed the river Orontes, it was admirably located as an emporium for trade from the East; while through its harbor, Seleucia, it was in direct communication with the maritime cities of the west.

For many centuries Antioch was the most important and magnificent city of the East. It was the capital of the Greek kings of Syria; the home of princes and lords of the wealthy nobles of Rome. Its history is also linked with the apostolic church, for here the disciples were first called Christians.

It was here that Barnabas and Paul once tarried for "a whole year" and "taught much people."

It was also here, in the church where the Jews and Gentiles perhaps first mingled, that Paul, on the question of Jewish and Gentile intercourse and communion, withstood Peter "to the face."

The disciples had previously been called believers or Galileans, but here, for the first time, they were called Christian, a term by which their followers have ever since been designated.

This name, first applied, perhaps in derision, to the disciples and the members of this single church, has since become the adopted name of the universal church of Christ, for which millions have died, and by which millions still rejoice to be called.

Although Antioch has given the church a name that has lived through the ages, yet it has not retained its own. Overthrown and ravaged many times both by wars and earthquakes, its glory and its name have departed, for it is now a miserable city, but a relic of the past, known as Antakin.

Once a centre of gospel-light for the Gentile world, from whence apostolic missionaries went forth to the "regions beyond" to proclaim Christ, it has now become a field of modern mission work, where missionaries from England and America are laboring to scatter the light of the gospel amid the darkness that there reigns.—Working and Waiting.

Cigar Library.

"What do you do with all those books?" asked Rayner pointing to some well-filled shelves upon the wall.

"Oh that library is my one cigar a day," was the response.

"What do you mean?"

"Mean! Just this. When you bothered me so about being a man, and learning to smoke, I'd just been reading about a young fellow who bought books with money that others would have spent in smoke, and I thought I'd try and do the same. You remember, I said I should allow myself one cigar a day."

"Yes."

"Well, I never smoked. I just put by the price of a five cent cigar every day, and as the money accumulated I bought books—the books you see there."

"Do you mean to say that those books cost no more than that? Why, there are dollars worth of them?"

"Yes, I know there are. I had six years more of my apprenticeship to serve when you persuaded me 'to be a man.' I put by the money I have told you of, which of course at five cents a day amounted to $18.20 a year, or $109.50 in six years. I keep those books by themselves as a result of my apprenticeship cigar money; and if you'd done as I did, you would by this time have saved many, many more dollars than that, and been in business besides."—Golden Censer.

PARIS, April 21.—A report has been received here from Cairo that Mahomed, the false prophet, has been captured in the town of Khartoum, in Soudan.

MARSEILLES, April 20.—The natives of Madagascar are busily engaged in making weapons. They declare that they will not surrender an inch of territory to the French invaders. The Malagasy Envoys have gone to Berlin, where they will be received as imperial guests.

LONDON, April 13.—A telegram from Hong-Kong, dated the 11th inst., received here, says the French Minister to China had arranged the Tonquin affair satisfactorily in December, but the new French Ministry rejected the arrangement. The result, the despatches says, will probably be a long and costly war for France. China will use her best troops, which will probably be commanded by European leaders and will perhaps have the assistance of a European ally.

LONDON, April 23.—The Times says the Government obtained information in the course of the recent inquiries that the enrolled members of the Fenian organization in the United Kingdom, number 150,000.

The town of Liverpool had a $1,250,000 conflagration Saturday night.

The towns of Wesson and Beauregard, a mile apart, in Mississippi, were desolated by a terrific cyclone Sunday afternoon. The name of Beauregard, a community of 500 inhabitants, was one of indescribable horror, the entire town being in ruins, and nearly all its people being either killed or injured. Wesson, which was a town of about 1,500 people, suffered loss, but is a partial wreck, and the casualties are many. The towns of Tillman and Lawrence, in the same State, also suffered terribly. As far as heard from, the number of the dead is about forty, and of the injured over 150.

I would willingly send another six months to those ten to whom I have been sending, if I know that they took interest enough in the papers to read them carefully and show them to any others that would read them. I have no money to waste. It is only by constant habits and strict economy that I have one dime of spare means. But if those brethren, (for they are principally ministers) will let me know through THE RESTITUTION or by private letter, their wishes, I will freely send the paper another six months. If they decline, the copies must go to those who will read. The cause is God's, we believe, and for it we must work.

Eighteen Hundred Moslems.

Eighteen months ago the Turkish Government arrested and imprisoned a number of Moslems charged with reading the Christian Scriptures and with attending Christian chapels. The activity of the police at that time struck terror into the hearts of those inquirers and seemed to close the Moslem field against all Christian teaching. Since that time over 80,000 copies of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, in the Turkish language, and printed in the character used by Moslems only, have been sold in the Turkish Empire. This large sale of Scriptures to Moslems is, perhaps, not so remarkable, since Mohammed in his earlier teachings often referred his disciples to the Christian Bible for confirmation of his statements.

Spiritualism is said to be spreading so in some parts of Austria that the Bishop of Bohemia has been compelled to denounce it as a heresy. Two Catholic churches in Cincinnati are reported to be much disturbed by the development of spiritualistic doctrines among their members, some 200 being infected with them. Last week the First Society of Spiritualists in this city celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. The speakers, one of whom was Mr. Henry Kiddle, late superintendent of schools in New York City, complained of unfairness of the press toward Spiritualism and of persecution, and of the "cranks" and dabblers in Spiritualism who had brought it into contempt.

Italy, though apparently quiet, is really busy completing her armaments. According to measures taken at the Italian War Office, seventy-two new Alpine companies were formed at the end of last year. In the course of this year twenty batteries of field artillery, four regiments of siege artillery, each consisting of fifteen companies, two regiments of sappers, four companies of railway troops, and six companies of military train will be organized. In 1884 there will be men and material enough for the creation of two new army corps, which will make a total of twelve instead of ten. The Italian war department possesses at present 700,000 Vetterli rifles, amply sufficient for the standing army and reserves. One hundred and forty-two million cartridges are ready for immediate use. Further supplies of firearms are in course of fabrication. The fortifications of Spezzia are being actively completed. Those of Rome are nearly finished, and already partly armed. Fortified works are being constructed at Valo, Gaeta, and Messina, while new fortifications are being erected at Venice and Elba.

A correspondent of the London Times says: M. de Lesseps speaks very freely as to the prospects and details of the inland sea scheme, and he thinks his personal inspection must decide its fate. The proposed basin will be fifteen times as large as the Lake of Geneva. The molehills engendered by its formation will bring vast tracts of desert land into cultivation, and an approach to valuable forests, now wholly inaccessible, will be facilitated. Exclusive rights over this land and the forests will compensate the company which undertakes to excavate the connecting channel. A preliminary survey has been completed by Commandant Roudaire, and there is no doubt that the level of the lakes is fourteen meters lower than that of the Mediterranean. The chief question now requiring elucidation is the nature of the soil between Gabes and the lakes. If it turns out to be anything but rock, M. de Lesseps tells us there will be no difficulty in speedily carrying out the project, which he says, has occupied his attention ever since it was suggested to him by the Empress of the French, at the opening of the Suez Canal.

A Test.

Much is said about tests; but what of the test in John xiii. 35? Heathen of old saw and admired those who bore this test, which honored the disciples of Christ more than aught else. Yea, is talk of "being in Christ" when indifference is shown concerning the sufferings of those who are fellow-communicants. Here is an unmistakable test indeed. Let those who indulge the expectation of participation in the glory, honor, and immortality in store for the faithful, ponder I John iii. We venture to say that a company of twelve persons, bearing the fruits and evidencing the characteristics delineated and mentioned in this chapter, would be truly as a city set on a hill, wherever such company might exist. Where are the true ones?

H. HEYES.

MOUNT AUBURN, April 12, 1883.

Mrs. Weethee desires to acknowledge through THE RESTITUTION, the reception of four cards of natural flowers from Jerusalem; selected, arranged, and sent her by Sister A. E. Davis of that city. For natural beauty, and exquisite brilliancy of colors, and artistic arrangement, it would be quite difficult for either nature or art to excel. On the largest card, surrounded by a tasteful wreath of most charming flowers, is a most enchanting view of the Mount of Olives. The view is taken from a conspicuous point in the city. Many interesting localities can be seen as you look towards the mount, the Tyropœon valley, Gethsemane, with their various surroundings. But the mount itself has along its slope and on its summit, associations, which the mind refuses to surrender. Two, only, have we room to name: 1. The flight of David and his people from the presence of Absalom. 2. Messiah's battle throne in the final conflict. Before this eventful scene all others vanish. In that day! What a change passes over the face and structure of this quiet mountain. The city is full of battle cries, and shouts of successful infidel warriors. Plunder and ravishment fill the overthrown city. Its pious citizens have trusted to a higher arm. A sound is heard from the summit of Olivet. There stands Messiah: all holy ones around him. A shout goes up, the mountain parts north and south, making a mountain valley for the brook Kedron. The way is opened for flight. The enemies are overthrown and the captives rescued. Lord Hitler, thy seeking and conquest. Dr. Davis' letter was received. Thanks to her; will remember her again when practicable.

WHO SHALL ROLL AWAY THE STONE?

H. WASHINGTON MORE.

That which weeping ones were saying
Eighteen hundred years ago,
We, the same weak faith betraying,
Say in our sad hours of woe;
Looking at some trouble lying
In the dark and dread unknown,
We, too, often ask with sighing,
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

Thus with care our spirits crushing,
When they might from care be free,
And, in joyous song out-gushing,
Rise in rapture, Lord, to thee.
For, before the way was ended,
Oft we're had with joy to own,
Angels have from heaven descended,
And have rolled away the stone.

Many a storm-cloud sweeping o'er us
Never pours on us its rain;
Many a grief we see before us
Never comes to give us pain.
Offtimes in the feared "monsterous"
Sunshine comes, the cloud has flown!
Ask not, then, in foolish sorrow:
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

Burden not the soul with sadness;
Make a wiser, better choice;
Drink the wine of life with gladness:
God doth bid thee, man "Rejoice!"
In to-day's bright sunlight, breaking,
Leave to-morrow's care alone;
Spoil not present joys by asking
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

THE NAME OF THE LORD.

"And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord. And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation." Ex. xxxiv. 5-7.

The importance of this proclamation is shown by the august and majestic manner of its delivery,—"the Lord descended in the cloud" to proclaim it. Also from what is said of the Lord's name in other places. Thus Moses says, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: because I will publish the name of the Lord: ascribe ye greatness unto our God." Deut. xxxii. 2, 3. It is also written, "They that know thy name will put their trust in thee," and "whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." Psa. ix. 10; Prov. xxix. 25. "I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy law." Psa. cxix. 55. "If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange god; shall not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart." Psa. xliv. 20, 21. We must therefore endeavor not only to know the divine name, but also to remember it, often when all other names are being forgotten. It was a prominent theme in the Redeemer's own ministry, for he says of his disciples, "I have declared thy name unto them and will declare it;" and observe the weighty motive for doing this, "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them and I in them." Jno. xvii. 26. A book of remembrance was written for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. iii. 16, 17.

Let these thoughts induce us thoughtfully consider this proclamation which the Lord has condescended to make of his name. The Hebrew word (kara) here rendered "proclaimed" signifies also to publish and "preach." "I will publish (kara) the name of the Lord." Deut. xxxii. 3. "Go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach (kara) unto it." Jon. iii. 2. It seems to blend the three meanings in this proclamation which in few and comprehensive words publishes to all people one of the most important subjects ever preached to men. Although so important it is a much neglected subject, perhaps because to the English reader the words "Lord" and "God" convey not the volume of meaning which their originals did to the ear of the Hebrew believer.

"The Lord." When this name is printed in capitals in the Old Testament portion of the Common Version, it indicates that the Hebrew of it is JEHOVAH, which is usually pronounced Jehovah, and is derived from the Hebrew verb hava, to be. The name Jehovah, therefore, denotes that he is

1. The self-existent One. The great I AM, having "life in himself," as the Father and source of our existence. Jno. v. 26. "He giveth to all life and breath and all things" for "with him is the fountain of life." Acts xvii. 25; Psa. xxxvi. 9. If a fountain withhold its waters, all it vivifies will perish, so, "If he gather to himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again to dust." Job xxxiv. 14, 15. We may gather some idea of how fatally self-pastor is to life to ours by contrasting them in a few particulars. His life in himself," independent and self-sustaining; while ours, from the king in his palace to the beggar on the highway, depends on such a multitude of circumstances as food, water, air, sleep, raiment, warmth, etc., that it seems to be suspended, as it were, on a single strand of hair. Hagar said, "Let me not see the death of the child,"—he of whom "a great nation" sprang, was "ready to perish" for a drink of water. "What is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away" Jas. iv. 14. And not only does his name denote that he is self-existent, but also that he is

2. The eternal, unchangeable, and incorruptible One. His existence is not only independent but endless: it cannot be terminated by change, or decay, or the lapse of time. He says, "I lift up my hand to heaven and say, I live forever.....I am the Lord, I change not." Deut. xxxii. 40; Mal. iii. 6. He is "The Father of lights with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Jas. i. 17. What a contrast is this to human life which is constantly changing from youth to old age. In a few days we may be so changed as to scarcely resemble ourselves. Job's friends "lifted up their voice and wept" when they "knew him not," on account of the change his affliction had wrought.

But the Lord is "The King eternal, immortal, invisible." 1 Tim. i. 17. "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Deut. xxxiii. 27. He is "The incorruptible God," Rom. i. 23. How insignificant appears "corruptible man" in contrast with such a glorious Being. "We all do fade as a leaf." Isa. lxiv. 6. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass." 1 Peter i. 24. Abraham mourned and wept for Sarah, but desired to "bury her out of his sight," because corruption with its awful ravages was changing and destroying the form and features that he loved so well. But the glorious Jehovah is eternally the same perfect and unchangeable One, of ineffable beauty and splendor. He it is "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. vi. 16. Now, a person who so knows the name of the Lord as to understand the rich and enriching truths which it implies, can easily detect the error of saying that "Noever liked the human soul may be, it also hath immortality." He can see that the also of this latter saying cannot be harmonized with the "only" of Scripture.

"The Lord God." The Hebrew in this place for "God" is "El, which means, "The Mighty One." Thus to all his attributes implied by the word Jehovah, are added all that are implied by the word "El." He is not only self-existent, eternal, unchangeable and incorruptible, but also omnipotent. Some of the wonders of his power are seen in what he has created or formed, as follows:

1. The creation of the work, thus setting God which first made heaven and earth and the sea, and all that in them is." Acts xiv. 24. This beautiful item of the creed of the early church in Jerusalem was never popularized, for they said it with one accord." Here they acknowledge the important truth that the Mighty One who was working miracles and carrying on the gospel work among them, is the same that created the universe; that both creation and redemption have the same great Author. "Ask now the beasts and they shall teach thee; or speak to the earth and it shall teach thee: or the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee. Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this?" Job. xii. 7-10. "And the heavens declare the glory of God," as we look up to those beautiful orbs which glitter in glory," and perhaps too, as some say, in their order, yet all "The heavens declare his righteousness,

And all the hosts of them his glory show."

Even the flowers of the field show his boundless wisdom and power as we look down upon them and remember it is God who "clothes" the lily in its more than royal apparel, and that

"There's not a flow'r that paints the meadow
Or decks the lofty tree,
But wears the humblest form of all
That speaks the Deity."

This, the Basis (uranology), the earth (geology), the lakes (hydrology), the stars (astronomy), and the flowers (botany),—these things and their respective sciences in all their branches—testify to the existence, power, and wisdom of God.

"Every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God." Heb. iii. 4. Would any sane person stand in what is known as "St. Paul's Cathedral" in London, and say Sir Christopher Wrenn was a myth and that nobody built it? Much more would any one talk in that absurd way of "The cathedral we behold,

Whose lamps the sun and moon supply;
Its chief the winds and waves, its organ thunder,
His dome the sky."

"His eternal power and Godhead" are "understood by the things that are made." Rom. i. 20. The adaptation and design everywhere manifest in his works prove the existence of a Creator with wisdom to plan and power to execute. All the combined wisdom and power of men could not create a fly that crawls on the ceiling.

2. The manifold provision made for his creatures. "His tender mercies are over all his works." Psa. cxlv. 9. "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." Matt. vi. 26. "He giveth to all life and breath and all things." Acts xvii. 25.

3. The preparation of a Redeemer, according to precious promises. His birth was accomplished by the mighty power of God, for the angel said to Mary, "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee." Luke i. 35. It was also "the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead and seated him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." Ephes. i. 20. "Herein is love, not that we loved God," for this was while we were yet sinners, "that that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins." 1 Jno. iv. 10; Rom. v. 8.

4. The conversion of sinners. The gospel by which they are enlightened and induced to forsake their sins, "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16. Now as this is God's power unto salvation how can we suppose that any man or woman is saved where that power is not exercised, that is to say, where that gospel is not heard and believed? Is it not one of the greatest mistakes, then, to suppose that the "unenlightened heathen," either among us or in foreign countries, can be saved by sincerity alone, independently of "the power of God"?

5. The continuing protection of believers. He has power to make "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Rom. viii. 28. He "will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." 1 Cor. x. 13. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round them that fear him, and delivereth them." Psa. xxxiv. 7. It ought to, to all Christians, to be a most encouraging thought, that they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Peter i. 5. If is the same God who delivered Noah from the deluge, Lot from Sodom, Israel from Egypt, Jonah from the whale, Daniel in the lions, and three Hebrews from the furnace, Peter from prison, and Paul from the viper, keeping them alive till their work was done. Yet all these were allowed in many respects to suffer tribulation "such as man can bear" (R. V.), for the trial of their faith, the edification of their hearts, and the exemplification of Christian patience, constancy, and resignation. 1 Peter i. 6-9; Jas. i. 2, 3, 12; Heb. xii. 7. But for Job's losses, bereavements and afflictions, how would we ever have come into possession of those precious sayings, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord"? and "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him;" and "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." I recently heard some of these words of Job repeated with great comfort by an aged believer in her last moments.

6. The resurrection of the dead. It was from "not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God" that the Sadducees denied the resurrection. Matt. xxii. 29. Raising the dead is one of the most thrilling and wonderful manifestations of his power that the mind of man can think of. "God hath both raised up the Lord and will also raise up us by his own power." 1 Cor. vi. 14. When the Lord Jesus "shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," this mighty transformation will be "according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. iii. 21."

7. The setting up of his kingdom. It will be by his glorious power that the gold, silver, brass, iron, and jolly clay shall be broken to pieces together and swept away like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor. Dan. ii. 35, 44. Though the teeming millions of the wicked may unpshall their hosts at Armageddon in such frightful array as earth has never seen before, "to make war with the Lamb," yet "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure." Rev. xvi. 14; Psa. ii. 4, 5. And "the adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall he thunder upon them: the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth; and he shall give strength unto his King, and exalt the horn of his Anointed" (Heb. Messiah). 1 Sam. ii. 10. He will take unto himself his "great power" and become "King over all the earth." Rev. xi. 17; Zec. xiv. 9.

8. The destruction of the wicked. They "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thes. i. 9. He "is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Gehenna). Matt. x. 28. "The Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire." Isa. lxvi. 15. "All the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxlv. 20.

And it gives us joy to know that the Lord God is not only immutable, eternal and omnipotent, but also "merciful and gracious, longsuffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands (of them that love him and keep his commandments;" Ex. xx. 6), forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin." These multiplied expressions of pardoning mercy point to "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," and which the heavenly Father out of the wondrous depths of condescending love, has provided for all who believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Eze. xxxiii. 11. Though so infinitely great and perfect a Being, we have the strongest evidence of his love to fallen humanity, for "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. v. 8. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins." 1 Jno. iv. 10. And his having already done this much enables us with strong confidence to hope for every future blessing promised in this Word, for since he "spared not his own Son but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." Rom. viii. 32.

But these assurances of his mercy are not given for the purpose of encouraging us to continue in sin that grace may abound" (Rom. vi. 1), for he is "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look on iniquity" and, in the day of judgment, "will by no means leave unpunished" those who persist in transgression and neglect the "great salvation" which he so freely offers in Christ. Of his "righteous indignation" against iniquity we see some indications even in the present life when, with various calamities, he visits "the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation (of them that hate him)" Ex. xx. 5). Almost innumerable are the illustrations in which children partake of the evil results of the sins, vices and follies of their parents, by hereditary diseases, poor constitutions, bad training, intemperance, etc. See the fate of Eli's house, for example. 1 Sam. ii. 30-36. But there is no conflict between this and the principle laid down in Eze. xviii. 17, that "The son shall not die for the iniquity of his father." Ezekiel refers to "the second death," a punishment which none of the race of man will suffer, however wicked their parents may have been.

It is a most encouraging thought that the perfect Justice of God, our Judge, is not irreconcilable with his pardoning mercy, for the plan of redemption, provided by him, is such that he can "be just" and at the same time "the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. iii. 26. Yes, on this easy condition—believing in Jesus—we can find pardon, peace, and eternal salvation.

I have scarcely more than given a few such thoughts on the enlivening truths contained in this wonderful proclamation. Men have never yet learned an alphabet which could enable them to treat exhaustively such a theme; for "who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord, who can show forth all his praise?" Psa. cvi. 2. Not even "expressive allegory in the profoundest keepings of human intelligence could span the circumference of a theme so vast, grand and sublime.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 11.

GETHSEMANE.

It would appear that our Lord, during his visits to Jerusalem, never spent a night in the city. Sometimes he walked to Bethany, but usually he made the Mount of Olives his home. Thus we read in John, "Every man went unto his own house, Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives," vii. 53, viii. 1; and Luke narrating the events of another visit, says, "In the daytime he was teaching in the Temple; and at night he went out and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives," xxi. 37. A habit is here spoken of,—the usual practice of our Lord, as is still more plainly intimated in the story of his betrayal,—"He came out, and went, as he was wont, to the Mount of Olives." ver. 39; see also John xviii. 2. It appears, moreover, that there was one particular "place" on the mount to which he was accustomed to go, and in which to stay: for it is added, "And when he was at the place, he said," etc. John informs us that this "place" was a garden — an enclosure planted with trees (verse, xviii. 1); and that it was "over the brook Cedron," that is, on the other side from Jerusalem. Matthew and Mark give us the name of the "garden"—"Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane," or "oil-press," doubtless because there was an oil-press in the garden, as there usually is connected with every olive-yard. Matt. xxvi. 36; Mark xiv. 32.

Here, then, we have a most interesting trait in the character of Jesus, and we have a right indicated which is more closely connected than any other with his private life. After wearing and toilsome labors during the day in the crowded streets of the city—after jarring controversies with Scribes and Pharisees in the Temple courts, he was accustomed to retire in the evening with his disciples to this garden, and there spend the night in peaceful seclusion. And when fanaticism broke forth into open persecution—when an infatuated populace cried for his blood, and took up stones to stone him, passing through them he found an asylum in the deep shade of Gethsemane. John viii. 59; Luke x. 25-38. Here, too, he held his Oratory, where he was wont to pray. On the night of his betrayal, when he had led his disciples to "the garden," he said, —"Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder," Matt. xxvi. 36; no doubt indicating some well-known spot away in the deeper shade of the olive trees. There is a strong probability too that this was that "certain place" mentioned by Luke, where Jesus was praying when, at the request of his disciples, he taught them the Lord's Prayer. Luke xi. 1; x. 38-42. It may have been to this very place that Nicodemus came by night, luring heard the secret of the Savior's retreat from some of his followers, or perhaps having been himself the owner of the garden.

That the Son of Man should have his house in a garden—that he should be forced to rest and sleep, and pray on the hillside, under the open canopy of heaven—must seem to many passing strange. It looks like a practical commentary on his own touching declaration. Ezekiel refers to "the second death," a punishment which none of the race of man will suffer, however wicked their parents may have been. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." May we not ask, however, if there was no house in Jerusalem that would welcome him, was not Bethany near? Was there not a home for him in the house of Martha? Why did he not go to Bethany? Those at all familiar with Eastern life will easily understand the whole matter. Nearly all the inhabitants of Palestine sleep during a great part of the year in the open air, on the housetops, or in garden or field. It is common for families to leave their houses in town or village early in spring, and bivouac under a tree or rude arbor the whole summer. Travellers, when about to spend a few days or weeks at a town or village, generally rent a garden and live there. I have often done so myself, and have slept with the earth for a bed, and the starry sky for a canopy. There is no risk, and no dew; the ground is dry, and the fresh balmy air of the country is far preferable to the close, stifling atmosphere of an eastern city. Another thing must not be overlooked. As society is constituted in the East, one can have no privacy in a strange house, night or day. The one apartment in which all the males sit, sleep, and eat, is open to all comers. If we would meditate or pray, we must go, like Peter, to the house-top. Acts x. 9; or, like Isaac, to the field, Gen. xxiv 63; or, like Jesus, to a mountain, Luke vi. 12. Our Lord desired a place where he could be alone with his disciples, and alone with his Father; and he chose the garden on Olivet. Most probably it belonged to some secret friend who placed it at his disposal. Be this as it may, his followers knew it well, "and Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place, for Jesus oftimes resorted thither with his disciples." John xviii. 2.

Often and often I have walked from Jerusalem to the Mount of Olives—by day, in the full blaze of sunlight; at even, when the shadows were deep in the Kidron; in the still night, when the moon shed her pale silvery beams on grey crag and dusky trees. Now I wandered round the southern angle of the Haram, past those great old stones, and along the brow of the glen: now I went straight down from the city-gate; now round by the north wall. All the paths to Olivet converge at the ancient road which winds down the steep bank to the bridge. I always felt, as I passed down that road and crossed the Kidron, that I was treading in the very footsteps of my Lord, and on that very path along which he so often retired, weary and sorrowful, to his retreat in Gethsemane.

After crossing the bridge, the ancient road ascends the lower slope of Olivet for about a hundred yards, and then branches. One branch runs right up to the summit, the other turns to the right. In the angle between them is a little garden, enclosed by a high modern wall. This is the traditional, and it may be the real Gethsemane. At any rate, Gethsemane could not have been far distant. The garden belongs to the Latin convent. Entering we find trim flower-beds, and gravel walks. These have no attractions for us; neither has "the bank on which the apostles slept," nor "the grotto of the Agony," nor any other of the apocryphal "holy places," which ecclesiastical superstition has placed there; but eight venerable olive trees rivet our attention. They are real patriarchs; their huge trunks are rent, hollowed, gnarled, and propped up, and their boughs hoary with age. They seem old enough, and probably are old enough, to have formed an arbor for Jesus. How often have I sat on a rocky bank in that garden! How often, beneath the grateful shade of the old olives, have I read and re-read the story of the betrayal! How often have I fondly lingered there far on into the still night, when the city above was hushed in sleep, and no sound was heard save the sighing of the breeze among the olive branches, thinking and thinking on those miracles of love and power that He performed there!

"Who can the deep wonders see,
Wonderful Gethsemane!
There my God bare all my guilty
This through grace was to be believed:
But the horrors which he felt
Are too vast to be conceived.
None can penetrate the depth thee,
Doleful, dark Gethsemane!

COMING MOSLEM REVOLT IN INDIA.

The Afghan Sheik Djemmal Eddin, now residing in Paris, a member of the princely family of the Bardis, fled from Afghanistan to India after an unsuccessful civil war, and lived there a long time. "Later on he came to Constantinople, where he was made a member of the Superior Council. After a certain time he was expelled from the Turkish capital, and took up his abode at Cairo, where he was professor of science and philosophy at the University of El Azhar. Djemmal Eddin is thoroughly acquainted with the Mussulman world both in India and Egypt. He has published a letter in Paris lately predicting that there is at hand an awakening which will prove terrible for the British Empire; he means the "awakening of India." Djemmal Eddin affirms that it is no exaggeration to say that the intervention of England in Egypt has entailed upon her the loss of all the sympathy and relations confidence with which the skill of her statesmen had, during long years, succeeded in inspiring the Indian populations.

"At the present moment England is the object of the profound aversion of the Indian Mussulmans. Either by instinct, or warned by some foreign papers having views on India, the Mussulman population are possessed of the firm conviction that the aim of England in solving Egypt was to prepare the way for the conquest of Hedjaz and Mecca." Having once laid hands on the centre of Islamism, the English are credited by Mohammedans with the intention of making a supreme effort for the annihilation of that faith. Djemmal Eddin was travelling in India during the Egyptian campaign, and he asserts that all the Mussulmans he met spoke to him to the effect that they must now pray that it will not be long before Russia conquers India from the English, and overthrows their government, for otherwise Islamism will shortly find in them its most violent persecutors." Djemmal Eddin goes on to predict that a formidable rising will take place in India at the moment when the Russians occupy Merv, an occupation which is evidently not far distant.—London Christian Herald.

OBITUARY.

DIED—In Santa Rosa, Cal., after a short illness, March 14, 1883, Mrs. Laura S. Hillis, aged 28 years and 5 months.

The body of our dear sister, with that of her infant son, from whom she was not parted long by death, was interred at Stockton. She leaves two little daughters to the tender care of her bereaved husband and mother. We mourn our loss but not without hope, for in Jesus our loved ones sleeps, not for an endless night, or a sleep that knows no waking—the morning will come, the light is now breaking, soon the Sun of Righteousness will appear. He holds the key of the grave and will open the tombs of his sleeping saints.

Several years of Sister Hillis' life were spent in St. Joseph Co., Mich., where as Laura S. Ellithorpe, she was beloved by all who know her. In June, 1871, she was immersed by Brother E. Miller, at Mendon. She taught school in St. Joseph County some four years, and in July, 1875, was married to R. H. Dougherty, but in sixteen months was left a widow, with the care of an infant daughter. In March, 1877, she with her mother, accompanied myself and wife to California. She soon obtained a position in one of the public schools at Stockton, where she found new friends, winning the love and esteem of all with whom she associated. Here, too, she was parted from her darling "Baby Belle," who died at the age of two and one-half years.

Nov. 22, 1879, she was married to J. A. Hillis, of Santa Rosa, where she has since resided, a happy wife and mother.

He who hath the power of death, has taken from us a cherished friend, an affectionate sister, a loving daughter a faithful wife and mother. But his power is limited. Jesus has broken his chains—we shall meet our loved ones soon again, in a life that is eternal.

Come, Star of Bethlehem bright,
Arrest the power of Satan's sway,
Lift the clouded curtain of the night
That lies from us the eternal day.

In soothing tones a word he speaks
To those the face with patience rap,
And all his words to faith do keep—
"Behold, I come, I quickly come!"

DIED—In Baltimore, Md., March 18, 1883, Amos Jarvis, in his 87th year. He died firm in the faith of the gospel.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $800. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions, and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

R. F. DWIGGINS, President.

Rest.

EDWARD HENRY MCKENSTRY.

When the weary at heart, and the laden with sin,
Have opened to Jesus the things that have been,
When all is forgiven, for all is confess'd,
In the blood of His cross there is rest. Blessed rest.

When in struggling for right, and in wrestling with wrong,
The rough, doubtful path seems most lonesome and long,
Oh, then, like a bow by its mother caress'd,
In the bosom of Jesus is rest, blessed rest.

When the home of our childhood is shadow'd and dim,
And the loved ones we clung to are gathered for him,
While we wrestle and weep on life's sheltering breast,
Still, still Jesus only is rest, blessed rest.

But the shadows shall pass and the tears shall be dried,
And the light and the love shall forever abide!
Without cloud, without end, inexpressibly blest,
For the people of God there remaineth a rest.

Editor Restitution:

The next passage I purpose to analyze is found in the 10th chapter of John's gospel 29th and 30th verses. This passage is also fundamental in its teaching and I have selected it both to correct the mistranslation of the words and to show that the interpretation usually put upon the words of the last verse in the present translation is entirely unwarrantable and a perversion of the thought of the inspired writer contained in them as appears from the original words themselves as well as from their context. The two verses as they stand in the Revised Edition read as follows:

29. My Father which hath given them unto me is greater than all, and no one is able to snatch them out of the Father's hand.

30. I and the Father are one.

The first specific error lies in not following the most approved text which is the latest Tischendorf edition based upon the text of Stephen and Elzevir, and the variation in the 29th verse of this passage is very marked and material in its outcome. The verse, according to this text, reads, when translated literally and without supplying any nouns or pronouns which may or may not be understood, and which fact must necessarily be a matter of interpretation rather than translation, as follows: "That which the Father hath given me is greater than all, and no one can snatch out of the Father's hand."

Now as to the question of interpretation, What does "that which" refer to? He has been speaking in the preceding verse of a power which he possesses to give everlasting life to his "sheep"—a power which no person can transcend or supercede, or as he puts it exactly, not rob him of by snatching his "sheep" out of his hand. It is proper to infer then that the words "that which" in this following verse refer to the same power of which he is here speaking. Supplying the ellipsis then it would read, "The (power) which the Father hath given me, etc." The next question of interpretation is, what does "than all" refer to? It cannot refer to persons. It cannot mean then all persons. For it is a positive comparative modifier of the neuter adjective meaning "greater" and the comparison cannot therefore be between persons and must be between things. Now what thing is he talking about here? Power, is it not? Then we must supply the noun "powers" and translate "than all powers."

The next question of interpretation is to determine what word or words are to be supplied as the object of the verb "rob," or "take by force," or "snatch," in the next clause. Is the statement general or special? Does it mean that no one can take anything by force out of the Father's hand, or some particular thing. I think it very evident that the writer intends to indicate the particular thing "power," so that is the prominent theme of his discourse, and upon this supposition the whole passage would read as follows: "That (power) which the Father hath given me is greater than all (powers) (or in our idiom "all other powers") and no one can snatch that (power) out of the Father's hand." This passage then simply teaches the old fundamental doctrine of all Scripture, viz., the supremacy of God and that he giveth to whom he will and as he will, and that he hath given to his Son power which is subordinate only to his own supreme power. Anything less than this would contradict the text; anything more than this would contradict the whole teaching of Scripture and abrogate his own power as supreme ruler of the universe. Now bear in mind that the writer thus far is speaking of two persons, Father and Son, and of the one giving something to the other which he, the other, receives.

But theological interpretation at this point asks us to ignore the use of our rational faculties or common sense and believe that the writer intends to say in the next verse that these two persons are in reality, as theology puts it, one person, "equal in power and Godhead, etc.," which of course, if true, makes all this giving and receiving a mere figment of the imagination. For one person cannot properly be said to give to himself and receive from himself the same thing and at one and the same time.

Let us analyze the next verse and see if we cannot get a more rational interpretation out of it and one that will not contradict the whole teaching of Scripture as well as banish common sense to the limbo of despair. An exact literal translation of the passage reads as follows: "I and the Father, (we) are one." Why is the verb in the 1st person plural? With a compound subject the rule allows either a singular or plural verb. For instance England, France and Germany is a confederacy or are a confederacy. Why does the rule allow either form of the verb? Because the writer or speaker may have uppermost in his mind the idea of unity contained in the predicate or the idea of plurality contained in the subject, and according as the one or the other idea is uppermost he speaks or writes and good grammar recognizes the fact simply. This grammatical rule therefore determines indisputably, (and should be our guide in interpreting the thought) that the idea uppermost in the mind of the inspired writer here was plurality. Plurality of what? Of persons most assuredly, as the speaker is speaking of persons.

Why is the verb in the 1st person? Because the speaker is in the 1st person, and in a compound subject the general rule of agreement is not violated here so far as person is concerned. Is it safe to infer that the idea of personality or individuality which is contained in a compound subject is generally even carried over into the predicate adjective? Or to make the thought specific, is it safe to infer that the writer in this instance intended to say this "I and my Father (being two persons) are one (person)"? In the first place if he had intended to say this, the predicate adjective should, according to the general grammatical rule, agree in gender with the gender of the persons who constitute the subject. These are both masculine. But the predicate adjective is neuter, indicating very clearly that it does not agree and was not intended by the writer to agree with the compound subject, but with some predicate noun understood which is neuter in its gender and which the writer evidently supposes any one could and would readily supply. Before supplying the word I will give two or three examples of similar expressions in every day use. And first, "I and my wife are one." One person? By no means. But in a great many other modes besides that. "The United States of America are one." One State? By no means, at least, in the sense contained in the word "states" in the subject. One what, then? One government, any child would say. "The North and the South are now one again." One what? One North? One South? By no means. One community of interest, governmental, commercial, social, fraternal.

It is sufficiently apparent I think from these illustrations that it is not safe to assume that the idea of individuality or person contained in a compound or simple plural subject is necessarily carried over to the predicate adjective. The remaining question to determine in interpreting this particular passage is, did the inspired writer intend it should be carried over here and does the grammatical construction with which he fortified his purpose allow it? We have shown that the grammatical construction does not allow it, that it contradicts all the plain teachings of Scripture and further by illustration that it contradicts common sense and common usage. What further arguments is needed? Now what word would be most naturally supplied here which is neuter in gender and with which the adjective pronoun hen (ἓν) can agree? Before I answer this I will premise by saying that the same word or the very identical language and thought used there is used in Christ's prayer for his disciples and all who may become disciples of the same faith through the instrumentality of their teaching. He prays the Father that they may all become one hen even as we (God and Christ) are one. Now I would like to ask any same believer if he believes that his salvation involves the loss of his personal identity or individuality. What word would I supply here then? "Pneuma" meaning spirit or spiritual life or "boulema" meaning will, purpose, both neuter nouns. But I would not confine the unity implied in the adjective to either of these two words, because I think the writer intentionally leaves it to be supplied from the broadest ground of rational inspiration and interpretation.

WHAT IS REGENERATION?

An article was published in the American Christian Review, Feb., 1, 1883, under this head-line. I sent a reply to this article, or rather answered the question embodied in this head-line, according to my understanding thereof; but it was not published.

I therefore pen a few lines upon this important subject for THE RESTITUTION. Regeneration is a theme of the highest importance. It is riveted to life eternal, without it there is no future life. Hence the propriety of the question. What is regeneration? In order to understand the meaning of "regeneration," we should first comprehend what is "generation." The first book in the Bible is called Genesis because it gives an account of the generation of things.

When God had prepared the earth habitation, he then created the birds of the air and fish of the sea, and the beasts of the field, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. God bestowed upon them the powers of generation. "And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful and multiply." After this "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." So the powers of generation were given to man; in his creation God established the laws of generation, and these natural laws remain unchanged to this day. The beginning of generation then, is the planting of the germ, then according to certain laws affixed by the God of nature and in a certain time that germ becomes fully developed, and born into the world, (whether it be of man or of beast), and breathes in the air as did our first parents when they became living creatures. Thus man received life from his Maker, and the Holy Scriptures teach that man should live and not die, as long as he was loyal to his Maker, for the wages of sin is death, "sin is the transgression of the law," "and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death;" so when man transgressed the law of God; God said to him, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Then man became the subject for death.

But, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." So Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." He also said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again (from above) he cannot see the kingdom of God, . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." As man became a sinner, he thereby separated himself from God the Lifegiver, and passes away in the embrace of death, and without a regeneration must remain in the death state forever, and would be as though he had never been. What then is regeneration? Is it not a new birth? Regeneration is generation with a prefix "re," which signifies a second time, or again. We have been born of the flesh, and therefore we are fleshly; but how about the Spirit birth? Does it come upon us all of a sudden, by some mysterious outpouring of the Holy Spirit at some protracted meeting? Or is it by a begetting and a developing according to the divine law of God? James says, "Of his own will begat he us, with the Word of Truth." Peter says, "Being born (begotten) again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

Jesus said, "The seed is the Word of God."

In every perfect seed there is a germ known as the life of the seed, whether it be vegetable, or animal, and by proper attention it will germinate, and develop according to the laws of nature; and when generation is complete each and all are reproduced according to their own kind. Shall there not be life in the seed (Word) of God? Jesus says, "The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life." (R. V.). So when the Word of God is sown in a good and honest heart, the germ of eternal life is then planted. We have an example of this on the day of Pentecost, when Peter and the rest of the Apostles sowed broad-cast the seeds of eternal life, (the Words of God), as they were commissioned by Jesus the Son of God; and as the people received the Word, they cried out, "what shall we do?" when the seed is planted it soon begins to sprout. So "Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." "Then they that gladly received his Word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved," (Revised Version reads); "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were being saved." Thus we see that these were not yet saved, but were being saved. Thus Paul says to Titus, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior, that being justified by his grace, we should be heirs according to the hope of eternal life." Therefore it is by faith in the Word of the Living God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and by a repentance towards God, and being baptized into Jesus the Christ. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

Having thus far advanced in the stage of regeneration, we again listen to Peter, when he says to them of like precious faith, or, who are in Jesus Christ. "According to his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby he hath granted us his precious and exceeding great promises; that through these ye may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world by lust. Yea, and for this very cause adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue; and in your virtue knowledge, and in your knowledge temperance; and in your temperance patience; and in your patience godliness; and in your godliness love of the brethren; and in your love of the brethren love. For if these things are yours and abound, they make you to be not idle nor unfruitful unto the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, for he that lacketh these things is blind, seeing only what is near, having forgotten the cleansing from his old sins. Wherefore, brethren, give the more diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never stumble; for thus shall be richly supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (R. V.). We thus see the need of feeding upon the Word of Truth, Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

These things are all requisite in bringing about the completion of the work of regeneration. It is in this life that we must prepare ourselves to put on the divine nature in the regeneration, by living in obedience to the will of God and feeding upon the Word of Truth, we nourish the germ of eternal life, so the work of regeneration is not complete until Christ shall descend from heaven, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." If we die, and go down to hades, and return to the dust, yet, the germ still exists, for our life is hid with Christ in God. Paul says again, so also is the resurrection of the dead, it is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body.

But, "We shall not all sleep, but we (the living) shall all be changed." For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Thus the work of regeneration is made complete. "Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." (Isaiah). Now what will be the result of "regeneration?" "Jesus said unto them, (his disciples) Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit eternal life." The Psalmist says, "Let the saints be joyful in glory, let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand. To execute vengeance upon the people: to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgments written, this honor have all the saints." Paul says to the church at Corinth, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? . . . Know ye not that ye shall judge angels?". Words of instruction to the church at Thyatira are, "Hold fast till I come. And he that overcometh, and he that keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." So in the regeneration, when the "meek shall inherit the earth," the saints will be the rulers of the nations under Jesus the Messiah, and "shall reign with him on the earth." J. B. COX.

THE JEWISH QUESTION.

SOME CONSIDERATIONS CONCERNING THE FUTURE SOLUTION.

Editor of the Herald:

That there is a Jewish question which is of wider import than the Jews themselves, and that it is occupying the profound attention of thinkers who are not Jews, is made apparent by the current numbers of four of the leading English magazines. The Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's and Blackwood's contain articles by writers who easily catch public attention, upon themes whose tendency is toward some manner of solution of this "Jewish Question."

This question is not a new one, nor do any of the proposed solutions possess the claim of novelty. All of them, however, differ materially from the methods adopted by Russia, and, certainly, the atrocities which were inflicted upon the Jews of Russia since April, 1881, have convinced many that some rational solution of the grave problem is sorely needed. For, be it considered, that there are in Russia some 3,000,000 Jews, who are at all times liable to become victims of hatred and rapacity, inadequately checked, when not abetted by the authorities; in Roumania there are 250,000 who are constantly maltreated and plundered; in Germany there are 500,000 who feel the lash of scorn and ostracism; and in Austro-Hungary there are 1,500,000 who are beginning to feel the strong arm of Hohus prejudice, as wielded so disastrously at Pressburg recently; and only the other day at Aldenburg and Prolantsch. These facts demonstrate the universal character of the Jewish question, and the necessity for obtaining some solution which shall fit that character.

That the solution proposed by the autocracy of Russia does not commend itself to the civilized sense of this 19th century was manifested by the meetings on Feb. 1st at the Mansion House, London, and in Chickering Hall, New York, to express sympathy with oppressed Jews in Russia, both of which meetings ended speedy echo through out their respective countries.

The contribution of Germany to the literature of this subject has been voluminous. During the last three years Stoecker, Von Treitschke, Henrici, Starr and numerous periodicals have delivered many utterances bearing most emphatically upon the Jewish question. The solutions which they have evolved are two; the one party, under Stoecker, being content with placing legal restrictions upon the Jews, the other party, under Henrici, clamoring for their expulsion from Germany. While the virulence of the professed anti-Semitic agitators could, there is no dividend of the movement becoming so influential as to shape legislation, and secure the re-imposition of the legal disabilities which have been gradually removed from the time of Joseph II. until the recent abolition of the Jew tax in Bavaria.

Naturally, the discussion of the Jewish question in England is much more temperate and the hostility is more moderate, but yet such as it is there is hostility, and it is represented by three such men as the historian Freeman, the critic Morley, and Prof. Goldwin Smith. The hostility of this schoolman is based upon the theory of the exclusiveness of the Jews. Thus, Prof. Smith attributes the Russian excesses not to religious prejudice or ignorance, but to "the unhappy relation of a wandering and parasitic race, retaining its tribal exclusiveness to the sacred among which it sojourns, and on the produce of whose labor it feeds." And as proof of this the professor asks; "If Judaism is a religion like other religions, why does it not proselytize?"

But however rigorous these English anti-Semites may be in their criticism, none have as yet advanced any practical active measures to be taken against the evils which they decry, confining themselves rather to exciting a public opinion against the Jews which shall serve as effectually to reprobate them socially and politically as legislative enactments.

A somewhat similar theory as to the exclusiveness of the Jews forms the basis of argument for another very different class of thinkers, who have devoted themselves to the study of the Jewish question. In the September Contemporary Review appeared an article by Claude Montefiore, entitled, "Is Judaism a Tribal Religion?" in which the writer, from a Jewish point of view, criticised the remnants of exclusiveness which still cling to the religion of Israel, and recommended as the best solution of the problem with which Judaism is confronted, that a decisive step be taken which shall shatter every remaining pretext for prejudice against the Jews, by divesting the religion of the Jews of every element which in principle constitutes its difference from the religions by which it is surrounded. Thus he urges the following points: That his reformed Judaism neither desires nor expects the coming of Messiah; does not admit the authority of the Talmudic laws, puts aside as no longer binding all the legal, hygienic and agrarian ordinances of the Pentateuch; adopts the vernacular of each country in the service of the synagogue, and is ambiguous in regard to circumcision and the transfer of the Sabbath. This programme has met a cold response from the Jews of England and America, whence may be judged how difficult would be its reception and application among the Jews of Russia, Galicia and Hungary.

But a more favorable reception has been accorded it from other hands. In the current (November) number of the Contemporary, Frances Power Cobbe contributes a thoughtful review of the topics touched upon by Mr. Montefiore, and is strongly corroborative of his opinion of the regenerative power of such a reform movement upon the religious phase of the Jewish question. And now we approach the boldest, most practical and thorough-going solution of all. It is that which has been for so many years and with so much vigor and ability here advocated by Sir Lawrence Oliphant, and is the colonization of Palestine with all such Jews who are now living under oppressive laws, or are subject to the violence of mobs. This solution, by reason of Palestine's proximity to the scene of England's and Russia's political projects, and its being a Turkish province, has always been more or less involved in that vast web of diplomacy, the eastern question, and has now superadded the burden of the Egyptian question. But from this intricacy M. Ollephant finds a hopeful issue. In his article in the November Blackwood's, he says:

"That one of the first countries which must be affected by the independent Egypt is Palestine, which lies on its borders is certain; that it must of necessity become the first upon which the destinies of the adjoining countries must turn is no less self-evident. As our (England's) policy in Egypt developes, under the pressure of circumstances it is inevitably bound to develop the assurances of the government notwithstanding with the virtual administration of the country by England, the national susceptibilities of France, Russia and Italy, already strained almost beyond bearing, will find active expression. Compensations will be demanded, which must infallibly be the prelude to conferences, of wars, or both, when the Europeans will have to consider French claims to, regard to Syria, Italian claims to Tripoli, Russian claims to Armenia, and the problem of Palestine and the holy places will present itself at the first for solution. We shall not, therefore, have long to wait, before the fate of Palestine will become a burning question."

Such, then, are some of the solutions to the Jewish question, a question which may be put as, "What will be done with the Jews?" This question, with the many problems which it involves, should command the very best thought of all who are capable of contributing aught to its explication. Its righteous solution should enlist the sympathies of all who have at heart the furtherance of humanity.—M. C., in Boston Herald, Dec. 19, 1882.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 26.

Prelude—The decrease of certain nationalities—The decrease of others. The increase of the governed—History of the Hebrews to the captivity of the ten tribes—Their conquest and early colonies.

Prelude.—The Maker of the earth worked by a plan in its construction. Why not equally wise in adapting the human family in its various tribal distributions? The metallic image (Dan. ii.) clearly establishes the proposition. I. The image itself symbolized four universal monarchies, under the control of distinct families; 1. The Babylonian family; 2. The Medes and Persians; 3. The Macedonian or Grecian family; and 4. The Roman and the mixed, or Romano-German family. These, in their times, increased and filled the earth. Flourishing for a time, they began to decline; and when their mission were out, having accomplished God's purposes, they were removed to give place to a new and more active people.

The stone symbolized another nationality. This stone broke the image and reduced it to dust, which the wind carried away; the stone becomes a mountain and fills the whole earth. The interpretation clearly establishes God's national dealings in the past, and his unity of purpose for the future; it teaches us this lesson: that Jehovah has always been the ruler of the nations, and that he designs, out of materials gathered from all nations, to construct an endless and universal monarchy, over which his Son shall rule as King of kings and Lord of lords. That people is called Christ, at their head the "Seed of the woman." All other nationalities are the seed of the serpent. The serpent's seed must decrease and be exterminated; while the seed of the woman, by its inherent vitality, shall fill the world. Revelation and history abundantly establish this central idea. Some would say that this is a natural result. True. But what is nature other than God's continued mode of action? To bring about certain results, their causes must be under control. Speaking of the increase of that seed, God said to Abraham, it shall be as the "stars" and as the "dust." Isaiah says, "For unto us a child is born; unto us a Son is given; And the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Father of the everlasting age, the Prince of peace. Of the increase of his government (the governor) and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to fix it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, henceforth and forever; the zeal of Jehovah, God of hosts, will do this." Isa. ix. 6, 7. As God hath declared that a certain seed should be so increased as to fill the whole earth, other families must decay and cease. Where now are those dynasties that have occupied the thrones of the four universal empires? Buried —beneath the ruins of the dead past. They filled their missions and were removed into hades. A glance at history reveals points of great ethnological interest relative to the perpetuity of families and nationalities. A few statistics will fully illustrate the point in question.

Mr. Axon, a man who has made the increase of population his principal study, makes the following remark, "While the great European nations take from 120 to 800 years to double their population, the Anglo-Saxon—taking the mean of their whole race—doubles every 14 years, with a lower death-rate than any other." The Hebrews have always been prolific. In the days of their Egyptian bondage the Hebrew women are compared with the Egyptian mothers, "The midwives said unto Pharaoh, the Hebrew women (are) not as the Egyptian women; for they (are) lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them. [illegible] with the [illegible] multiplied very mightily." Ex. i. 19, 20. [illegible] feet will come up hereafter.

History of the Hebrews to the captivity of the ten tribes.—The twelve tribes occupied the land of Palestine during the Theocracy, and as one nation they were governed by Saul, David and Solomon. During the reign of Solomon the Hebrew commonwealth arrived at the summit of its grandeur. The latter years of Solomon's reign were, however, exceedingly oppressive. To maintain the splendor of his court and the expenses of his seraglio, absorbed the wealth of the nation. When his son, Rehoboam, was about to assume the government, ten tribes, under Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, spake unto Rehoboam, saying, "Thy father made our yoke grevious: now therefore make thou the grevious service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee." The old men advised him to comply with their request: but the young men induced him to reply as follows: "My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke; my father (also) chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions. Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the Lord, that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite, unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat." Israel answered, "What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse; to your tents, O Israel; now see to thine own house, David. So Israel (ten tribes) departed unto their tents. So Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day." 1 Kings xii.

Under Jeroboam began the kingdom of Israel, or the ten tribes, which continued in its distinctive form under 19 kings till B. C. 720—274 years. The captivity of the ten tribes began 138 years before that of Judah. The Scripture of this captivity is as follows: "In the days of Pekah, king of Israel, came Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kadesh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria." 2 Kings xv. 29; "In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria (Shalmaneser) took Samaria (after a 3 years siege), and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah, and in Habor (by the river Habor in Gozan), and in the cities of the Medes." 2 Kings xvii. 6. Habor is the same as Chebar. Eze. i. 1.—Calmet.

Sargon (Isa. xx. 1) supposed by Rollin to be Sennacherib, but by Vitringa, (the more probable) to be Psalmaneser, father of Sennacherib, has this about him, on an eastern Obelisk, "Sargon, king of Assyria, came up against the city of Samaria and against the tribes of Beth-Kymri, and carried captive into Assyria, 27,380 families." Such is the Scripture account of their captivity.

Many questions relative to this captivity, demand attention. 1. Was the whole ten-tribed nation removed into captivity, or had some of the tribes in their families, long before found a western home? The parts of the ten tribes then living in that land under a royal head, were wholly removed, and the land was peopled by other inhabitants. We have the following in 2 Kings xvii. 22-24, "For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them; until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight, as he said by all his servants the prophets (Deut. xvi. 21; Micah v. 14). So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day. And the king of Assyria brought (men) from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed (them) in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria and dwelt in the cities thereof."

It seems from what follows no Israelites were left. "And (so) it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, (that) they feared not the Lord (God claims the land); therefore the Lord sent lions among them (beasts are under his control), which slew some of them. Wherefore they spoke to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land. Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land." vss. 25, 26, 27. This was done. We conclude that the captivity was complete: such is taught us by the prophets. We also use the expression—all Israel (ten tribes) in captivity. Such was not the fact relative to the captivity of Judah.

2. What was the character of this ten-tribed kingdom? Was it the kingdom ruled previously by Saul, David and Solomon? This question involves matters of such vital interest that its solution shall be attempted at least.

"He (Solomon) shall build a house for my name; and he shall be my son, and I (will) be his father; and I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel forever." 1 Chron. xxii. 10. "Wherefore the Lord said to Solomon, For as much as this is done of thee, (going after other gods), and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee and will give it to thy servant. Notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's sake; (but) I will rend it out of the hand of thy son. Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom; (but) I will give one tribe to thy son for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen." 1 Kings xi. 11—13.

And he (Ahijah) said to Jeroboam, "Take the ten pieces (of the garment): for thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee; (But he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel.) Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand; but I will make him prince all the days of his life for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes; But I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee (Jeroboam), (even) ten tribes. And unto his son will I give one tribe that David, my servant may have a light always before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen to put my name there. And I will take thee (Jeroboam), and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel. And it shall be if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my ways, and do (that is) right in my sight, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as David my servant did; that I will be with thee, and build thee a sure house, as I built for David, and will give Israel (not all Israel) unto thee. And I will for this afflict the seed of David, but not forever." We have under Saul, David and Solomon a twelve-tribed kingdom, or the kingdom of "All Israel;" under Jeroboam a ten-tribed kingdom; and under Rehoboam a two-tribed kingdom. Which of the two kingdoms wears the sceptre of "All Israel"? We answer, neither. The monarchy of "all Israel" was rent and became tribal. Ten parts were then united under Jeroboam, called the kingdom of Israel (not "all Israel"); and two were united under Rehoboam and called the kingdom of Judah. The sceptre of "All Israel" was taken from the earth by God to be given to him whose right it is. That "All Israel" has never since existed; that the two houses will be united, is clearly taught in Ezekiel xxxvii., whole chapter. This chapter we shall have occasion to examine. In the mean time let the reader make himself familiar with the contents of that interesting chapter.

THE KINGDOM PARABLES.—No. 2.

In answer to the inquiry of the disciples as to why our Lord spake unto the multitude in parables, he replies: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given."

There exists today this same discrimination between the nominal church and the saints. Many there are who profess to be followers of Jesus, and who, to an extent are zealous for him—like the zeal of the multitude who would have crowned Christ even in spite of his protestation—but they know nothing concerning his kingdom, have not been baptized into Christ, and his plainest words are unexplained parables to them.

On the other hand there are a few—a despised few—of true disciples in the earth, to whom the theme of the kingdom is precious. They are glad that on the earth that furnished thorns for his crown, he shall yet erect his glorious throne. They know that the splendors of his court will dim the lustre of the sun, and all the nations will bow to his rightful sceptre. Unto them it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom.

Since, then, this ancient distinction between classes is perpetuated, they who have ears to hear should determine wisely to which party it is best to belong. Though our Father may not utterly reject those who have imperfect faith and works, nor transfer them to the judgment of Gehenna, yet though blindly sincere in their motives, they may not obtain the crown with Christ in a kingdom, the existence of which in their presumptuous haste they were ever zealous to deny.

NO CARDIAC KINGDOM.

A representative of this class will, whom opportunity presents, insist that "the kingdom of God is within you," and this unintelligent quotation [illegible] but the expression of their [illegible] tion to hope for, or even [illegible] the institution of a real kingdom [illegible] the whole heaven" by our [illegible] Their eyes are dim and their [illegible] to the word of prophecy [illegible] of God's Word, carried by [illegible] the Spirit alone can reveal [illegible] sense of such a mind [illegible] some of you."

A very slight examination of the matter ought to convince a candid one that Christ did not intend to convey the idea that every believer had the kingdom of God in their heart. Fairly read the text, "Being asked by the Pharisees when the kingdom of God cometh, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation (παρατηρησεως — careful watching); neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, there! for lo, the kingdom of God is within you." The margin substitutes, "in the midst of you." Luke xvii. 20.

What was the true character of the Pharisees, according to Christ's decision. Listen to it — "Hypocrites," "Generation of vipers." Think you that it is within the bounds of possibility that he did really state that the kingdom of God was actually inside the hearts of a viperous generation of hypocrites, of whom in another place he says—"Within, ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity!"

At once the thoughtful one determines that the marginal reading is the only consistent translation, and the idea that the kingdom of God is lodged inside a heart is left without support—even the faintest—in the whole Bible.

CHRIST'S ROYAL CONFESSION.

The kingdom of God was in their midst, however, in a tangible sense. The unbelieving Pharisees were carefully watching for the appearance of of Messiah, but while they persisted in ignoring Jesus their observation would be in vain. Never would they say "Lo here," or "There" is Messiah, nor hail the true Son of God, since the "Royal Majesty of the Heavens" was then present, and they would not recognize his claim. "Perhaps," says Dr. Clarke, "those Pharisees thought that the Messiah was kept secret in some private place."

By a common figure—synecdoche—a whole is often used for a part. In our text is such a case. The word "kingdom" is used to denote a part of the kingdom—viz.; the king. So undisputable is this that even the Diaglott translated the original by the terms "Royal Majesty"—and this is repeated.

He who was born king of the Jews was in their midst, but "they that were his own received him not." When he made the declaration, "The king is among you," as Prof. Whiting would translate, it was the first public avowal of his Messiahship—his last was his confession before Pilate.

A CONSTITUTIONAL KINGDOM.

Prophecy shows that the kingdom of God is the future reign of Christ on this earth, and that in the constitution of this kingdom five elements are essential: 1. A Royalty; 2. Subjective nations; 3. The earth's domain; 4. Capital cities; 5. A code of laws; 6. A coronation day.

When a parable is spoken to illustrate features of the kingdom, we must recognize all these elements, and determine to what phase of the government the parallel is adapted. Because the parable illustrates the kingdom of Christ, it does not follow that it portrays every feature in it, nor yet that the parallel is true of every century of its duration. First knowing from prophecy the characteristics of the millennial age, the parables descriptive of it easily and naturally designate their position of reflection. In Matt. xxii. 1—14 we have the parable of which our Savior likened to the kingdom of heaven. The features of the narrative may be thus epitomized:—A monarch sends forth his summons to oldness of his realm, who had already been invited to the marriage feast of his son, but they would not come. Yet again he presses the invitation upon them by his servants, but the invited guests still refuse to attend, and even slay some of the messengers.

The king is angry and sends his army and destroys those evil persons and their city. The wedding being in readiness he sends messengers inviting from the highways, by invitation a full complement of guests, bad and bad, and in the presence of these the ceremonies are about to commence when the monarch discovers one of his guests without a wedding garment. He is questioned as to his not having the robe, but remains speechless. The king orders his removal from the banquet hall, and weeping and gnashing entitled to the following suggested from [illegible] to the darkness outside. [illegible] failed to this wedding but to this, but witness the ceremony.

CORONATION OF THE ANOINTED SAINTS.

As to time, this parable applies to the beginning years of the millennium. As to the event, it sets forth circumstances related to the coronation of Christ with the saints, as a royalty over the nations in the new earth. God is the Monarch; Christ is the Bridegroom, the king's Son; the saints are the Bride. The wedding of the Bride and Bridegroom is their joint initiation and installation into office before the nations of the future age, and the Feast parallels, the ceremonies and festivities which will mark that grand event.

After this earth shall have been transformed into the millennial New earth, the world becomes peopled by the second resurrection—which brings the nations from their long sleep. These nations are not immediately subjects to the rule of the saints, but they each organize to a limited extent, and Israel in their own land becomes enviously prosperous "without walls."

INVITATION REJECTED.

After permitting this short period of insubordination, God, through messengers (selected from Israel perhaps), announces to the chief men among the nations, that he is ready to install Christ and the saints in their office of "kings and priests" over the earth; and invites them to Jerusalem to manifest the allegiance, witness the coronation, and enjoy the festival. The chief princes among the nations jealous of Christ, and fearful of losing their eminence, disregard the invitation.

Graciously the Lord repeats the summons to these same persons of rank, but now their rebellious spirit prompts them not only to reject the invitation, but to ill-treat, and even to kill some of the ambassadors. Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, seems to be the ringleader of the risen rebellion.

REBELLIONS DESTROYED.

God now proposes to crush out this opposition to Christ, and permits the insolent rebellion to increase, till he has brought all these insolent rebels to the scene of his judgment, and there in the valley of Jehoshaphat he destroys the people who said "We will not have this man to rule over us."

Thus the uniting of Christ with his saints in judicial rule is postponed until after the battle of Gog—until the disloyal element is crushed.

ANOTHER INVITATION.

After the destruction of those who would not come to the wedding, the banquet hall is again placed in readiness, and an invitation is carried by servants to persons of no rank,—those in the highways — to engage in the ceremonies of the coronation festival. Of the motley throng who now sit around the board, those in whom the spirit of rebellion exists are removed from the scene prior to the coronation, so that those only in full allegiance to the Royal Bride and Bridegroom, witness the splendors of the occasion, and enjoy the luxuries of the feast days, when Christ and his church are installed the rightful rulers over the whole earth, in the capital city of Jerusalem.

THE CORONATION FEAST.

Who can picture the brilliance of the banquet which God will direct on this coronation occasion. Christ and his church will be robed in the vesture of kings, and on each brow will sparkle the royal diadems, while the invited multitude will view the scene with admiration, and joy, and protest their allegiance to the King of kings. What a happy scene will be presented at that festal board, and what harmonies vibrate through that banquet hall! Angels participate in bestowing homage on the regal state, and await their directions. Tables laden with the choicest productions of the new earth, bestow their wealth of luxuries upon the enraptured guests, who join in welcoming and honoring a Royalty which will, at last, give to the world an administration of justice tempered with mercy, and love.

An Hour Among the Jews of Boston on the Feast of the Passover.

Yesterday (April 22) being the beginning of the week celebrating the Feast of the Passover, although Jews [illegible] great deal to see how [illegible] great festival, I betook myself [illegible] 9:30 a. m., to one of their synagogues, said to be the largest in New England, and is situated in Warrenton St., Boston.

It was a lovely morning, and as I neared my destination, I met groups of well-dressed men, women and children hastily making their way towards the same spot. Being wholly unacquainted with their ways, I felt a certain kind of diffidence at mingling with the throng which kept increasing every moment at the entrance. However, on arriving in the vestibule, we found the three inner doors closed and guarded by men who wore scarfs of white and blue round their necks, and who kept every one away from the entrances. Evidently some ceremony was going on within, for I could hear the organ and singing, but no one was allowed to enter. After waiting about fifteen minutes the doors were thrown open, and, following a refined looking lady who courteously invited me to a seat with her, I found myself at last in the building. It was very plainly constructed with a gallery, into which the crowd was pouring; right opposite the entrance door was a high raised platform of considerable dimensions, at the back of which was a large recess covered with a canopy and curtains of white silk embroidered with gold and silver. This recess, as I afterward learned, contained the scrolls of the Pentateuch, and it was while those scrolls were taken out with great ceremony that we were kept waiting at the doors. On each side of the platform were three chairs covered with crimson, and on these were seated the chief Rabbi and his attendant readers.

I had scarcely taken my seat when five of the men on the platform rose and advanced to the desk, and while two of them unrolled the scroll, took off the silver seals and drew off the top, which was a silver ornament like the top of a large pencil case and had small silver bells on it, the other two stood at the side holding a similar scroll which was not to be opened till the first one was read; between this group stood the readers; all were their hats with blue and white silk scarfs round their necks. The wearing of the hat was universal, and for the first few moments looked very strange to me. The reading was in Hebrew, which sounded very much like German only not quite so guttural, and as I did not of course understand it, I took an occasional glance round the building. High up over the platform were two large boards of dark polished wood which were inscribed, that on the right hand in Hebrew, that on the left in English. I recollect the latter was headed "Pharaphrase of Israel's Creed" and began

"Eternal Unity, All-glorious One, Unequaled Thy glory, unrivalled Thy throne."

As I glanced round me very carefully I noticed on every side the unmistakable lineaments of the Jew, the clear dark eyes, the aquiline nose, the harsh mouth, on nearly every face, and yet more the very shape of the head showed how strongly their concentrativeness, and acquisitiveness were developed, at least, I think, phrenologists would say so. I had almost lost myself in a reverie, thinking of the strange, and experience of this remarkable people from the time of Moses until now; when the lady who had so kindly invited me to her seat said that they had been reading the Pentateuch, and would presently sing a Psalm; almost at that moment the scroll was rolled together with a sharp click, the choir would found and it was hauded to an attendant; there was a slight pause and another reader stepped up, who was (I was told) the Chief Rabbi, Doctor Lasher; he wore a long loose robe of black silk, with a half robe of white silk glittering with gold and silver, on his head was a cap of black velvet.

Certainly my eyes never rested on such an imposing figure, tall towering above the others, his was a face of wonderful power and grandeur, noble features, large dark eyes, and a certain air of haughty superiority; "here," thought I, "is truly both intellectually and physically, an ideal Jew." A scroll was put on the desk, hastily opened and Dr. Lasher began to sing a Psalm, what a voice, [illegible] richness, harmony and music in every tone; the [illegible] responsive [illegible] one by the Rabbi, the response by the choir; for a moment my mind wandered away to the Jews singing at the dedication of Solomon's temple; after this was over the celebrants (as I suppose I should call them) all turned with their backs to the people, the last scroll was closed with the same sharp click and rattle of chains, the Chief Rabbi drew aside the silk curtain which covered the recess, the scrolls were placed inside and the curtain drawn back again almost in the flash of an eye; still I just had time to observe that this inner space was lined with white silk sparkling with gold embroidery.

I went home somewhat sadly pondering upon hopeless Israel with all their dead ceremonials, with the veil still on their hearts, and I felt that till the Sun of Righteousness should arise and shine never more should sun arise for them; yet still the promises for them remain to be fulfilled, and what glorious promises they are! when the Messiah, the King of the Jews, shall return and reign for ever.

HELENA M. HUNT.

Speaking of Paul's carefulness to obtain part in the first resurrection, the editor of Ecclah, in No. 4, page 120, says:—"How different from the conduct of many modern Pharisees, who talk as if they were sure of the prize, when it is all to try for yet, and who pompously and vauntingly proclaim themselves to be "brethren of Christ," and certain to share in his glory! But they are counting on their good fortune too soon, before they have got it, and presuming on supposing a certain relationship towards Christ, before they know whether he will own them as such in the great day of trial. There is reason to fear, that a majority of these will be disowned then, because they are too unholy, their hearts meanwhile being filled with all unscripturalness and spiritual pride, and their natures unsanctified and unregenerated, or at least having made but very little progress towards holiness."

Experience and observation warrant us in concurring with our departed brother, George Dana Wilson, in the words of wisdom as above. Bro. W. was a gem, unappreciated not only by "the world," but by some who say they "are not of the world." He will have his reward!

THE RESTITUTION.

O. A. CRAPSEY, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 2, 1888.

An interesting letter from Jerusalem next week.

Returning from our meeting at Pierceton, we find our columns full, and the time for going to press crowding on—hence we must defer some notices and other particulars till next week.

The Phrenological Journal for May has its usual articles of interest and instruction. It gives the likenesses and condensed histories of Nordenskjold, the discoverer of the Northeast Passage, and Prince Gortschakoff, the noted Russian statesman who recently died. Its dissertations on language are continued.

We this week conclude the History of English opinion on Human Destiny for the last thirty years, as embodied in Two Discourses on the Endless Life. By Edward White. These discourses are a valuable contribution to the literature on this most important subject. While we thank the learned author for sending them, may we be permitted to indulge the hope that he will at some time favor us with something more on this, or on kindred subjects.

It is reported that tornadoes have caused serious destruction and damage to property in Texas and Louisiana with some loss of life. "The latest returns of the recent southern cyclone place the number of persons killed in Mississippi at 193, and the injured at 888. As far as ascertained, the number of killed in Georgia is 81, with many localities inaccessible to the telegraph still to hear from. An Atlanta dispatch estimates the total number of deaths in Georgia at 200."

DEAD PHARAOHS.

In the month of July 1881, there was a most remarkable discovery of "a solemn company of kings, queens, princes, and priests of royal blood, who died and were made imperishable flesh by the embalmer's art between three and four thousand years ago." This discovery was made by Prof. Maspero at Dayr-el-Baharee in Egypt, who thus describes the manner by which it was brought about.

"You have perhaps read in the newspapers of the fortunate results of my first campaign. The story is curious. Having notes how Egyptian antiquities of every description were constantly finding their way to Europe [illegible] years ago some suspicion that the Arabs had discovered a royal tomb, Furthermore, Col. Campbell had given me some photographs of the first pages of a superb Ritual bought by himself at Thebes, which Ritual proved to have been written by Pinotem I. Briefly, then, on arriving at Luxor, I caused to be arrested one Ahmed Abd-er-Rasoul, an Arab guide and dealer, to whom a mass of convergent testimony pointed as the possessor of the secret. For two months this man lay in prison at Kenah, obstinately silent; and I had just left when, prompted by jealousy and avariciousness of his brothers, decided to tell all. In this wise we were enabled to put our hands, not upon a royal tomb, but upon a hiding place wherein were piled some thirty-six mummies of kings, queens, princes, and high priests."

These dead monarchs of the long ago, in their cerements and mummy-cases, were found in the smooth part of a concealed cave. The way to the opening of this cavern, as described, was a "way among descerated tombs and under the shadow of stupendous precipices, to a spot unparalleled even in the desert for gaunt solemnity. Here behind a huge fragment of fallen rock—perhaps dislodged for that purpose from the cliffs overhead—they (the explorers) were shown the entrance to a pit so ingeniously hidden, that, to use their own words, 'one might have passed it twenty times without observing it.'" Into this pit the explorers were lowered, and, after following subterranean passages in different directions, and "penetrating deeper and farther into the heart of the mountain" they came to a place where were "several huge sarcophagi of painted wood, and farther on still, some standing upright, some laid at length a crowd of mummy cases fashioned in human form, with folded hands and solemn faces and ever-wakeful eyes, each emblazoned with the name and title of its occupant. Here lay Queen Esther Honttsuti, wife of Pinotem I.; yonder stood Seti; then came Amenhotap I., and Thothmes II.; and farther still, Ahmes I., and Sekenon-Ra, and Thothmes III., and Queen Ahmes Nofretari, and Rameses, surnamed the Great. A few yards farther still, and they stood on the threshold of a sepulchral chamber literally piled to the roof with sarcophagi of enormous size. Brilliant with gilding and color, and as highly varnished as if but yesterday issued out from the workshops of the Memnonium, the decorations of these coffins showed them to belong to the period of the Pinotems and Piankhis. Here was found Queen Notemt-Maut, wife of Her-Hor, the first Priest-King of the Amenide dynasty. Here lay King Pinotem I., King Pinotem II., Queen Makara, Queen Isi-em-Kheb, Prince and High Priest Masahirti, Princess Nasi-Khonsu, and others of the same lineage."

Among the kings whose embalmed bodies have been transferred to Boolak, or Boulaq, are those of Rameses I., surnamed the Great, and Rameses II., to whom the piece below, taken from the late Independent particularly refers. We will give a description of the mummy case of Rameses II., taken from Harper's Magazine of July 1882, from which the above quotations were also made.

"The mummy case of Rameses II., is of unpainted Sycamore-wood, and of the shape 'Osirian'; that is to say, the deceased is represented in the attitude and with the attributes of Osiris, the lower limbs swathed, the arms crossed, and the hands grasping a flail and crook. The eyes of the effigy are inserted in enamel, and the eyebrows, edges of eyelids, and beard are painted black. Upon the breast are drawn two royal cartouches of Rameses II., reading, Ra-user-Ma Setep-en-Ra, i. e., Ra Strong in Truth, Chosen of Ra.' The mummy measures 1 metre 80 centimetres in length, i. e., six English feet. The process of mummification has, however, brought the larger bones closer together in their sockets, and Ramses II., when in life, may have stood over six feet in height. The body is wrapped in outer shrouds of very fine amber and rose-colored linen, bound with bands of a stronger texture. Underneath these shrouds, which date from the XXVIth dynasty, the mummy is yet swathed in its original bandages. It is Prof. Maspero's intention to remove these inner bandages at some convenient opportunity, and in presence of medical and Egyptological witnesses." Our readers will now read the piece below, from the Independent, with greater interest.

RAMESES II.

On the bank of the Nile, in the city of Cairo, is the Boulaq Museum. There, in the linen wrappings in which it was swathed more than thirty centuries ago, and resting with a row of other mummied kings on the concrete floor, the traveler will be pointed to the body of the great Rameses, who built the rock-hewn temple of Abu Simbel, and carried Egyptian arms almost to the Euphrates. Whether or not he was the Pharaoh of the Israelite Oppression has long been a mooted question among scholars, questions of chronology being proverbially difficult to settle. The explorations now going on under the direction of an English society, the Egypt Exploration Fund, may be regarded as finally settling the question and proving that it was this most famous of the Egyptian kings, knew not Joseph, who built Rameses and Pithom with the enforced labor of his Hebrew slaves, and who commanded that the male children should be put to death.

"On this subject there has been a great deal of question, although, since the discussion by Lepsius, thirty years ago, the opinion has been growing that the king who built Pithom and Ramases by the enforced labor of his Hebrew slaves must have been the second Rameses. The latter city, it seemed probable must have got its name from the king who built it. But this conclusion, though adopted in their histories by Maspero, Lenormant, Dunaker, and Rawlinson, and supported inferentially by Manetho and the Rabbinic tradition, has not been universally accepted, and is opposed, for example, in Smith's Bible Dictionary, which puts the Pharaoh of the Oppression some centuries earlier than the fourteenth century B. C., in which occurred the accession of Rameses II.

M. Naville, who has charge of the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund, found in the Boulaq Museum two sphinxes, fragments of a temple, and a statue of Rameses II between two gods, which had come from a ruin called Tell-el-Maschuta, down in the Delta. He noticed the fact that in the accompanying inscriptions Rameses is everywhere spoken of as the "friend of Tum," the god of On. The monuments being all dedicated to Tum by the king, M. Naville guessed that the place from which they came must be Pa-tum, the Patumus of Herodotus and the Pithom of the Bible (Pet" being the Egyptian article), the Thoum of the "Itinerary" of Antonius, and the Heroopolis of the Septuagint, which substitutes this name for Pithom. Accordingly, M. Naville began his excavations at this mound, and soon discovered abundant evidence, from inscriptions found, that the place was not only built by Rameses II. but that it bore both names of Pithom and Heroopolis.

We have, then, here two important conclusions. The first is geographical. It settles, for the first time, definitely, the exact locality of Rameses and Pithom. It gives us a city Pithom, which was evidently, from the excavations, simply a store city, which had a small temple dedicated by Rameses II to Tum, which also had, as found by M. Naville, a large building of crude brick, apparently used for storing grain; and it fixes for us, by deduction, the position of Succoth, at a place about thirty miles to the south of that suggested by Brugsch, and so gives us a place from which to begin the route of the Exodus. Says Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole: "The bearing of the geographical result on Biblical criticism is of the first consequence. It affords a new proof of the accuracy of the Book of Exodus."

The historical result settling the reign of Rameses II, the great builder and warrior, the greatest figure in the long line of Pharaohs, the hero of the poem of Pentaur, as the date of the Oppression is even more notable. It fixes, in accordance with the Egyptian historian Manetho the reign of Meneptha II as the date of the Exodus. As Rameses and his successor, Menephta, successively held the throne for eighty-six years, there is time enough for the Oppression and the Exodus and for the eighty years which, in round numbers, is given as the age of Moses when he led out the Israelites. The character of the two kings, as given in Exodus—the one a powerful oppressor and the other a vacillating monarch—is quite borne out by what we learn of them from the monuments. It is to be hoped that the Egypt Exploration Fund will continue to carry on its work with vigor, though the results so soon obtained are sufficient to justify the expenditure.

Editor Restitution:

The Church of God at Eagle Creek, notwithstanding much persecution, is yet in a sound condition, and thanks be to our Heavenly Father, we grow stronger in the glorious faith, hoping on, hoping constantly for his appearing, when we shall have our reward. We pray "Thy kingdom come," looking by faith unto the time when we shall behold him in glory, on his throne, surrounded by immortalized saints, where we with all the faithful ones, shall live eternally in his presence, and enjoy that [illegible] for which God's children [illegible]

"We [illegible] regular weekly prayer meeting [illegible] that seasons of enjoyment. To meet together and tell each other our hopes, our longings, our desires, and better that we can hold sweet communion with him who shapes our destinies. We have severe trials and persecutions, and mostly from those calling themselves Christians; but by his sustaining grace we are able to keep above the waves, and keep the glorious work moving on.

We are not idle. Christians, and do not intend the work shall stop. To show that we are trying to help gather into the fold the worldly ones, it needs only be said that two years ago we commenced here with an organization of four members, and now have a roll of near fifty, most of whom are active working members spreading the good news wherever they go, by their influence for the right.

Our beloved brother, John L. Winger, closed a short series of meetings last evening, resulting in much good. Four more were added to our membership—two by baptism and two by former baptism. To say that Brother Winger is loved here, is telling it lightly. There is a deep rooted, sound affection for him, seeming as though each one was trying to show a deeper love for him than another. He truly has a warm place in every heart, and there are plenty of homes where he will always find a warm welcome. His next appointment here is on Saturday before the third Sunday in May, continuing over Sunday. Brethren abroad are invited to attend, and help carry on the work. Our last meeting was well attended, and good attention was manifested, some being "almost persuaded to become Christians."

Brethren and sisters, pray for us that we may so continue to live that we may gain an inheritance when Jesus comes.

Yours in hope of his soon coming,
G. W. FAIRCHILD.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—Second Series. Number 10.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE FORETOLD.

Our Lord had paid his last visit to the temple. When passing out, solemn and sad, the disciples said, "Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!" They had probably heard some word fall from his lips which excited their alarm, and they thus tried to awaken in his mind a deeper interest in their venerated temple. It was in vain. "Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." Mark xiii. 1, 2. He went on, crossed the Kidron, and followed the road to Bethany, apparently the lower road, for he came to a commanding point "over against the temple," and there sat down. The temple and its courts were in full view; the eye could see distinctly across the ravine, the gorgeous details of its architecture, and the colossal magnitude of its masonry; and there, with his eyes upon them, and his disciples' attention directed to them, he foretold the destruction of both temple and city, summing up with the terrible words, "This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth pass away; but my words shall not pass away." Luke xxi. 33.

I walked up that same path. I sat down on a projecting rock "over against the temple." It may not have been the very spot on which Christ sat, but it could not have been far from it. I looked, and I saw that the prophecy was fulfilled to the letter—not a single stone of the temple remains. I read the whole of the prophecies and parables uttered at that place by the Savior, and I read them with a far deeper interest, and a far more intense feeling of reality than I had ever experienced before. (Matt. xxiv., xxvi.)

DAVID'S FLIGHT FROM ABSALOM.

Crossing the Kidron by the bridge—a bridge which, I may state, is only intended to raise the road, as there is neither brook nor brook-bed in this part of the Kidron—leaving the picturesque Church of the Virgin down in its sunken area on the left, and Gethsemane on the right, I climbed the ancient road to the top of Olivet. Here and there the rock has been cut away, and rude steps formed; more frequently deep tracks, or channels, worn by the feet of countless wayfarers during long, long centuries, are seen on the rocky ledges. I was now on the footsteps of David, who, when fleeing from Absalom, "went over the brook Kidron toward the way of the wilderness.... and went up by the ascent of Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot; and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up weeping as they went." 2 Sam. xv. 23, 30. It was a sad and touching spectacle, and dearly did the king then pay for those sins which had led to the formation of an ill-assorted and badly-trained family.

On reaching the top of the mount, David turned to take a last fond look at his home, now the seat of unnatural rebellion; and there, in sight of the Holy City, and Ark, he paused to worship God. In his hour of suffering he carried into practice the noble sentiments of the 42d Psalm: "I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God." From the brow of Olivet the eye looks down upon Jerusalem as upon an embossed picture. The ravines that surround it, the walls that encompass it, the streets and lanes that zigzag through it, are all visible.

From the same spot another and a widely different view opens to the eastward. The mount stands on the edge of the wilderness. With the crowded city behind, and the late parched desert in front, one would almost think Olivet divided the living from the dead. The "wilderness of Judea" begins at our feet; breaking down in a succession of white naked hills, and jagged limestone cliffs, and naked gray ravines, until at length the hills drop suddenly and precipitously into the deep valley of the Jordan, beyond which rises, as suddenly and precipitously, an unbroken mountain range extending north and south along the horizon, far as the eye can see. That range is the Peraea, the "place beyond," of the New Testament, and the Moab and Gilead of the Old. The "way" along which David fled was appropriately named the "way of the wilderness." That "wilderness" was the scene of the Temptation, and the "way" through it was the scene of the Parable of the Good Samaritan," which was related by our Lord either upon this very summit, or on the path between it and Bethany. How doubly striking must that beautiful illustration of charity have been when Jesus would point to that dreary, dangerous desert road, while repeating the words, "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves!" Luke x. 25–37.

THE ASCENSION.

"And he led them out as far as Bethany, and he lifted up his hands and blessed them; and it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven." Luke xxiv. 50. When on Olivet I was deeply impressed with the belief—I can scarcely tell why, but so it was—that Jesus on this occasion took the upper road, over the top of the mount. It was more private; and the moment the summit was passed, he and his disciples were in absolute solitude. Jerusalem is shut out by the hill; and Bethany is hidden until we reach a rocky spur overhanging the little nook in which it lies embosomed. "He led them out as far as to Bethany." The Ascension appears to have been witnessed only by the disciples; and it could not, therefore, have taken place in the village; but it must have been close to it. I saw one spot, "as far" from Jerusalem as Bethany, very near the village, and yet concealed from view, and I thought that it, in all probability, was the very place on which the Savior's feet last rested. As I sat there and read the simple, graphic story of the ascension (Luke xxiv. 50; Acts i. 9–12), I was impressed as I never had been before with the intense, the almost startling vividness of the sacred narrative. The Savior gradually ascending while the words of blessing still flowed from his lips—the wondering, awe-stricken disciples following him upward and upward with eager gaze—the cloud slowly folding round him, and at length hiding him in its bright bosom—the white-robed angels bursting suddenly from it and standing in the midst of the disciples! What a glorious picture! What joy it brings to the Christian's heart! Our Substitute, our Savior, our Brother, our Forerunner, thus ascending on the wing of victory to the heaven he had won for us! While I read and meditated, it seemed as if there was wafted to my ear in voice of sweetest melody the cheering words of the angelic promise, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. "Even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The top of the Mount of Olives is the traditional scene of the ascension, and a church was built over it in the fourth century by Helena the mother of Constantine. That building has long since disappeared, and the reputed site is now occupied by an humble chapel which stands in the court of a mosque! Crowds of pilgrims visit it, and have done so for many centuries. The guardian shows them the print of one of the Savior's feet in the rock, and tells them that both footprints were there until the Mohammedans stole one of them. Bishop Ellicott and others think the traditional may be the true site of the ascension; but I cannot see how the words "as far as to Bethany" can be made to signify "to the top of Olivet," which is not half way to that village.—*J. Not 1882, but 1888.—A German Professor who Says Our Calculation of the Christian Era is Erroneous.

There have been for centuries doubts as to the correctness of the accepted calculation of the Christian era. Some learned historians [illegible] to agree whether Christ was born in the year 747, 749, or 754, counting from the foundation of Rome. Recently Prof. Sattler of Munich has published an essay in which he tries to reconcile the testimony of the Evangelists with the other historical data on this point. He has examined four copper coins, newly discovered, which were struck in the reign of Herod Antipas, one of the sons of Herod the Great, and he comes to the conclusion that Christ was born not 754, but 749 years after the foundation of Rome, and therefore that the present year is 1888 instead of 1888. This opinion, the Professor tries to corroborate by the testimony of the Evangelists.

According to St. Matthew, Jesus was born toward the end of the reign of Herod the Great, and when that king died Jesus was yet a little child. According to St. Luke Jesus was born in the year in which, by virtue of a decree of Augustus Cæsar, Cyrenius, Governor of Syria, made the first census of Judea. Again, St. Luke says that St. John began to baptize in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, and in that year baptized Jesus, who was then 30 years of age. As to the first testimony there can be no misunderstanding, [illegible] 749, was of course [illegible] when Herod died. But the [illegible] timony needs some explanation. From the Breviarium Imperii (Census of the Empire) which was added to the will of Augustus Cæsar, it is evident that a thorough census of the countries that composed the Roman empire must have been made. In fact, Augustus had three censuses of his possessions made, namely, in 726, 746, and 766. As St. Luke says that in Judea the first census was made during the reign of Herod, the census must have been ordered in 746. Probably the census was begun in Judea in 747, and Prof. Sattler thinks it was not made in Jerusalem earlier than 749. He finds that the four coins enable him to make clear the testimony of the Evangelist as to the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius. Though Augustus died on Aug. 19, 767, yet the beginning of the reign of Tiberius must be counted a year and a half earlier (February 766), when he was appointed co-regent. Therefore the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius falls in 780, when St. John baptized Jesus, who was then about 30 years of age.

An Evangelist says that Christ began to preach forty-six years after the temple at Jerusalem was built by Herod. Now, it is known that the building of the temple was begun eighteen years after Herod was appointed by the Roman Senate as regent of Judea, or in the year 734 from the foundation of Rome. Adding 46 to that year, it gives 780 as the year in which Christ began to preach.

If all these calculations of Prof. Sattler are correct, then the Christian era began five years earlier than is usually supposed, making the current year 1888 instead of 1883. N. Y. Sun.

Make Mother Happy.

Children, make your mother happy;
Make her smile instead of sigh.
For the moments hour of parting
May be very, very nigh.

Children, make your mother happy:
Many griefs on her do bear;
And she wearies with her burdens,
Can you not these burdens share?

Children, make your mother happy:
Prompt obedience cheers her heart;
While a willful disobedience
Pierces like a poisoned dart.

Children, make your mother happy;
Do not grieve her tender love;
Deepen daily, don't you see them?
Wrinkles your own are smooth and fair.

Children, make your mother happy:
For beneath the cruel fire
All too soon her face is naked like,
Shall forevermore be hid.

Kind Words.

O the power of kindly spoken words! Who can tell their priceless worth; who, but those who have been soothed and cheered by their sweet influence. When the care-worn heart, oppressed by the toils and burdens of life, receives a kindly, sympathetic word, how quickly the drooping spirit will revive, and show its appreciation by that glow of pleasure which lights up the countenance, and brightens the whole being, manifesting its tranquilizing influence over the soul. When naught else with the erring avails, let us try the kind, loving word of unfeigned interest, and see the effect. How often has the most hardened and unrelenting heart been led to feel sorrow and contrition for its wrongs through the influence of the timely, kind word.

Ellen His Dear Heart.

In a very elegant palace car entered a weary-faced, poorly dressed woman with three little children—one a baby in her arms. A look of joy crept into her face as she settled down into one of the luxurious chairs, but it was quickly dispelled as she was asked rudely to "start her boots." A smile of amusement was seen on several faces as the affrighted group hurried out to enter one of the common cars. Upon one young face, however, there was a look which shamed the countenances of the others. "Auntie," said the boy to the lady beside him, "I am going to carry my basket of fruit and this bag of sandwiches to the poor woman in the next car. You are willing, of course?" He spoke eagerly, but she answered: "Don't be foolish dear, you may need them yourself, and perhaps the woman is an 'impostor.'" "No, I'll not need them," he answered, decidedly, but in a very low tone. "You know I had a hearty breakfast and don't need a lunch. The woman looked hungry, sunsick, and so tired too, with those three little babies clinging to her. I'll be back in a minute, auntie; I know mother wouldn't like it, if I didn't speak a kind word to the least of these when I meet them." The worldly aunt brushed a tear from her eye after the boy left her, and said, audibly: "Just like his dear mother." About five minutes later, as the lady passed the mother and the three children, she saw a pretty sight—the famher mouth filled with bread and butter, said: "Was the pretty boy an angel, mamma?" "No," answered the mother, and a grateful look brightened her faded eyes; but he is doing angels' work, bless his dear heart!" And we, too, said. "Bless his dear heart!"—Boston Cult.

My Dear Nephew:

In reply to my last letter you say you appreciate my kindness in endeavoring to set before you a new object of life. But you seem to think there must be some misunderstanding between us in matters of religion. You say "All the sects teach the Bible, they all preach Jesus, they all try to show us to a higher life, and seem to labor earnestly for the salvation of souls," and yet I differ from them in almost every point of doctrine."

Yes, I differ with both you and them; and let me note a few points of difference which I want you calmly and honestly to look at for yourself. You are quite old enough to comprehend the meaning of the words yea and no, life and death, truth and falsehood, as any other words we may see fit to place in juxtaposition. Do not be shocked when I make a bold assertion that the sects do not teach the Bible. Let me show you. They teach that man is a dual being, composed or made up of a body, mortal, and a soul, immortal. This is not Bible; but it is the foundation on which they build gross errors, which they call Bible doctrine.

Please read carefully the first three chapters of Genesis and you will there see that man was made of the dust of the ground, and when perfectly formed life only was lacking. God gave that life by breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, and by that act Adam became a living soul, not because possessed of an immortal soul. He had nothing immortal pertaining to his nature. If he had, his Creator would not have mocked him by placing within his reach the tree of life, the fruit of which would have given to him immortality had he seen fit to eat of it; but he did not; he took of the tree of knowledge, and in eating of that fruit he became mortal or subject to death. He fell from a state of holiness into a state of sin, and then God, in great mercy, drove him from the garden, and set a guard to keep the way of the tree of life least he should eat and live forever in the state of sinfulness into which he had fallen.

I beg of you, my dear nephew, to read carefully these three chapters, and you will, I am sure, see plainly that man was created an undeveloped character. He has given the power of choice: On the one hand was the tree of life, and a perpetual existence in a sinless state to be obtained by simply obtaining from one tree, the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. On the other hand was a dying nature with all its entailed misery. In partaking of that tree, or that one act of disobedience, he developed a sinful character and the Creator told him, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it thou wast taken, for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." More anon. Truly Your,

AUNT CAROLINE.

On the day before the reception tendered her recently, at St. George's, Bermuda, the Princess Louise went for a solitary stroll along the shore; and, after a fine becoming chivalry, she stopped for a drink at the cottage of a negro fisherman. No one was there but "auntie," and she was busy as could be ironing a shirt for her "ole man" to wear at the reception. The Princess asked for a drink. "I'se no time to bother getting water for you," was the reply. "I'se too full busy, for I'se bound to see de Queen's child to-morrow." "But, if you will give me a drink, I'll iron while you do so," said the thirsty Princess. The offer was accepted, the Princess finished the shirt, and got her drink, and then revealed her identity. "Oh, de Lord, honey!" exclaimed "auntie," when she recovered from her surprise. "Ole man, no one else ever wear dat shirt again, nohow."

It is asserted that Jews have, in proportion to their numbers, fewer illiterate children than any other people.

[illegible] once present so, "Many of the and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, in not being baptized of John." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized shall be saved."
"As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." "According to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." "The like
also now save us." etc.

Now we argue that if our salvation is conditional, all the conditions prescribed must be complied with; and is it not a perilous experiment to dispense with or suppress such a plain divine statute as Matt. xxviii. 19. It is like drifting out to sea on a broken plank and trusting in a miracle for safety!

"We who have been baptized into Christ were baptized into his death."
Thus corrected, Acts xix. 1-7 is directly in point. "And when they heard this they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus" and so of Acts viii. 16,...."only they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus."
In Acts xix. Paul finding certain disciples asked them, "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed," and they said unto him, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Spirit," and he said unto them,
"Into what then were ye baptized."
(Here the word is eis) and they said,
"Into—eis—John's baptism," and Paul said unto them, "John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance saying unto the people that they should believe into him (eis) which should come after him—that is into (eis) Christ Jesus. When they heard this they were baptized into (eis) the name of the Lord Jesus."

Now we argue that Paul's questions to these disciples, "Have you received the Holy Ghost?" and "Into what then were ye baptized?" teach us by necessary implication that there was in his mind an immediate connection between their baptism and their reception of the Holy Spirit.

To the same point all the teachings of the Scriptures invariably lead us.
When Jesus was baptized in the river
Jordan, the Holy Spirit descended upon him, in the very act. Peter, on Pentecost, associated baptism with the Holy Spirit directly in saying, "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." So at the house of Cornelius the descent of the Spirit on the Gentiles (a sign and token to Peter) was immediately followed by the baptism of the Gentile converts.
Who can resist the conclusion which these examples teach, that baptism and the Holy Spirit were intimately associated in the minds of the apostles, with the language of the commission in Matthew xxviii., which we respect and obey and which our opponents in this controversy, we regret to say, disregard and reject.

Further: If we consider the new relations we sustain to the Father by the act of baptism, we see additional and conclusive reasons why we should invoke his name in that solemn and imposing act. The Scriptures testify that until we are baptized we are without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world."
This alienation was the legitimate result of the fall of Adam. By the transgression in Eden Adam rejected
God as his Father and put himself under the rule of the adversary of the god of this world—and withdrew himself from the divine guidance and control. Jesus said to the scoffing Jews,
"ye are of your father the devil."
Man, became a rebel in character and conduct, and so continues, until arrested in his rebellious career, by terms of reconciliation and an offer of pardon through the gospel. Willing to accept and comply with these terms he [illegible] take God again as his Father—take upon him his new name, for he is now in Adam, the second, and be adopted into the family of the Most High.

Baptism thus becomes his mode of adoption and he thereby becomes a child of God that he may receive the adoption provided for all the sons of God, for "Because ye are sons, God has sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts crying, Abba, Father." All these blessings the Christian receives by believing and obeying the gospel in the name of the Lord and thereby taking refuge under the all powerful name of the Father, the Son and the Holy [illegible] significance in this Bible [illegible] of adoption into new relationships with God, with Christ and with the Holy Spirit. The Scriptures teach us that we are by nature

"children of wrath fitted for destruction," that every sinner is an alien and a stranger to the covenants of promise, without God and without hope in the world, and that by his faith in the gospel and obedience to the divine command in baptism, he enters into new and different relations to the other parties to the atonement scheme of reconciliation which the gospel offers.
We cease to be foreigners and allen enemies and become "fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God."

This change may be likened to the process of naturalization to which a foreigner resorts who may wish to renounce his native allegiance, to change his state and become a citizen of the United States and to be entitled to all the rights and privileges which the fundamental law—the Constitution of the United States—will secure to him.
He must, however, comply with the law and the conditions prescribed.
The parallelism in the two cases is very striking and there is little doubt that our American law of naturalization is borrowed from the ancient usage of the early Roman empire in bestowing citizenship, under certain conditions, on those whom they had conquered. This is illustrated to us in the example and experience of Paul recorded in Acts xxii. The chief Captain of the Roman Army in Jerusalem had ordered Paul to be chained and scourged; but when it was reported to him by one of his subordinates that Paul claimed Roman citizenship by reason of his nativity in Tarsus, then a conquered province of the Roman Empire, the chief Captain appealed to Paul himself, saying, "Tell me, art thou a Roman?" and he answered
"Yea." The chief Captain replied, "With a great sum obtained I this freedom," and Paul said, "But I was free-born."

Now it is obvious that in order to effect this transformation—to assume this change of state—this new relationship and allegiance, there must be a renunciation of the old allegiance and an assumption of the new obligations imposed by our changed relations and duties. But being sinners and all born and living under sentence of death—which is the wages of sin—none of us —not even Paul—can be said, in the sight of God, to be "free-born," for we are born naturally into Satan's kingdom, for is he not "the god of this world?" And in order to escape the misrule and cruelty of that wretched usurpation which results in the eternal death and destruction of his subjects, we must renounce his service, abjure our allegiance to him, and become adopted into the service and citizenship of the rightful Ruler and Monarch of the world. This can only be done on the terms and conditions prescribed by the King and Law-giver whose service and kingdom we seek to enter.
These terms have been made known to us in the gospel proclamation, which he has commissioned his servants to preach "for the obedience of faith among all nations."

Now these terms and conditions of the salvation offered, accompany and form a part of this commission and proclamation recorded, as we have seen, in "the four gospels," as they are sometimes called. They are substantially the same in each, but are more fully and specifically stated in Matt.
xxviii. 18-20. Here those of all nations who accept the gospel salvation offer and are prepared to comply with the conditions, are required to be baptized "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," and to be taught to "observe all things whatsoever" their new King has commanded.

All this is plain and clear and simple. Who can doubt that on compliance with these conditions the promised blessing follows? But can we say the same as to those who "teach otherwise and consent not to the wholesome words of the Law-giver"? but knowingly reject a part of the terms and conditions he prescribes and commands?

Again, as by this gospel, faith and baptism, we become adopted children of the Most High, are henceforth sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, brethren of Christ (who is called the first-born among many brethren), fellow citizens with the saints and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him; this equality necessarily implies Fatherhood, for there cannot be a son without a father.
Hence it is written: "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God....and ye have received the Spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father." It is of the Father that (as we are taught in Ephesians iii.
15) "the whole family in heaven and earth is named." The Greek word here employed is patria (patrik, family) which is of the same root with our English paternal and patriarch, which latter signifies the head of the family.
Indeed nearly the entire epistle to the Ephesians is devoted to an enforcement of the endearing and ennobling relations Christians sustain in this adoption and exalted family connection with the household of God.

It begins: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predesti-nated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved;" and in chapter iv. we have the seven unities of the Spirit in the bond of peace; in the one Body, the one Spirit, one Hope, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism and one God and Father of all who is above all and through all and in you all. It is observable here that there is no inclusion of the one name—an omission which we conclude would certainly not have occurred had that condition and bond of unity held the place now claimed for it by some.

Now, we submit that if we are indebted to "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for all spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ;" if we are, as sons and daughters, adopted into the heavenly and earthly family of God, shall we, in the very act of adoption, specially ignore and reject the name of the Father of the family and thereby lose or imperil the "spiritual blessings in the heaven-lies" to which he invites us and offers to elevate and exalt us in due time?

It is this blessed hope which "as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast is planted within the veil," that we are called upon to renounce and surrender and receive in exchange another gospel (in its conditions) and a new baptism! In reply we answer,
"He that is of God heareth God's words."

In conclusion: Gratefully recognising the Fatherhood of God, the Son-ship and Brotherhood of Christ and the fellowship and communion of the Spirit, all centred in the Christian's faith and hope, we add the apostolic benediction:

"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all. Amen."

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

It is a source of mortification and discouragement to some of us, who recognize Christ as the only giver of eternal life, and who are praying and laboring for the prevalence of this fundamental doctrine of the gospel, in face of the popular voice and the tradition of a corrupt church, that its professed advocates and representatives—of which there are many scattered abroad throughout the Christian world —have so little unity of feeling and harmony of action among themselves.

They are to a lamentable extent divided and subdivided, on minor and doubtful questions, and cut up into so many little rival and opposing sects, and congregations, that their influence upon the community at large is very much weakened, and their testimony to the truth is almost entirely lost, and in too many cases, turned against the cause they would maintain.

There are in Philadelphia, at least five or six, and perhaps more, such little bands of brethren, who hold in common this central doctrine, differing
I hardly know in what, who worship separately and have little or no communion or recognized fellowship with each other. And the strongest of these is apparently on the verge of disruption by internal dissensions. There are several such feeble companies—I know not how many—in Brooklyn, N.
Y. The same is true of not a few of the cities and larger towns throughout the country, and the same may be said of Europe, in Glasgow the brethren hitherto worshiping in the Campbell Arcade Hall, a feeble band at the best, have recently, I am sorry to hear, divided into two companies on the question of annihilation and now worship separately.

Other cases of separation, on sectional and frivolous grounds nearer home, might be cited, but I will only say that the tendency everywhere among those who look for the coming of the Lord and hope for eternal life through him, seems to be not toward that union and solidarity, which the gospel enjoins, but toward division and disintegration.

The same may be said of the various books and tracts and periodicals—many of them excellent in their way—which are "printed"—I can hardly say "published" for their circulation is so limited—among the different bodies of these believers. Some of these papers,
I am sorry to say, are so rigorously exclusive as to allow of the expression of no difference of opinion upon minor matters of doctrine or practice, however kindly expressed, on the part of contributor.

These brethren, no doubt, wish to be true to their religious convictions.
It is creditable to their sincerity, that they should stand firmly for what they think to be dutiful even in small things.
But it is not creditable to their Christian charity, that they should despise the religious convictions of their brethren who stand on the same platform, nor that they should separate from them, for insufficient reasons. Nor can I think it pleasing to the Master, nor that he will smile upon these divisions among his followers, when he returns.

It was the burden of his intercessory prayer when on earth, "that they might all be ONE—that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." This he repeated three times in that brief memorable prayer, because he knew how important, how necessary this union of his people is to the success of their mission in the world.

Yet our Lord did not expect all his followers to think alike upon all points of doctrine or ceremonial observance, else his instructions would have been given in so precise and definite a form as to admit of no difference among honest inquirers. But this is very far from the case. Many of the doctrines and precepts of our religion—indeed,
I may say, all of them excepting such as are supreme and vital—are given in such general terms, that it is quite impossible that men in all their various conditions of life, opportunities for knowledge, difference of intellectual endowment, and of taste, and habits of thought should see all truth in the same light, or accept of any definite creed and particular tenet, or scheme of ceremonial observance as binding on their consciences. Nor is it important, or even desirable, in our present state of imperfection, that we should, provided we are all actuated by one common spirit and purpose. For it is only as we look at things from different points of view, and with different experiences, and then compare our views together, that we can hope to make any real progress in the right direction.

But when men separate and antagonize each other on these points of difference, the result will inevitably be that each becomes committed to his own views, and more fixed in them, however partial and imperfect they may be; and not only this, but the Master, in whose name this is done, is grieved and his cause suffers reproach at the hands of his own professed friends.

The Scriptures recognise but two classes of men, the friends and followers of Christ, and his enemies. The one great question, "What think ye of Christ?" will and must divide men.
"For what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, and I will be a Father unto you and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord."
But there should be love, charity, sympathy, fellowship and union of heart and of hand among all the children of the kingdom, however high or low, high or poor, or diverse their circumstances and conditions in life may be. Whenever they become too numerous in one locality to worship conveniently in one company, they may indeed separate for convenience and effective work, and separate, if they please, on the line of their affinities and various preference or mode of action; but not to antagonize each other, much less to disfellowship each other on any grounds that are not vital. So long as there is reason to believe that their Master recognizes them, however weak and imperfect they may be, they are to recognize each other, and treat each other as brethren of one common Father, and learn together of his heavenly kingdom.

No man however wise or good, or perfect he may be, in his own estimation or in that of others, should think himself too wise or good or perfect to hold fellowship and communion with any, "whose fellowship is with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ."

Let every one be as wise as his opportunities for knowledge will permit, and as punctilious in the performance of every Christian duty, whether great or small, as he will or can be, this gives him no warrant for setting up his own opinions or practices as a standard for others, or as a test by which to try them. It is not to himself, but to their Lord, that they are responsible, and he only can properly judge them. It is quite possible that they may be as true to their own convictions of duty, and quite as acceptable to the Searcher of hearts, as those who are assuming to judge them and would forbid them to cast out devils in his name. The principle on which these separations take place would, if carried out to its legiti-mate end, lead to the disintegration of all Christian Churches, and any man of any independence of thought, would at length, find himself all alone in Christendom, a sect by himself.

Charles V., in the seclusion of his last days, after vainly trying to make his clocks run together, discovered and recognized the folly, if not the wickedness, of his tyrannical and cruel efforts to make his subjects think alike in religious matters. Men may be made hypocrites or martyrs, but their judgments cannot be controlled by force.

Is it asked, what shall one do who happens to be associated with Christian brethren whose views and practices do not accord with his own convictions?
Do! Let him do nothing but his own duty, as an individual of that company. Let him endeavor to enlighten them, and show them a better way—in meekness instructing them that oppose themselves, if such there be, and he will be much more likely to win them to his way—if indeed he is right —than by casting them out of the synagogue, if he has the power, or by separating himself from them if he has not. Perhaps it is in regard to a matter that is not so clearly revealed as to be evident to all minds. Perhaps it is a matter that is quite indifferent, and he himself has magnified it into undue importance. Possibly the views of his brethren may be quite as correct as his own. At any rate they are as much entitled to their opinion as he is. He certainly is not responsible for the views, nor the acts of those over whom he has no control.

In all associated action, there must be the yielding up of personal preferences, or there can be no harmony in union. While it ill becomes the majority to oppress, in any way, their brethren, yet the majority must be responsible for the actions of the whole body. One does not necessarily give up any principle of his own, by gracefully allowing the majority to rule. It is neither the part of reason nor of Christian duty for one to make any fractious opposition, or to disturb the peace of any Church, or to forsake its communion, because she cannot have his own way. This forbearance on the one hand and of submission on the other, for the sake of peace, and good fellowship, is what is especially enjoined upon all the followers of Christ in the Scriptures.

These differences and divisions among Christian brethren were very early manifest. They seem to have caused the Apostolic founders of the Church more anxiety and trouble than any thing else. We read of them in the Acts of the Apostles, and are told of the efforts that were employed to hold the Christian disciples together in harmony and love. The epistles of Paul are filled with exhortation to forbearance, charity and union. We have not the space nor is it necessary to quote all the numerous passages bearing on this point. Let the reader turn to Romans xiv., beginning with—"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye but not to doubtful disputations"—and read the whole chapter and meditate upon it. The 1st epistle to the Corinthians opens with this, as its leading topic. "Now, I beseech you brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you" etc. i. 10—and the 3d epistle closes with this exhortation, "Finally, brethren, farewell; be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you." xiii. 11....

The same topic is prominent in the other epistles, as well as in the prayers and precepts of our Lord. John, the beloved disciple, makes it the chief subject of his general epistle, and sets forth this grace of Christian love and fellowship, as the great distinguishing test of true discipleship, and assures us that the platform of Christian fellowship and communion is as broad as that of discipleship, and that "Our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." "Beloved, let us love one another; for love is God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God; he that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love."
"Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

It is a vain pretence, a delusion, a mockery, which deceives no one but themselves for Christian brethren to profess any such love as is here enjoined, unless they can show it by a hearty sympathy and fellowship with each other.

While we would try to be charitable towards those who have little or no charity for others who differ from them, and think they must bring them to their own way of thinking and of acting, or else separate from their worship and communion, we are persuaded that this is a mistaken sense of duty, and one of the main obstacles to the progress of the Gospel. They will do well also to inquire honestly before him who searches all hearts, if there may not be elements of self will, pride of opinion, and other selfish and unworthy motives mingling with their Christian sentiments, and controlling their action. These unsanctified ambitions were not confined to the early ages of the Church, they are peculiar to no age, but belong to the nature of the natural man, nor are they all eradicated at once, when one becomes a disciple of Christ. Diotrephes has even now many successors in the Christian Church, and where there are two of them in any body, however small, there can be no peace without a division. Is not this the secret of some of the divisions I might speak of?

O how imperfect, at best, is the material out of which our Lord is to build his glorious temple! How much hewing and polishing it will require before it is fitted to show forth the praises of its builder, and the top stone can be laid with shoutings of "grace, grace unto it!"

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTI-TUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor.
I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank, and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

THE BIBLE BAPTISM DEFINED AND DEFENDED. THE NAME TO BE USED.—No. 4.

"Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, but exhort one another daily while it is called today, lest any of you be hard-ened through the deceitfulness of sin."—Paul to Hebrews.

In view of the concession we have cited from so learned a leader of the Protestant world as the late Dean Stanley of Westminster, confessing that the present baptismal formulas and usages among Protestants are in plain departure from the Bible Standard and that they have substituted Rhantism for Baptism, we logically conclude that we have not now, in Protestantdom, except as to the proper action by immersionists, any true Bible Baptism and that the holy ordinance is practically set aside and repealed by human authority, a conclusion which we hold to be sufficiently startling to alarm the consciences of all who honestly desire to obey God's law and to follow the light he has given us in his Word.

We now naturally turn to the Roman Catholic church and enquire how this ordinance of the supreme Law-giver has fared in that quarter. We are struck with the bold frankness with which this earliest of the apostate churches of Christendom likewise admits that immersion was undoubtedly the action taught, required and preached by John the Baptist, our Lord and the apostles, and they justify their departure from that primitive practice and the substitution of pouring and sprinkling in place of the original form, by the power and authority they claim to possess, by divine right, of changing church ordinances and enacting new rules and regulations, at pleasure, for the government of the church of Christ, which they say is confided exclusively to their oversight.

From these confessions of departure and apostasy from the truth derived from the two grand divisions of the so-called Christian world of the present day, we are driven to the conclusion that the simple, original baptism of the Bible has been, by church authority, legislated out of existence and hence is no longer practised in either body!

Do not such revolting consequences of following after the commandments and doctrines of men and not after Christ, sternly admonish us of the great danger of departing, in the least, from Bible usage and practice, lest we too be led away by the traditions of men and make shipwreck of our faith? Divine ordinances are edged tools. In respect to the proposed departure from and innovation upon the old Bible practice of baptism, candor compels the confession that we have plain Bible testimony for using the words of Matt. xxviii. 19, as well as those of Acts ii. 38, and we do not go astray when, in pursuance of the written record, we employ both phrases as parts of one formula. But the same spirit of candor and fairness constrains us to admit that we have no Scripture warrant to justify us in baptizing "in the name of the Lord only," or in the single one only name, etc., which the innovators do not scruple to employ. The one practice which combines "in the name of the Lord" and "in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit" has the plain and undisputed Scripture authority, while the other is confessedly without that authority. Let the candid [illegible] the [illegible] in any of the preceding faith and re-

THE DIVINE WORD.

MRS. LIZZIE PERKEN BAKER.

Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Dearer with every passing hour
Is God's sweet word to me,
To its blest truths as to a tower,
In troubled times I flee!
For while the heavens and earth shall last
Its promises are sure—
Yea! when they both are with the past
Its glories shall endure.
The word of Him who cannot lie,
Who by his own will stand,
When the swift whirlwind sweepeth by,
And in the desert land,
Who sendeth out his angel guard
Above his loved one's way,
And turneth by his rod of power
Their darkness into day.
Whose blessings, promised to the meek,
About their pathway rise,
Like blossoms in a wintry waste,
Or stars in storm-tossed skies.

O, I have proved each word of thine,
My God, as gold is tried—
Never to tear or prayer of mine
Was thy strong help denied.
I bless thee for each step I've trod,
By the dark waves of woe,
With faith and peace my feet were shod
Through the wild flood to go!
Most though not said, "But for a night
The weeping shall endure—
Joy cometh with the morning light"—
O, promise sweet and sure!
Where is my joy?—to dwell apart
From earth's poor bonds set free,
Hidden within thy faithful heart,
To find my all in thee.

The Term synallaxeos—The Pro-Sabbath as a Type.

In previous articles I have given a general outline of the typical significance of the seventh-day Sabbath. Of course there is a great deal more to be said on that subject as well as upon the eighth-day Sabbath that would be profitable, and perhaps ought to be said as a preface to these remarks upon the pro-sabbath, but time and space forbid. I will however, review the two prominent features in the seventh-day sabbatic type, as indicated by the katapausis and anapausis descriptive terms.

The first term teaches a cessation or an absolute rest from something; the other an interval like a rest in music. To illustrate, God ceased from his creative works of this cosmos, because he had completed them, and this is his katapausis Sabbath. But he will create a new heavens and a new earth, and the interval or rest between the two creations is his anapausis Sabbath. Again man receives an allotment of natural life in which to serve his Creator and form a character which will fit him for a participation in another allotment of life hereafter. His cessation from this first allotment in death is his katapausis, and the interval or rest which intervenes between death and the resurrection is his anapausis.

Now the sabbatic rites connected with the observance of the seventh day taught this two-fold truth, and was designed so to do. Man was to form the habit of ceasing from the usual or necessary avocations which are a constituent of his allotment here in this cosmos, and also form the habit of "meditating" upon spiritual things and engaging in duties and works which were especially designed to give him a spiritual apprehension of the new resolution "he was destined" to enter into under the new allotment.

So much for the signification of the seventh-day Sabbath. Now what is the signification of the pro-sabbath, and how is it related as a type to the seventh?

It is usually designated by the term προσαββατον, but sometimes by the exegetical term παρασκευη or "preparation" or "preparation day," and was the day immediately preceding the seventh day period of unleavened, and, therefore, numerically a sixth day in its relation to this period. Its use and significance seems to have been confined to its observance in connection with the "days of the passover" season or period, and was the day immediately preceding the first "unleavened," which was a Sabbath of special solemnity and importance as was also the last or seventh numerically of the "unleavened."

The pro-sabbath being by specific commandment, the fourteenth of Nisan i. e., the second seventh of the month was also a (numerical) seventh in this relation. Now the reader must carefully bear in mind if he would understand these types that the scriptural day is always consistently reckoned as first given in Genesis, viz., "the evening and the morning were one day," not as we in common practice have reversed it, viz., "the morning and the evening." Then the reader will understand that the "fourteenth of Nisan" began with six o'clock evening of what we should reckon the thirteenth, and ended with six o'clock evening of what we should reckon the fourteenth.

In its numerical relation to the month Nisan, therefore, the pro-sabbath would always be a seventh, but in its numerical relation to the regular week-day sabbath it might be a sixth (as it was also a sixth in relation, the seven-day passover period) should the regular weekly sabbath, or seventh day Sabbath come on the fifteenth of Nisan, which conjunction did occur in the passover period of Christ's betrayal and crucifixion (see Greswell) and gave us a numerical type which is especially significant in determining a certain period in its relation to other periods of time, as I shall endeavor to show later on.

But let us first glance at another typical significance of the pro-sabbath. It was the fourth day or preparation for the great Sabbath. Remember that the sacrificial lamb was separated on the tenth day of the month Nisan, a day which we have already found to be significant as a day of atonement. The lamb must be slain in the evening of this fourth day of preparation and must be eaten or partaken of during the evening of this day in each household of faith, and in the morning of this same day there was an exodus and convocation. It was a day moreover of execution (judgment of course preceding it), and the exodus being significant of escape from bondage and death, it was a day significant in general terms of life and death—life for the redeemed, death for the unredeemed.

Esaias liii. 9, speaking of the Great Sacrificial Lamb, says, "And he (God) will give the wicked as the price of his burial and the rich as the price of his death." The 92d and 93d Septuagint (93d and 94th King James) Psalms are significant, moreover, of these two teachings in connection with this day. The 92d having the heading "for the day of the pro-sabbath, when the earth hath been newly inhabited, David's praise for an ode," is significant of new life, and new rule, and victorious rejoicing; the 93d having this heading, "David's psalm for a fourth Sabbath," is significant of judgment upon the wicked, "requital," "the digging of a pit for the sinner," "the return of righteousness to the way of judgment," "all the upright in heart having this righteousness." The call for all this class "to stand up," "for" and "along side of," and in conjunction with "the Lord "against those who work the transgression."

In Psa xcii 2, we have moreover, this statement, "Thy throne is ready from that time, from the age art thou." The last clause of the preceding verse defines the time and its great accompanying event as related to the cosmos. It reads, "Yea indeed (or for) he hath made strong the earth that will not have been shaken." Remember that "this earth" is yet to be shaken—"yet once for all I shake not the earth alone but the heavens also," and this "once for all" denoteth the transition of the things that are being shaken as though they had been made, that the things which are not being shaken may abide. Heb. xii. 26, 27. The word "made" by the way, is the old creative word of Gen. i. 1. ἐποιησεν not κτιζω.

The time and the event and the whole scene depicted in these two Psalms belong to the period immediately preceding the "new heavens and the new earth," or you might say perhaps simultaneous with the coming of the new heavens and the new earth, and the "sabbatismos" of the saints.

Again the pro-sabbath in conjunction with "the seven days of unleavened" constitutes an eight-day period fraught with untold significance, every day of it. In this conjunction it is numerically a fourth of an eighth. In this eighth we have already found and noted judgment, retribution, atonement, redemption, rule, life, death, and a new heavens and a new earth. In the result we have Paradise restored and all that remains one more pronounced to be good (καλη) good from the standpoint of harmony—beautiful.

Now since man was created during the sixth day or period, and was God's last creation, it is a matter of important inquiry to know where in this sixth period man's life upon the earth began. For if we can determine where in the sixth period this life began, we can also determine where in the ninth it will end, so far as the wicked are concerned, at least so far as the numerical type indicated it. For man's period of entry or choice ought to correspond with his position in the type. Resorting therefore to the cosmical type given in a previous article, we find the six creative periods or days aggregating 12000 years to be each 2000:00 years.

We have also found above that the numerical expression for the pro-sabbath is 1-8 of 1-4 of 1-6 of a creative period. Then 12000 divided by six equals 2000.00 dividing this last number by four gives 666.66; and dividing this last by eight gives 83.3 this pro-sabbatic period of man's life in the whole sixth period. Then as the κατάπαυσις or "rest that remaineth for the royal people of God" is a cessation from works and follows this pro-sabbath period, and as this pro-sabbath period is in time and in this cosmos, the 2000 years from Christ's first coming to his second coming will be shortened by this period of judgment which follows the 1000 millennial reign. 2000 less 83.3 equals 1916.66. That is, man's life on the earth, instead of beginning with 12000, or 1 of the 7th period, begins with the 12000 less 83.3, or 11916.66, and ends with a period of 83.3 years of final catastrophe to this cosmos, or this order of things, the saints in the mean time being "caught away" and "hid" from "the fiery trial that is to try every man's works."

Here again is fulfilled the συντομη or interval type. For the saints are to be restored again to this "changed" or "translated" heavens and earth, this new Eden or Paradise, purified from sin and having a cosmic order and beauty of its own, an outline of this order and beauty being given us in the last two chapters of the apocalypse.

THE ENDLESS LIFE.

Discourse II.—Part B.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH OPINION ON HUMAN DESTINY DURING THE LAST THIRTY YEARS; WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY THROUGH THE DIVINE INCARNATION.

The publication of Dr. Farrar's sermons showed that he had, with the reactionary tendency of oratorical genius, gone almost to the opposite extreme of Universalism. This dogmatic position Dr. Farrar indeed repudiates in his later work on Judgment and Mercy, in reply to Dr. Pusey's book, What is of Faith as to Everlasting Punishment?—and this later work of Canon Farrar is a far weightier production than the former. It gives the most complete view as yet published of Jewish Rabbinical opinions on human destiny, and makes it clearer than ever that the doctrine of endless misery was not the orthodox faith of Christ's contemporaries. It is a storehouse of facts on the question of authority in this department. But Canon Farrar offers little aid in the interpretation of Scripture. He admits most candidly that if the old-fashioned established laws of interpretation must prevail, "no demolition can be so complete, and so logical, as that which Mr. White and Mr. Minton have inflicted on the arguments hitherto brought against them, by those who think that these questions require nothing for their decision but the shuffling and manipulation of a few phrases or texts." This is the language in which the late head-master of Marlborough describes the established laws of Biblical and classical interpretation. He seems to rely, with Mr. Andrew Jukes and Dr. Samuel Cox, on some more sublime mode of extracting truth from the Bible, than the old method of ascertaining the meaning of its ordinary expressions. It reminds us of Hooker's words, that, "there is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and delusive art which changeth the meaning of words as alchemy doth, or would do, the substance of metals, making of anything what it listeth, and bringing in the end all truth to nothing." It is by the operation of this new alchemy on Scripture terms that we are taught that the threatened destruction of a sinner really signifies the destruction of sin in him, a statement in which all three of these eminent writers agree, denouncing the more obvious sense as a piece of debasing literalism.

Mr. Constable, who has a special gift in following up the deceptive windings of Universalism, well points out that according to this definition of destruction, by Messrs. Farrar, Jukes, and Cox, the "destruction" of a sinner is precisely the same thing with the "salvation" of a sinner; so that it might be said with equal truth that Jesus Christ came into the world to destroy sinners, and to save them. But indeed it seems hopeless to ascertain and fix the exegetical principles of Universalism. Whenever the Scriptures offer language which seems to stand like a wall straight across the pathway of this theory, it is unceremoniously levelled with the ground. As for any painstaking study of the positive doctrine of Life in Christ, or any detailed reply to its arguments, such a process is not to be found in its recent publications. Scorn for literalism, and the bold assertion of the figurative sense of all Scripture language on human destiny, make up the sum of Universalism, so far as I am able to understand it. The question is—A house word shall stand? God's word, or theirs?

I am sorry to speak thus disparagingly of the works of men at whose feet, in other respects, I should gladly sit as a learner,—men of noble aims and lofty thought. But indeed I am supported by still abler men in affirming that the tone of the Bible as a whole, in its tremendous warnings of the wrath to come, is much nearer to the tone of the "orthodox" faith than it is to the cheerful temper of Universalist writers in their encouragement to obstinate sinners. They hold out to such indeed a certain degree of penalty, but beyond the penalty shines the "eternal hope" of universal salvation; and this is the issue which sinners regard. Now, Christ and his apostles speak of "everlasting destruction" of such, and of an "indignation and wrath" which reaches to the "destruction of body and soul in hell." I feel as unable as I did thirty years ago to believe that these words contain a single ray of hope for those wicked men in whose experience they will be fulfilled.

It is one thing to hold, as many do, that God's great mercy may permit of the presentation of saving truth and grace to men in a future state, who, from age or circumstances, have had no opportunity of laying hold of eternal life here; it is quite another thing to hold and teach that the wicked men who have seen and rejected the Light of the world shall not "perish in their iniquity." This seems to be flying in the face of the Incarnate Judge, who has declared that their "destruction" shall be "eternal."

Now, lastly, I wish to add a few words on the extent to which this mass of printed argument, in support of what we think divine truth, has influenced Christian opinion.

There is a certain difficulty in forming an estimate, because on this subject there prevails a strong tendency in many quarters to conceal the facts. No sooner does any considerable man reach the conclusion that divine truth is to be found in the direction of the doctrine of Life in Christ, than his friends begin to consider how they can persuade him to conceal his "low convictions." Although he may be satisfied in his own mind of the general validity of the argument, he is conjured to nurse every remaining doubt, so as to lessen the obligation which conscience imposes on him to declare himself, on a question where the character of Almighty God is so deeply concerned. Thus some even of the ablest and most successful preachers of this generation, blest by God in awakening many souls, men who know their Bibles as few do, will deliberately tell you that they find not a vestige of evidence in the New Testament, from the beginning of the gospel of St. Matthew to the end of St. Jude's epistle,—that is in the Four Gospels, and in all the Apostolic Epistles — for the natural immortality of the soul, or for any other doctrine than that of Life in Christ; yet, who because they think this avowal in public would injure their usefulness, nurse some doubt which they have as to the meaning of one passage at the end of the Apocalypse. Imagine a good man acting thus in relation to any other gospel doctrine! Would he not boldly teach, on any other topic, what he thought the four Evangelists and the four great Apostles SS. James, Peter, John, and Paul, laydown as dogmatic truth?

A new illustration has just occurred of the concealment of beliefs, in the case of Dr. Alexander Vinet, of Lausanne. Vinet died in 1860. No one dreamed of heresy in connection with Vinet's name. No, he was the modern Pascal, the great pillar of French Protestant orthodoxy. Yet it now appears by the publication in his correspondence of a letter written in 1845, and suppressed for nearly forty years by his orthodox friends, that M. Vinet disbelieved in the popular doctrine of the necessary immortality of souls, and rested all his solid hope of an eternal life for man in the revelation of God in Christ, declaring plainly for the everlasting destruction of the wicked.

Thus it is with many others; both lay and clerical. The Boards of Missionary Societies, Tract Societies, Bible Societies, are honeycombed with these beliefs, but the fear of denunciation by a few fanatical members restrains confession. Mr. Impey, before referred to, assures me that the Wesleyan ministry is in a similar condition; but the gospel doubters and believers are restrained by fear of losing their official position as ministers, if they openly declare what they think concerning the characters and ways of God as set forth in the Methodist formularies. I say these things with full assurance of their truth.

Nevertheless, the confession of this faith is now rapidly extending. Prominent men who hold it ought to confess it to encourage others. The pressure of popular Atheism increasing among the scientific and operative classes, and founded nearly altogether upon abhorrence of the dogma of eternal torments, is leading numbers to perceive that Christianity, in order to weather the storm that is breaking upon it, must become more Scriptural in its basis, Christianity with the idea of immortal life at the centre, can successfully meet every Infidelity, every Atheism, every Paganism; and the positively large company of men who have proved this by experience are sensibly influencing the understandings of mankind.

In the mission field the stirring of the dry bones of the ancient theology is well nigh universal. Young men who go forth from Europe saturated with modern knowledge, and are placed face to face with hundreds of millions of heathens in India and China, are finding that they cannot retain or preach the ancient and horrible dogma of the endless misery of so many pagans; and it becomes an urgent question with them between Universalism and the New Testament doctrine of Life Eternal in Christ alone. If at home the current is still running strongly among the multitudes who do not sufficiently "tremble at the word of the Lord" in favor of Universalism, in the mission field it is running with equal strength in favor of the doctrine which has so long been expounded here and elsewhere.

Time would fail me to tell what I know of the doubts of students now preparing for mission work; of the faith of missionaries abroad, and of Christian laymen in foreign parts. One noble worker, a Baptist missionary, Mr. Hobbs, of Sewry, in Bengal, in 1870, at home on furlough after ten years labor, in passing up Fleet street, sees an advertisement of "Three Letters on Life in Christ," then appearing in the Christian World. Mr. Hobbs buys a copy, reads, goes home, and goes back to India, to study the matter for several years, is deeply convinced, avows his conviction to the Baptist Missionary Committee. On returning home, invalided, a second time, in 1878, he gradually and quietly drops out of missionary employment, and is consigned to an obscure post as a home worker in Bedfordshire: thence he is drawn out again by a wonderful providence to an independent mission work in Calcutta; commences evangelical labor in open confession of the doctrine of Life through the Incarnation; conciliates all Christian hearts by his temper and prudence; is supplied with the means of maintaining native fellow-workers—all of them earnest believers in the same doctrine; circulates Christian literature; writes catechisms and tracts on a Scriptural basis—all his brethren encouraging him—just because the hand of God is evidently with this honest and devoted man.

Another example:—The chief jailor of Bangalore is travelling, twenty years ago, on a hot day in India—reposes in the rest-house—finds on a window sill one out-eaten page of a tract on Life only in Christ—reads it, searches the Scriptures, believes it—forms a lending library of the books and pamphlets which set forth the argument. A young Wesleyan missionary, forced by the overpowering burden of Conference theology, to think over his creed among the Indian millions, is led similarly to this conclusion, and before he returns home by command, to resign his office, he discovers that through the circulation of books from the pious jailer's library, there was not a European Christian in a populous cantonment near Bangalore, who had not embraced the belief of Life in Christ. It is in fact travelling through India with almost electric energy.

Mr. Skrefsrud, in Santhallistan, whose immense linguistic knowledge gives additional authority to his words, as an interpreter of the Asiatic Bible, openly avows his coincident belief in this doctrine of Eternal Life through the Immortal Savior, and his boldness on those mountains will encourage very many.

In China a solid foundation has been laid in Hankow, by the courageous and able London missionaries, Mr. Griffith John and Mr. Evan Bryant. During the past ten years they have cleared out from the hymn-books and catechisms all unscriptural phrases on human destiny. Mr. Bryant has openly taught for ten years what he believes to be the revelation of God on Life Eternal, and his words will not fall to the ground. For such is the nature of this truth that sometimes one single hint or sentence of direction puts whole companies of people reading their Bibles in a fresh light, and when that process begins, especially accompanied by earnest prayer. It is seldom long before some of the readers agree in plain daylight that the Bible was not written to teach man's natural immortality or the everlasting torments of lost souls. In truth, future punishment does not occupy in the Bible nearly the prominent position that it occupies in mediæval and modern theology. The chief topic of the Bible is Salvation by Love—the only Gospel which can keep lost souls; and as for those who "choose death," and "[illegible] eternal life," they are abandoned by the Apostles to the doom of the death eternal. All mere arguments, all sensational alarms would be wasted upon unbelievers; and therefore the Bible is comparatively silent.

Lastly, Christianity in Japan is waking up to behold the same glorious light of truth rising with healing on its wings. Several of the American and European missionaries in the Japanese Empire have embraced these views of Divine Truth.

The Rev. Walter Dening, in Hakodati, is probably the ablest Church missionary in that distant post. Formerly in Madagascar, he has now been ten years in Japan. He is a learned scholar, and translates into Japanese such works as "Morley on Miracles," yet has equal facilities in the colloquial dialect, so that he commands attention from large congregations of the common people. Mr. Dening, face to face with Japanese Buddhism and Atheism, has found the weakness of the traditional faith, which sets forth a God, at whose moral character these ingenious, thoughtful Japanese smile with incredulity, or sneer with contempt—a God who will create countless immortals in danger of endless misery, yet leave them in the dark for thousands of years, without allowing them to hear one word of the only remedy.

Mr. Dening was compelled to re-examine his creed. He sent home for the books which in England are setting forth the doctrine of Universalism, by Canon Farrar, Dr. Cox, and Mr. Jukes, and he sent also for other books on Life in Christ only. He has embraced with ardor the latter belief. He is recalled by his Directors, to give an account of his defection from their standard; though the Prayer Book does not contain one single word requiring belief in the Immortality of the soul, or in endless torments. We await the result of their deliberations. If Mr. Dening is recalled because he will not preach endless torments to the Japanese, or natural immortality to the Buddhists, all England will hear of it, and England will, I am confident, blame, not Mr. Dening, but any Committee, however venerable, which should insist on missionary articles of belief, which are not articles of the Church of England.

But enough. I have told you how a story, my brethren, which is true, I believe, in every syllable, and it is as wonderful as it is true. In presence of such facts all personal recollections sink into insignificance. For ourselves we say to-day only this:—thank God that it was allotted to us to take part in the latest revival of such a truth; a truth which brings joy and gladness wherever it shines forth; brings intenser faith and more personal love to Christ, who "saves our lives with a great deliverance;" more unbroken confidence in God, whose pity and mercy have alike become more intelligible; brings more solid conviction of the truth of the Gospel as the only light of life beyond, and gilds the tomb itself with the radiance of the blessed hope of resurrection. But here let these personal references end. The progress of great truths is hindered by all self-regard. Let us lose the thought of past disrepute in public rejoicing. The battle is half won. It has been won by many soldiers of Christ, by steady prayer, by steady suffering, by steady witnessing, by ceaseless Scriptural reply to the adversaries of the truth, who are now mostly weary of the conflict. As for ourselves, God will deal with us as he thinks good. As for the doctrine of Life in Christ, it is rooted in sound criticism of the Word of God, it is rooted in antiquity, it is rooted in myriads of able minds and earnest hearts, and it is certain to triumph.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The Restitution advocates the doctrine of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began. As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel and literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion as the requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

BRITISH PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 27.

Prelude—A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. Luke ii. 32—Who are Gentiles? Who are Israel?—Are converted Gentiles ever called, by the Spirit, Israel?—Ten-tribed kingdom continued—Use of the term Israel—Had the sceptre of David, or all Israel, follow the ten-tribed kingdom? What sceptre remained with Judah? How long did it continue.

Prelude.—"A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Thus spoke the Holy Spirit by the mouth of the aged Simeon, with the child Jesus in his arms.

No one should question his ability to use the terms "Gentile" and "Israel" correctly. Gentiles (nations) were all nations except the Hebrews. On this point there can be no controversy. Relative to the term Israel, we have examined and classified about 2400 passages with the following results: 1. The term was first applied to Jacob by an angel who wrestled with him all night. It means a prince of God, ruling with God (Heb. ישראל: Gr. Ισραηλ). It has been in use from B. C. 1753 to A.D. 1883—3636 years. Its signification should, by this time, be well understood; yet, the Christian world is divided as to its Scriptural import. To be satisfied, we have traced the term Israel through the Bible, and noted every variety of use. In so doing we are obliged to say that we have not found the popular expression "Spiritual Israel." We give the reader the conclusions of our labors.

Jacob is called Israel 42 times. Jacob goes by the name of his wife, but. It will be readily seen that, as the term is applied to himself, to his sons and to their posterity, two classes would spring up, having the same name, viz.: true Israel, and nominal Israel, an "Israelite in deed," and an Israelite only in name; both classes being Hebrews. All the sons of Abraham fall out of the line of the great promise but Isaac. Of the sons of Isaac, Jacob is chosen, Esau rejected; yet as truly the son of Israel as Isaac. This course is followed till Christ appears. Of the attributes, more remote, are the following: Children is used not less than 518 times; applied to Jacob's sons and called such 45 times; to Israel as a nation 780 times; God of Israel 150 times; all Israel 100 times, first to the twelve tribes and then to the ten tribes, during the existence of the two kingdoms; mountains of Israel 16 times; beauty of Israel once; kingdom of Israel 7 times; daugh; ter of Israel once; king of Israel 30 times; armies of Israel twice; host of Israel 5 times; coasts of Israel 7 times; governors of Israel 2 times; seed of Israel 4 times; rock of Israel once; land 20 times; chariot once; thousands of Israel 8 times; fountain once; synagogues; shepherd of Israel once; Holy One of Israel 25 times; congregation of Israel 22 times; house of Israel 90 times; men of Israel 40 times; tribes of Israel 46 times; throne of Israel 4 times; princes of Israel 15 times; chief of Israel once; Judah and Israel are often used after the revolt. These are specimens of the Scripture use of Israel. It is very singular if "spiritual Israel" is a correct name for Gentile Christians, that the Holy Spirit never uses it. Gentile (גוי, goi, nation or a collective body of people. Hebrew nation excepted. We have in like manner, investigated the meaning and Scripture use of the term Gentile, with the following results: goi—nations—Gentiles is used 30 times in the Hebrew Testament. In all places there is one distinct idea: that all the people of the earth form two nations, classes. 1. The Hebrew family forming one class by itself; 2. All other families of the earth constituting the other class. This thought is so clearly defined, that as to the term Gentile, there can be no mistake in its O. T. use. It is defined with equal distinctness in the 104 passages where ethnos (ἔθνος) is used in the N. T. They all illustrate the idea taught by the language of Simeon, in Luke ii. 32. "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Both terms are names of two distinct nationalities, and for that purpose the Spirit uses them. Since, then, the Holy Spirit does not speak of any "Spiritual Gentile, nor of any Spiritual Israel," it is quite safe to say that there was none. "Thy people," being sufficiently distinct to designate "Israelites indeed." To call a converted Gentile a true "Israelite" annihilates national distinction designed by the use of the terms. Does conversion take away any other distinct nationalities? Does it mix up English, French, German, Austrian, Turk or Russian? Let it be kept in mind that Israel became the name of a distinct nationality.

History of the ten-tribed kingdom continued.—It is well to note our progress in tracing this eastern part of our historic chain. We began with Abram in Chaldea, his paternal home; heard him called to be the parent of another people, and give birth to a family of nations. The promise is first made to Abraham's seed (Christ); then Abraham, by faith, is named in the deed, Unto thee and to thy seed. Then Isaac is named and Ishmael rejected. "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." Then Jacob is chosen and Esau rejected. We have followed the history of Jacob (Israel) through his sojourn in Egypt; noticed that severe captivity; and traced their course out of Egyptian bondage; through the Red Sea to the land of Canaan. Followed them through their tribal settlement; traced their history through the ten-tribed kingdom of Saul, David and Solomon; noticed the rebellion and the rending of the kingdom under Rehoboam, Solomon's son. We then started the inquiry whether the sceptre of the kingdom promised to David followed the ten-tribed kingdom, or the two-tribed kingdom? or whether the sceptre was removed like the future union under Christ? Those questions are not readily answered, since expositors do not take the same view of this complicated problem.

One class of interpreters say that the kingdom and the promises followed the kingdom of Israel, while others contend that the sceptre of David continued with Judah till Messiah first appeared on the earth. These expositors quote Gen. xlix. 10 in proof of their position: "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come: and unto him (shall) the gathering of the people be." The meaning of this passage, says Hengstenberg, "Depends upon the meaning we give to the word Shiloh." It is objected, that Shiloh (used 20 times) is always the name of a town, and never the name of a person; and therefore cannot mean Messiah. Some of the interpretations and readings are as follows: 1. "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the ruler's staff from between his feet, till he shall go to Shiloh," 1 Sam. iv. 12; which means that Judah should have the primacy in war till the Promised Land was conquered and the Ark of the Covenant was solemnly deposited at Shiloh. 2. Judah shall lead the tribes till they shall find rest in Palestine. 3. "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, . . . till rest come, and the nations obey him." 4. "One having the principality shall not be taken from the house of Judah, nor a scribe from his children's children until the Messiah come, whose the kingdom is." 5. "Kings shall not fall from the house of Judah, nor skilful doctors of the law from their children's children, till the time when the King's Messiah shall come." 6. "The sceptre shall not fall from Judah nor a lawgiver from under his rule, until he (the Pacifico) shall come whose it is." 8. "Until he comes whose is the dominion." This interpretation comes from Ezek. xxi. 27. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no (more) until he come whose right it is; and I will give it (him)." "He whose is the dominion," is a paraphrase of Shiloh regarded as a name of the Messiah. 9. "Others have interpreted Shiloh as a kind of proper name of the Messiah derived from the verb שָׁלַח, he rested, was quiet, P. N. שִׁלֹה, Shalah, peace prosperity." Hengstenberg, who calls it Pacificator, the author of peace, says, "This interpretation is liable to no objection, and has every thing in its favor."

The following is Hengstenberg's translation of Gen. xlix. 10, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the law-giver, commander, from between his feet, until the Peacemaker comes, and him shall the nations obey." The following, says Hengstenberg, we believe to be its true meaning: "Judah shall not cease to exist as a tribe, nor lose its superiority until it shall be exalted to higher honor and glory through the great Redeemer who shall spring from it and whom not only the Jews but all the nations of the earth shall obey."

"The kingdom of the Messiah, in the Old Testament, is not placed in opposition to the theocracy, but appears as a continuation of it. Compare 1 Sam. vii. 12, etc. As according to Isaiah ix. 6, the Prince of peace sits upon the throne of David, and prolongs the duration of David's kingdom forever; and Amos ix. 11, the fallen tabernacle of David is to be rebuilt by him, so here the Redeemer, who shall spring from Judah, appears as the Enlarger of his dominion, hitherto limited to a single people, over all nations."—Hengstenberg.

We might give other views. 10. Some interpreters seem very positive that Shiloh is only the name of a town in the tribe of Ephraim. It is doubtful if Shiloh, as a town, existed in the days of Jacob. We first meet with the name in Josh. xviii. 1. It was simply a station where the army rested, and where the ark rested, like the station at Gilgal. The Lord gave the people rest.

Has this passage had any fulfillment? This question is answered in two ways by two classes of expositors. Those who hold to its Messianic character believe that Judah did have a distinct existence till the overthrow of Jerusalem by Titus. That Judah held the royal city and the temple, while the ten tribes remained lost and unknown. Those the tribe of Judah from Egypt through the wilderness to the Hebrew conquest of Palestine. View that tribe under the judges; during the reign of Saul, of David, and of Solomon. Then after the division of the twelve tribes, during the existence of the ten-tribed and of the two-tribed kingdoms; during the 133 years transpiring between the captivity of Israel and Judah; during the 70 years captivity in Babylon; under the Gentile monarchies to the birth of the Messiah. There is a remarkable contrast between the history of the two people, Judah and Israel of that space of time.

2. The other view, or the non-Messianic view of Gen. xlix. 10, is very zealously defended by W. H. Pool, an able expositor of "Anglo-Israel. We cannot express his views better than by using his own language:

"The usual interpretation given to this passage (Gen. xlix. 10) is that 'Shiloh' means Christ, and that Judah was to hold the sceptre of dominion, or Empire until Christ came. But who does not see the inconsistency and unreliability of such an interpretation. The word 'Shiloh' is twenty times given in the Holy Scriptures, and in every case (sciltio principit—) P. W.) it means a place, and not once does it mean a person. The children of Israel came to Shiloh. 'Came to Joshua to Shiloh.' 'Cast lots for them in Shiloh.' 'Spake to them at Shiloh.' 'The house of God was at Shiloh.' 'The Lord appeared in Shiloh.' 'Make this house as Shiloh.' And many more of the same import. Then, who is it that has read history, that does not know that Judah, or the Jews, never had the sceptre of dominion for one day, since the days of Zedekiah, no not for an hour. When the sacred vessels of the holy temple were taken to Babylon, the cup of Chaldean iniquity was nearly full, and that great Empire came to its death in a full room. They were weighed in the balance and were found wanting. The Persian kings, to the number of fourteen, swayed their sceptre over all those lands in the East. Then came Alexander the Great, and after him the Syrian conquerors, next ten of eleven (xiii. W.) of the Ptolemys, who all held the country tributary to them. The Maccabean or Asmonean family, nine of them, claimed the kingly authority, but they were not of Judah or Jews: then the country fell into the hands of Pompey and the twelve Cæsars; and when Christ came, Herod, who was an Edomite, a creature of Rome, held nominal away over the land, and the people of the Jews. Here were thirty-eight creatures of foreign birth and alien blood, who usurped authority and claimed to govern the land. Surely that system of things could never have been the true meaning of the venerable Jacob when he called his sons to him to hear what would come to pass in the latter days. The true meaning of the passage is, 'The sceptre shall not depart from Judah till rest comes,' or, 'Till he comes to rest.' The sceptre of Judah remained in the house of David; and in the family of David it was transferred from the East to the 'Isles of the West.' Where it will remain until the time of the peaceful union of the two houses so long divided, that is the rest promised in the latter days." Thus spoke Pool.

SCENES IN THE CHURCH OF THE SEPULCHRE.

JERUSALEM, April 3, 1883.

The streets of Jerusalem have been crowded for the past three weeks and the week before Easter they reached their climax; all the convents and hotels are crowded. Palm Sunday is a great day in the Church of the Sepulchre and is the commencement of Passion week. I will here say that there is a great rivalry between the Latin, Greek and other churches, and they are continually slandering each other, and were it not for the strong arm of the law, which keeps them all down, I think they would tear each other to pieces. Such is the hatred existing between the Latin and Greek churches that it is considered necessary, during the services of Passion Week by the authorities to place Mohammedan Janissaries at the door and also in many parts of the church with lash in hand to check the base passions of the various sects of Christians who profess to worship there. Of course the Moslem will laugh and the Jew point the finger of scorn at such Christianity as this.

I will try to give you a faint description of the scene within the church which to me was really painful. Every one who was not dumb was shrieking at the top of his voice, "Hosanna! Hosanna! to the Son of David!" On the day preceding the crucifixion, the bishops wash the feet of their priests in commemoration of the event in our Savior's history when he washed the feet of the disciples. The following day the climax of the scene is presented. It reminds one of a set of lunatics in Bedlam. From the rising of the sun a host of a portion of humanity from the country round Jerusalem were running about in the church chasing each other round the marble house, where it is said once the Savior laid, shouting and screaming with all their might. Such an assemblage of worshippers could not be found elsewhere. And this is to represent the mob which would crucify our Savior eighteen hundred years ago. Away with him! Crucify him! Surely I thought, this scene exceeds the original. It is horrible! This scene was followed at night by a strange, weird farce, viz.: the passion and crucifixion of Jesus.

As soon as it is dark the monks assemble together in the Latin chapel, called that of the Apparition, where Jesus appeared to Mary after his resurrection. From this place they commence their march to Calvary. A large cross bearing an image of our Lord as large as life fastened with nails and crowned with thorns and besmeared with blood, is borne foremost amid the jeers of the rough crowd, who were running and screaming, Away with him! Away with him! Crucify him! Crucify him! However one may feel horrified at such a spectacle the crowd is so great that an exit is impossible.

Before starting from the Church of the Apparition, a monk preaches a sermon in Italian, and then the procession moves on till they come to the door of the chapel where they show the pillar of flagellation, where the Savior was scourged; here they stop while another friar gives a sermon in Spanish. At the altar where it is said the soldiers divided our Savior's clothes among them the procession stops again and another friar regales us with another sermon in French. As the procession is about to ascend Calvary they stop again and treat us to another sermon in English mingled with the inharmonious sound of another Latin sermon by another friar.

Then they actually crucify our Savior on Calvary. After this scene ruffianly looking friars, representing Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus now approach the cross, draw out the nails and then bend the body as is usual, the effigy being very pliable. Winding a white sheet round the ghastly corpse, they carry it down to the stone of unction, at the foot of Calvary, where they wash and anoint it. How ghastly the body appeared in the dim obscure light; the limbs were stiff and rigid, the eyes and mouth partially open, the blood dried on its cheeks, hands, sides and feet, and the whole aspect of the countenance was that of death. Having anointed the body by throwing some spices over it, they wrap it in a winding sheet and carry it off to the Sepulchre where they lay it and close the door. The ceremony ends about three o'clock the next morning. When we left they were going through the most antic tricks and postures, jumping over each others shoulders, dragging each other along, screaming in the most rude manner; there is nothing in the world to compare to it. This I must say is exclusively Latin work. Next week comes the Greek counterfeit of the Holy Ghost when poured on the apostles, which I hope to give your readers some account of in my next.

"Because Straight is the Gate."

In Matt. vii. 14, Jesus says, "Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find."

Dear brethren and sisters, I want to ask a few plain questions. Can we, as followers of Christ, engage in the follies and frivolities that are going on around us, and still be in the straight and narrow way?

Can we attend the play, parties, dances, shows, negro minstrels, and all such foolishness, and still be in the straight and narrow way? Can we attend the county fairs, see all manner of gambling, look at horse racing, listen to all the drunkenness and still be in the straight and narrow way?

Were not fairs condemned in olden times? See Ezek. xxvii. 12-27. These fairs were similar to our fairs of the present day. Can we engage in anything that God condemned and be in the narrow way?

Some of the brethren and sisters we love so well we hear attend such places. Can we possibly be followers of Christ and of those worldly pursuits also?

These are questions I would like to have answered by older persons. Have we come out from the world when we engage in worldly affairs? Can we be Christ's and at the same time servemammon? Where is the line of demarkation? Can the outside world tell us from the world when we engage in the follies of the world?

I am young in the faith, and wish to hear from older ones. I must confess I cannot engage in all the follies I did when in the outside world where I stood a few years ago. Jesus says "He that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Rev. ii. 7. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Rev. ii. 11. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it. Rev. ii. 17. And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. And he shall rule over them with a rod of iron. . . . . He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment. Rev. iii. 5. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is in new Jerusalem. Rev. iii. 12. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne. Rev. iii. 21.

So it is the overcomer that receives all these good gifts.

Paul says in 2 Tim. ii. 11-12: It is a faithful saying, for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: if we suffer we shall reign with him; if we deny him he also will deny us.

We are told to hold fast the form of sound words. We are commanded to run with patience the race set before us. We are exhorted to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. We are commanded to take the whole armor of God and stand firm; to be patient, sober, and diligent.

Dear brethren and sisters of the like faith, our time is short to work. Let us be faithful; let the outside world know we are interested in their welfare. Signs tell us the Lord is soon coming. Let us notice the fulfillment of prophesy. The day is at hand. Pray for one another.

Yours for the truth.

Editor Restitution:

Your kind letter reached me safely with enclosure, for which please accept my thanks. The lady of whom you speak stopped at the hotel opposite my house ten days, but had left before your letter arrived. I assure you that I should have been most happy to have shown her all the attention in my power; however, Mrs. Merrill was very kind to her, and went about with her wherever she liked.

I have lying on my table a huge pile of letters from all parts of the country, asking information about colonization in Palestine. I hope the friends will be patient, and I will answer as soon as possible, and try to give reliable information.

I met Mr. Stelphars, today, and he looks cheerful. I shall send the two cards of flowers, one for each of your daughters, by this mail. The flowers were gathered this spring. The country is looking splendid everywhere. Provisions are plenty, and spring vegetables abundant and good.

Yours in hope.

I am grateful for the continuance of your paper after my time run out. I enclose part pay and will send more as soon as I can.

I was greatly pleased with Brother Welch's articles. For a long time to me the Scriptures taught more than is taught by many. To me it teaches that Christ at the last day will raise the just to eternal life, for on such the second death hath no power. The unjust shall come to a knowledge of the truth, and then they must work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, as we who are called are doing now.

We thought the brethren would like to know how the cause is prospering in this part of Nebraska, so write.

We meet together regularly every first day of the week, and expound the word of God the best we can, and the people here think we set forth strange ideas, and wonder if there are any others in the world who preach the same doctrine we do.

There are a few here that believe the things concerning the kingdom, and the name of Jesus Christ. We met together last first day, and a large congregation assembled, after which we repaired to the water's edge, and four persons put on Christ by baptism, and there are others who are searching the Scriptures, and will soon follow these faithful ones.

Yours in the one faith.

I love THE RESTITUTION, and have been a reader of it through all the various changes that have been made, and I am sure it is one of the best papers published. I look for its coming each week with joy, for it is as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

Dear Brother, pray for us that we may have courage to bear all the trials that come upon us, for I feel many times as though I should faint by the way.

Will Brother Cook please explain in plain words the following: After man has obeyed the form of doctrine required by God fully, 1. Is there any assurance given him that God is pleased with him? 2. In a few words, when we become sons by adoption what evidence have we if any of it?

I find a great deal in THE RESTITUTION that instructs and teaches me of God's holy word. I was brought up to believe in the conscious suffering of the wicked after death, which made me feel that God was not a merciful Father. But now I feel that he is a God of justice and mercy. There are some passages in the Bible that I do not understand. Will some one explain Rev. xiv. 11, and xx. 10.

Editor Restitution:

You see I am still in Texas, and I am alone in the faith in this country. Oh how my heart longs for Christian fellowship. I feel as if I was a stranger in a strange land. I am living with my daughter, whose health is very poor. Would try to find a place where the brethren meet together if I could leave, but THE RESTITUTION comes as a visitor. I do not know what I should do without it. The time of being deprived of the society of those who love our Lord and his appearing, I hope will not be long. I find it is labor and wait. The gathering time may not be far in the future, when we that love him will be gathered together in the kingdom of our Lord and King, and see the King in his beauty.

My prayer is, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen.

Old Ætna is the largest of the European series of volcanoes. Its base is 90 miles in circumference and the cone rises to 11,000 feet. Its first recorded eruption took place in 476 B. C. The second occurred in A. D. 1169, and laid the city of Catalonia in ashes, slaying 15,000 of its inhabitants. In 1672 another disastrous eruption took place, and from 1001 to 1878 a series of minor ones. From that time until 1882 quiet reigned. Two new craters were then formed in the mountain, and from these there issued lava streams, one of them 2 miles broad and 170 feet deep. Clouds of gray ashes covered the whole island of Sicily.

An interesting incident attending the funeral of the Ritter von Werthenstein, a wealthy Jewish banker and financier of Vienna, was a visit paid by the widow to the Burgomaster with a check in her hand for one hundred thousand francs, which she gave him for immediate distribution among the poor of the city. The Ritter von Werthenstein started in life as a poor and obscure young man, but railroad building and other enterprises, conducted on a large and successful scale, made him one of the wealthiest men in the Austrian empire and raised him to the rank of Baron.

ZION'S Way Marks, or Knowledge vs. Mystery.—By D. D. Patterson, Grand Rapids, Mich. Pp. 318. Price $1.00. This is a republication, in book form, of a series of articles under the same title, in the Dawn of the Morning. While not prepared to yield an unqualified assent to all the doctrinal conclusions, and prophetical expositions of the author, there are many points upon which he, nevertheless, has expressed himself quite lucidly and forcibly.

THE two beautiful flower-cards alluded to by Mrs. Davis in her letter from Jerusalem, came safely to hand. Persons, who have sent money to us to forward to Mrs. Davis to be used by her for herself and otherwise, as she may think best, and who have desired one or more of these beautiful flower-wreaths, as a precious memento from Immanuel's Land, will have to exercise some patience, as it requires a few months to get a return from Palestine. A sister in Argos gave us $5—which we hope is in Jerusalem by this time. A sister in Kansas sent $20—of which we have sent on a part and will soon send the rest. We do not like to risk all at once.

PROF. HIRSCHFELDER'S "Biblical Expositor and People's Commentary." This is a serial published monthly, at ten cents a number, or $1.20 a year. The address is Prof. J. M. Hirschfelder, 565 Sherbourne street, Toronto, Prov. of Ontario, Canada. The editor will give accurate translations from the Hebrew of difficult passages, with critical and explanatory notes. He will also give a complete history of Hebrew Literature from the earliest times. He occupies the position of Lecturer in Oriental Literature in the University College in Toronto, and is known as author of several books. Five numbers of the Expositor have come to hand. We can only now say that the work is one of marked ability and worthy of liberal patronage.

WE have had quite a number of requests from various persons, who have claimed to be in indigent and suffering circumstances, to make an appeal in their behalf to our subscribers for help. With these requests, we, of late years, have rarely complied. We have not the time to investigate those cases; and without investigation managers of different papers have learned the sad lesson that there is danger of being deceived. Some persons lack because they are simply indolent and reckless about making any effort to provide for themselves. Others have children who are able to afford all needed help, and who are under sacred obligations to care for parental wants. And there are others, as widows and the unfortunate, whose cases should not be neglected. Now, brethren, what time has an editor, amid all his perplexities, to write and thus learn about the real circumstances? When real known suffering appeals for help the Bible most solemnly and imperatively binds the duty upon us of cheerfully rendering assistance, and we to the professor of Christianity who disregards and shirks his obligations. Our subscribers have quite a burden to sustain the paper, and it is sent to many of the poor as a gratuity. Many of our patrons, too, have to economize to pay their subscription. Then all have more or less expense to keep up stated meetings in their several localities. Then there are everywhere home cases of want and misfortune. And so—fortified as our opinion is by some experience—it seems to us that it is not the right way to proceed to carelessly and unguardedly lay every claim for help, by way of appeal, before our subscribers. Some kind, loving hearts may think we err, and to such we would say, that we feel often deeply sad over this matter lest we should err and offend God. Then God, too, knows all our trials, perplexities, and motives, better than any human being can know them. May he guide us aright, and forgive if we err.

Selections.

THE BIBLE A LIVELY BOOK.

About the time when Voltaire destroyed the Bible, and Tom Paine blotted it out entirely, the various religious societies of the world had put in circulation between four and six million copies of the Bible. About that time, Voltaire, the witty French infidel, predicted that another generation would see Christianity blotted out of the world. About that time Tom Paine tumbled into a drunkard's grave, prophesying that the Bible would go out of existence. Considering that the French Revolution had nearly destroyed the Bible when it had reached a circulation of about six millions, in eighty years more we find that this book, which had been proved to be a fiction, had sprung with strange life, such as never was seen in connection with any other book, from four millions in 1800 to one hundred and sixty-five millions in 1880. In 1800 there were four millions, translated into thirty different languages; and although the Bible was destroyed by Tom Paine and Voltaire and the French Revolution, not the less in 1880 there were one hundred and sixty-five millions translated into two hundred and six languages and dialects over the whole world. Now, I do not say this is a supernatural fact. I do not bring that in just here to prove anything. I am merely stating the facts. There have been more editions of that alleged bundle of frauds and superstitions and wickedness and religious fanaticism — there have been more editions of that one book printed and scattered throughout the land, every edition containing many thousand volumes, than there have been single volumes of any other book that ever was printed in this world. You must settle the question of that—you that say the Bible is a lie.

Now, dear friends, these are the facts. I have not talked about the private press; I have not talked of the millions of copies that have been printed by private commercial enterprise. We are only talking about the one hundred and sixty five millions of Bibles and Testaments that have been distributed by organized Bible societies. We have left out the entire millions that belong to private enterprise.

Now, what of it? Some men may say, "All these Christian fools and fanatics have conspired together to put it on its legs and make it run round the world." Well, my friends, all the infidels haven't gotten out of the way to help it on. No; this wonderful book has run and been glorified, not without opposition; but it has leaped over the walls of opposition, leaped over the hosts of the enemy, and gone on its way in spite of their opposition organized against it.

Let us see. In the early ages the pagan nations tried to destroy it. All the power of the iron Empire of Rome was brought to bear to blot it out. But they could not destroy it. In later days, all the bigotry of the Church of Rome was endeavoring to blot it out, even its professed friends burning it by thousands of copies; but still it held on its way. All the great and brilliant intellects on the side of infidelity have written against it to refute its arguments. Ancient and modern science has tried to prove it to be false and untrue. But it has taken a little step, and looked at the great mountains of science which the geologists would raise up; it has scanned the heavens of scientific astronomers, and has with one bound leaped over them and gone pressing forward on its work of love and charity. Why, this is a most wonderful fact, that, in spite of all the opposition, and no other book has met the opposition that the Bible has found—you get any other book, and you say it is false, and that is the end of it—it has this astonishing life and strength about it; it moves right on its way.

I heard of an old Dutchman up in Connecticut who built a stone wall around his farm and he made it five feet thick and four feet high. It was after one of those tornadoes down in Connecticut. Somebody said: "Neighbor, why are you building a wall thicker than it is high?" "Vell," he says, "about von of dese storms plow it ofer, and it will be higher as it vas peforo!" Well, the Bible is a pretty high book, but it is a good deal broader than it is high. Once in a while you hear an advertisement; somebody is going to knock the Bible over. They make a good speech. They tell about all the mistakes that Moses made; all the sins that David had been guilty of. They say: "We are going to knock it over," and all of a sudden there is a great clapt but it is higher than it was before they knocked it over. It is like a cube of granite — every time you knock it over it is as high as it was before. The knock has only pushed it on further.

It is like the Ark in the Flood. The more the great deep risen up to swallow it, the more it is floated above the waters. It is like the three children in the fiery furnace. They tied them with withes and put them into the fire. All the fire did was to burn the withes off their hands, and they walked through it with One like the Son of Man in their midst. Every time, the Bible has come back with its pages glorious with the flame that has only burnt off the bands of ignorance and superstition.

I saw a cathedral, against which many houses had been built. Inside was a stable. It was said: "You can never restore that cathedral. If you clean out the filth and rubbish, and take away the houses from it, you will just destroy the cathedral." They pulled away the houses; they scrubbed the walls; pulled off everything that had accumulated about it, and there was the beautiful Gothic structure, standing out with all its exquisite tracery in stone, and all its marvellous perfection of beauty. And so with the superstitions, the bigotries, the false interpretations, the houses of sectarians and fanatics that have been built upon the Bible. Some think if you pull down these superstitions you will pull down the Bible. They have pulled them down, and the Bible has stood out more beautiful than before. It is like a rock in the sea. The sea has gone over it and they cry, "The great rock is buried at last." But torn, and divided, and exhausted, the waves have gone back to their level, and the rock has gleamed out there in the sunlight, only washed of all the human building that has been upon it. The Bible is there still.

Dear friends, I close with this simple fact in connection with it. Less than two years ago, the world was on the qui vive. They said, "The scholars have gotten after the Book now, and the minute they begin to bring honest scholarship to bear they will find out that a good deal of that New Testament will have to go to the wall,"—for the revisers of that book were watched by everybody. Well, it is an astonishing thing. There have been a good many editions of Shakespeare, but I never saw any excitement over them. There have been a good many editions and translations of Homer and Virgil, but I never saw men in Wall street get so excited that they would leave Wall street to obtain one. But when the Revised Testament was issued, the world never saw such a sight. The streets were blocked with trucks loaded with copies of the work. Five hundred dollars was offered for an advance copy. The whole Testament was telegraphed from New York to Chicago and set up in the Chicago Times' office in a single night; and read, or at least examined, by the 200,000 people in that city on the following day.

I do not say here now that it is a divine book. I am only telling you some facts about the book. All I have to say concerning it is that, for a dead book, it is very lively, considering how many times it has been killed; by Tom Paine, by Voltaire, by Colonel Ingersoll, by the wise scientific men, by all its enemies, the gamblers, the thieves and the liars, and all other atheists and infidels. I do not mean that every infidel is a gambler and a thief; but I mean to say that all gamblers, and thieves, and whoremongers, and all bad men of society, are the men who are opposed to religion. I do not see why this intense hatred of it should be, if it is only a lie; but, considering it has been killed and destroyed so many times, with its 165,000,000 copies making its way over the world, with a score and more steam-presses in New York going day and night; more than that in England; the very room where Voltaire wrote his prophecy against the Bible stacked full of Bibles to-day, or was a few years ago the depository of a Bible society, considering it is a fraud and fiction, it is a wonderfully live book.

I do not say, this afternoon, how it got into this world; but somehow or other the Bible got into this world, and somehow or other it seems to have come to stay. And I prophesy, not by inspiration, but by a fair induction from facts, that it will stay after God has turned the wicked into hell, and all the nations that forget him. It will stay after the present generation of infidels, cultured and coarse, have gone down into godless, graceless, hopeless graves, as it has stayed and gone on after the generations of infidels that have opposed it in the ages of the past have tumbled into drunkards' graves which they have confessed have been dark and hopeless.—Rev. G. F. Pentecost, in "The Infidel Announced."

TRAINING FOR DOMINION.

If there be no resurrection, and no future state of being for men, — men, we say, not "ghosts,"—Christianity is a delusion and faith is vain. In all generations the best people in the world have been the greatest sufferers; the most loyal to God have had the hardest lot on earth. Exceptional cases few and far between do but confirm the accuracy of this general statement. Let any intelligent man read — we do not say ecclesiastical history, for that awful field is too wide, but—the eleventh chapter in the epistle to the Hebrews, and ask himself calmly, seriously, "What does all this mean?" Here is a constellation of the devout, the holy, God-fearing, the children of faith, and their experience is given in a series of graphic touches terribly [illegible] privation, suffering and agony [illegible] in the light of resurrection, and a future world of honor, dignity, and unfading splendor, the moral grandeur of this picture gallery of heaven's heroes is wonderfully imposing; but seen in the light of hard fact only, with the assumption that there is to be no return of the Lord Jesus, and consequently no rising from the dead of those who fell asleep trusting in him, what can you make of it? Only this, the same that a clear thinker made of it eighteen centuries ago: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable," most to be pitied, as we have risked all upon the hope of resurrection when he who is "our life" shall return.

In the chapter referred to we have this appalling summary of the sufferings of those renowned worthies: "they were tortured; had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; ....they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

And there is a companion picture to this of the Hebrew confessors, representing the first witnesses of Christ. Let us glance at that too: "For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men. We are fools,—weak, despised. Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place, and labor working with our own hands, being reviled, we bless; being persecuted we suffer it; being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day." "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep, in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

As there is a righteous ruler of the universe, it cannot be that a world in which men suffer for righteousness' sake has as yet realized the purpose for which it was created. Nor is it possible for men who think logically from the attributes of a personal God to rest in the conclusion of philosophical skepticism that the doctrine of a future state is simply a sentimental dream; useful, perhaps, in its way, to the common people, but not to be admitted for a moment by the magnates of philosophy. Nor, after prolonged thought on the various aspects of the subject, can we see that the idea of equity — and surely that is a divine idea—is met by the theological assurance that the souls of the righteous are now enjoying perfect happiness in heaven. This doctrine, even if it were Scriptural, which assuredly it is not, would necessitate some most puzzling questions; such, for example, as—What is meant by falling asleep in Christ? What great object is to be attained by the promised resurrection of the righteous? How are the meek to inherit the earth and to be recompensed thereby? In what way are the saints to judge the earth? What is the meaning of "appointing one over five, and another over ten cities? Is there any intelligence at all in the words, "We shall reign on the earth?" Is "the kingdom under the whole heaven to be given to the saints of the Most High," a mere figure of speech without any corresponding reality to justify it or make it intelligible? Why did not Paul get the crown of righteousness from the righteous Judge when he died, instead of saying it was laid up for him until the appearing and the kingdom of his Lord?

Such questions could be multiplied to any extent, and correct answers to them would be simply impossible either on the theory of philosophical [illegible] or on that of [illegible] God has dealt with his [illegible] when they die, as the former assumes, nor are they rewarded then in a disembodied condition, as the latter has so long taught. The skeptic, who will not believe what is written, and the Christian who believes more than is revealed, are alike at fault, although in totally opposite directions; but the man who is neither unbelieving nor credulous, will find clear revelation for the faith that when the Lord comes those that sleep in him shall be raised incorruptible, while the living saints shall be changed, and both shall be installed in such spheres of permanent dignity and authority as they were fitted for by the discipline of earth. Then it will be found emphatically true, that the "sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rainbow.

Youths' Column.

Remember Thy Mother.

Lead thy mother tenderly
Down life's steep decline:
Once her arm was thy support.
Now she leans on thine.
See, upon her loving face,
Those deep lines of care;
Think: it was her toil for thee
Left that record there.

Ne'er forget her tireless watch,
Kept by day and night;
Taking from her step the grace,
From her eye the light.
Cherish well her faithful heart,
Which through weary years
Echoed with its sympathy
All thy smiles and tears.

Thank God for thy mother's love,
Guard the precious boon!
For the bitter parting hour
Cometh all too soon.
When thy grateful tenderness
Loses power to save,
Earth will hold no dearer spot
Than thy mother's grave.

Gossip Rebuked.

The Advocate and Guardian gives an incident that may prove a suggestion to all of us:

One day the conversation at dinner in a family well known to the writer, turned upon a lady who was so unfortunate as to have incurred the dislike of certain members of the household because of some little peculiarities. After several had expressed their views in no gentle terms, the married sister added: "I can't endure her, and I believe I will not return her call if she comes here again."

Her husband, who had hitherto remained silent, replied: "She will not trouble you again, my dear, as she died an hour ago."

"You do not mean it? Surely you are only tossing us for our uncharitableness?"

"She is really dead. I learned it on my way to dinner."

Overwhelmed with shame the little group realized for the first time the solemnity of such a sinful conversation. Let us take warning, and speak of those about us as we will wish we had done when

"Death sweeps their faults with heavy hand,
As sweeps the sea the trampled sand."

Respect for Parents.

If children could realize but a small portion of the anxiety their parents feel on their account, they would pay far better respect to parental wishes. A good child, and one in whom confidence can be placed, is one who does not allow himself to disobey his parents, nor do anything when his parents are absent that he has reason to believe they would disapprove were they present. The good advice of parents is often so engraved on the heart of a child, that after years of care and toil do not efface it; and in the hour of temptation the thought of a parent has been the salvation of the child, though the parent may be sleeping in the grave, and the ocean may roll between that sacred spot and the tempted child. A small token of parental affection, being about the person, especially the parent's likeness, would often prove a talisman for good. A Polish prince was accustomed to carry the picture of his father always in his bosom, and on any particular occasion he would look upon it and say, "Let me do nothing unbecoming so excellent a father." Such respect for a father or a mother is one of the best traits in the character of a son or daughter. Honor thy father and thy mother, that it may be well with thee, is the first commandment with promise, says the Sacred Book, and happy is the child who acts accordingly.

The Storm and its Lesson.

An awful thunder-storm was raging one evening. One flash of lightning followed another so quickly, that the bedroom in which two little girls were lying was brilliantly lighted up every few seconds, and the roar of the thunder, harmless if they had but known it, had a terrible sound in the ears of the children. They held their heads beneath the bedclothes trembling and afraid, or peeped out for a moment, [illegible] below the welcome covering.

It was still early in the evening, and oddly the children were in bed. Passing backwards and forwards on the landing outside their door, went a young housemaid who was arranging the other rooms for the night. As she moved briskly from place to place, she lifted up her sweet young voice and sang a favorite hymn.

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home!

Under the shadow of thy throne,
Thy saints have dwelt secure;
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defence is sure.

"Jane, Jane," cried a little voice from the bedroom, "are you not afraid? How can you go on singing when it lightens so and the thunder makes such a noise?"

"Afraid, Miss Annie? Oh, no," said the girl. "How can I be afraid, when I know that God is here? He takes care of me, and nothing can hurt me without his will. Besides, he made the lightning and thunder and rain, and they all do a great deal of good too, each in its way."

"Do they?" said the child, venturing her head outside the clothes, and taking courage. "But the lightning kills people sometimes," she added with a shudder.

"Yes, dear," said Jane, "but it is only as God wills. It cannot do anything but just what he sends it to do. Don't be afraid; just try to think that you must be safe in God's keeping. He will take care of both you and me."

Then Jane kissed the young faces, and bade them notice how already the lightning did not come so frequently or the voice of the thunder sound so loudly. Her words left them comforted, and, with the sweet thought in their minds, "God will take care of us;" whilst the young housemaid, resumed alike her work and her song:

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting thou art God,
To endless years the same.

Under the shadow of thy throne,
Thy saints have dwelt secure;
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defence is sure.

"Jane, Jane," cried a little voice from the bedroom, "are you not afraid? How can you go on singing when it lightens so and the thunder makes such a noise?"

"Afraid, Miss Annie? Oh, no," said the girl. "How can I be afraid, when I know that God is here? He takes care of me;

ONLY WAIT.

When the spirit, worn and weary,
'Neath its daily load of care,
Finds the pathway long and dreary,
And the burden hard to bear;
Tired with hoping, faint with fearing,
Sighs to reach the golden gate,
Then in accents soft and cheering,
Patience whispers "only wait."

For a brighter day is dawning,
Joy awaits us in the morning—
In the beauty of the morning—
"Only wait."

Oh, and hearts, whose soundless sorrow
Dares not let a moment fall,
Only wait and meet the morrow—
God's great love is over all.
Only wait, oh, wounded spirit,
By the cross of life weighed down;
Thou shalt surely earth inherit—
Bear the cross and win the crown:

For a brighter day is dawning,
Joy awaits us in the morning—
In the beauty of the morning—
"Only wait."

THE KINGDOM PARABLES.—No. 3.

It has been published that the terms "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God" are not synonymous, and that they, instead of meaning the same thing, refer to two distinct constitutions, and, necessarily, sophistry is employed to sustain this transparent falsity.

Some time ago a public speaker, who held this error, tried to maintain it before a critical audience, candidly inviting questions. At the conclusion of his lecture, on two consecutive evenings, he labored strenuously at the complications with which his position embarrassed him when Scripture quotations, judiciously joined with queries, were presented for his reply. On the third night he wisely retracted his former sentiments.

A few quotations will show how ample is the evidence that the "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God" are identical. Casual readers have observed Matthew's customary use of the former phrase, while other evangelists, to a freer extent, use the latter—even under the same circumstances.

Matthew writes, "The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard"; Luke writes: "The kingdom of God is like a grain of mustard." Matt., "Theirs (poor in spirit) is the kingdom of heaven." Luke, "Yours is the kingdom of God." Matt., "It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." Luke, "Hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." Matt., "Many shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven." Luke, "Ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom of God," etc.

How foreign to the genius of Scripture also is the notion that the ecclesia is the kingdom; but how precious the fact that it is the heavenly government which God will establish over the whole earth, when crowned by our Savior, and united with the patriarchs and prophets, we become that vitalized seed through which "all nations of the earth shall be blessed." Better than gold is the true promise "I appoint unto you a kingdom even as my Father appointed unto me.... and ye shall sit on thrones."

THE ROYALTY—A PRICELESS PEARL.

Our Savior said, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a merchant seeking goodly pearls: and having found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had, and bought it." Matt. xiii. 45.

It is evident that the parallel here exists between the royalty of the kingdom as an object of attainment, and a valuable pearl as an object of wealth. Our instruction is, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and further, let "no one take thy crown." The reigning position in the kingdom is that which is set forth as the "prize of our high calling." "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him."

In this age men yield homage to various superstitions which promise them hope and life after death. There are the many gospels which are not glad tidings of the kingdom, and their priests cannot point their followers to the certain attainment of a crown. They know nothing of the kingdom—yet do their adherents esteem the elements of their religion valuable as pearls, and contribute largely to carry on the traffic in them.

When, however, one is earnestly in search of God's truth to the extent that he is willing to part with all the inferior pearls he has acquired, the enlightening of the Spirit will lead him to cast aside the traditions of men, yield obedience to the gospel, and thus become a joint inheritor with Christ. Such a one not only reads but heeds the words of Christ: "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" and forthwith becomes "buried with him through baptism into death."

He knows that faith without works is dead, and endeavors also to keep the works of Christ that he may secure the promise: "He that keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations and he shall rule them." The character of these nations in the kingdom over whom Christ will exercise jurisdiction, is portrayed in the following parable recorded in Matt. xiii. 24:

THE SUBJECTS—TARES WITH WHEAT.

"The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man that sowed good seed in his field." At night a trespasser sows tares. When the wheat sprang up then appeared the tares also. The servants, puzzled by the double crop, question the proprietor as to the cause, and he replies, "An enemy hath done this." They propose to weed out the tares, but he disapproves, lest they by doing so, root up the wheat also, and says: "Let both grow together until the harvest" when he will first collect and burn the tares, and then gather the wheat into his barn.

CHRIST'S EXPLANATION.

"He answered and said, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man: and the field is the world (cosmos); and the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom; and the tares are the sons of the evil one; and the enemy that sowed them is the devil; and the harvest is the consummation of the age; and the reapers are angels. As therefore the tares are gathered up and burned with fire, so shall it be in the consummation of the age. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. xiii. 37.

IT PORTRAYS THE MILLENNIAL AGE.

It must be distinctly understood that, as stated in every kingdom parable, the kingdom of heaven is paralleled by the illustration, and therefore the age and world involved cannot possibly be the present ones, but that of the millennium. Remember also Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this (kosmos) world," this is decisive and final.

This period in the future age to which this parable is applied, is that which immediately succeeds the coronation of Christ and his saints, as set forth in the parable of the marriage of the king's son. The latter parable pictured the destruction of the rebellions, and the installation of the royalty as kings over the nations, and this parable portrays the moral phase of the subjects under their rule during the remainder of the age, and the final disposition made of them.

After the first or turbulent era of the millennium is past, and the world is at peace, we reach the condition analogous to the seed planting of our parable. The field is the kosmos or world of the kingdom; they who have now become obedient subjects are the children of the kingdom, and good seed. But after the coronation, when a little time has elapsed for germination of the seed, or a manifestation of the character of the subjects, it is discovered that there are tares among the wheat, that some of the subjects develop evil dispositions. The latter are termed children of the wicked one.

All will readily admit that as to the persons being children of the devil by birth—that is out of the latitude of the parable; they are termed such because of their imbibing the evil characteristics of Satan, and are his sons in the sense the Pharisees were when Christ said, "Ye are of your father the devil."

SATAN IMPRISONED.

But it may be objected that since Satan is imprisoned in the abyss during the millennium, he cannot be credited with disseminating evil during the age to come.

This objection is easily removed when the truth is apprehended. The subjects of the kingdom are the various nations which have lived from ancient times till Christ comes, and they are ushered into the life of the age by the second resurrection. They all possess the human tendency to sin which resulted from Satan's first contact with Eve, and this proclivity has been intensified directly and indirectly by Satan's rule over mankind for six thousand years. The resurrection does not change the nature of any man, and when, in the peaceful era of the millennium, the subjects choose to disregard wholesome instruction, and nurture the satanic influence which their presence in that age was calculated to uproot, they become confirmed in disobedience, and because of character are "sons of the evil one," and "the enemy that sowed them is the devil," though during the age he is bound in chains.

Christ does not deem it best to immediately remove from his kingdom all of this vicious element, but permits a mingling of the good and bad till the consummation of the age. To a probationary scheme the possibility of temptation, and features of trial, seem to be essential. This is the case now, and we observe that it is the case in the kingdom of heaven. To gather out the tares might "root up also the wheat with them."

Though judgment is executed all through the age on evil persons of the vilest type, yet the mass of the disobedient are permitted to remain with the good till the harvest. Rev. xx. reveals the closing scene of the age to come, and shows that its character is fully in accord with this parable.

THE HARVEST.

Possibly the very angel who binds Satan at the commencement of the millennium is the one who releases him at the close of the age as a sickle in this harvest; and it may be him that directs the devil's movements as he "shall come forth to deceive the nations which are in the four corners of the earth (descendents of) Gog and Magog, to gather them together to the war; the number of whom is as the sands of the sea."

Thus a multitude of evil persons appear to survive to the harvest of the age. They were indeed worthy of destruction before the end, and many similar to them had, during the whole age, been dying at the expiration of their allotted century of probation. Though the parable says that the "Son of man shall send forth his angels and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that do iniquity," this in no wise militates against the prophetic fact that the release of Satan is made instrumental for this purpose.

Tares are for burning. The wicked are cast into fire. Now turn to the prophecy for the precise elements. The multitude "went up over the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, (evidently at the time of the feast of tabernacles) and fire came down out of heaven, and devoured them." The parable is true to facts.

THE KINGDOM OF THEIR FATHER.

"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Doubtless the righteous here alluded to are the just persons of the millennial nations who obey and honor Christ, and receive perpetual life. The phrase "The kingdom of their Father" seems to be used as in contrast to the preceding kingdom of Christ of the 41st verse, and, at least, were this distinction intended, nothing could be more appropriate.

Christ and the saints will reign for ever, but there is change in certain features of their jurisdiction, and of their future glory the "half has never been told." At the end of the millennium Christ shall indeed "Deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet." 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25. So after the harvest of the millennium is noticed in the parable we deem it a point worthy of special remark that the prophetic change of jurisdiction should be so distinctly outlined, as manifest in the transition from "his (Christ's) kingdom," to the "kingdom of the Father." DR. E. G. WELCH.

Will There Be Probation in the Age to Come?

Before entering on the discussion of this question, I wish to say, that I have no wish or desire to enter the field of controversy for the sake of controversy, nevertheless it is imperative on the believers in the glorious gospel of the Son of God, to earnestly contend for the faith once (for all) delivered to the saints. I am well aware that the bare mention of the phrase "age to come," did formerly create rather disagreeable sensations—grated rather harshly on sensitive ears, and a few, comparatively, now feel rather nervous at the mention of it, but I am happy to say, that a change in the minds of many of our good friends, has resulted from a closer study of the word relative to it.

It is not contended that the word "probation" occurs in the King James Version, nevertheless, words equivalent occur, to fully sanction the expression. If the doctrine is not expressed, it is unmistakably implied in the testimony of all the holy prophets since the world (age) began. Time and space forbid an elaborate citation of even a tithe of the prophetic testimony on this point. The testimony of Zech. xiv. would be conclusive, if there was no other, to the facts of the restitution; the scene being laid at and subsequent to Christ's second advent—his descent to the Mount of Olives, the same place from where he ascended over eighteen centuries ago. The people are required to go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. This is the antitypical feast, a restitution which forms part and parcel of the gospel plan; and why are plagues threatened to those who go not up to keep this feast from one Sabbath and from one new moon to another at Jerusalem—the Capital City? Is not the very idea of plagues and curses being inflicted on those who fail to comply with Jehovah's commands, inapplicable to those who have already developed characters as the kings and priests of the age?

Again, does not the very idea of king and priest carry with it the ruling or reigning of one class over another? of subduing, if refractory, or disobedient? And with regard to the priests, does it not suggest the idea of mediatorship between two parties not yet reconciled? The saints who are to be associated with Christ in his reign are those who will be born from the dead or changed to immortality, and fully qualified for the work assigned them. But can one saint reign over another saint? or can one saint mediate for another? Echo answers.

The offices of both these classes are for development—of bringing the people to a knowledge of G[illegible]n of salvation, or the gospel [illegible]. The present age or dispensation is to take out a people for his (Jehovah) name. Acts xv. The gospel will have a far wider scope in the future age than it has yet attained, after Satan has been bound.

The prophet Isaiah very beautifully and graphically describes the condition of things which will transpire in this age. This age is the kingdom age, the restitution age—the first in the series of "the ages to come," of which Paul speaks, the day of the Lord, Peter's thousand-year day, in that day, so frequently spoken of by all the prophets, Isaiah tells not only of children who die; but of sinners being accursed who die at an hundred years old.

When the apostle speaks of what God will perform in the ages to come, (plural), than when we speak of the age to come, does it not mean the first in the series when the apostle uttered it? and is it not a future event from our present standpoint of observation? and do we not use scriptural ideas by the term probation as well as though we had used the word trial, which means the same thing? That we are fully warranted from Bible testimony in regard to the subjects of the kingdom being put on probation or trial from the fact that they are mortal as before stated, that death reigns over both saint and sinner during the millennium, or thousand years' reign, which necessitates a second resurrection and also a second death. The same sinner does not die twice, no more than the same saint has a second resurrection. "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." But the first and second death and the corresponding resurrection, occur because two different ages or dispensations occur, and under different rulers also.

"The world (age, cosmos, or dispensation) to come hath he (Jehovah) not put in subjection to angels." Satan being bound during this millennium, mankind will be elevated to a much higher plane, "long life" will be restored, the kingdom of Israel, and all things of which all the holy prophets since the world began, have prophesied. The subjects are as necessary adjuncts of a kingdom, as a king, territory, or any thing which constitutes a kingdom, and as a matter of necessity must be mortal men and women.

During this glorious reign of Christ with his associated saints, the curse will be so far removed that the prophet Isaiah has said that they, the people, shall not labor in vain nor bring forth for trouble, as now, for they are the seed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. But this does not constitute them immortals, for proof of which the reader is referred to what Christ said to the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection: Angel and spirit, they who are counted worthy to obtain that world (age) and the resurrection from among the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels, and can die no more. Marriage is of course recognized by Jehovah during this happy period.

The resurrected saints and the living who will be changed, will constitute but a small part of mankind who will pass under the administration of this fifth monarchy; millions of inhabitants will be left who have not so much as heard of a Savior, and who will have the hardihood to say that they will never have an opportunity of developing characters, which shall secure to themselves eternal life in the kingdom of God? Of course, those who have had the gospel preached to them, and been endowed with sufficient ability to understand its import, and then reject it, nothing will then await them but a "fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversary."

Light Wanted on 1 Cor. xv. 22.

Editor Restitution:

Seeing the call on our brother, Prof. Gardner, by brother W. Brockman of Toronto, Ont., for a better translation out of the original Greek of the passage above quoted, in respect to the use or omission of the definite article ho before "Christ," so as to enable us to determine the exact significance of the whole passage—whether it should read in English "in Christ," or "in the Christ," I am led in the same connection, though with a different object, to interrogate our learned and scholarly Brother Gardner, if he will kindly permit the liberty, to resolve for our instruction, another question arising from the same 22d verse, that is, whether there are any objections flowing from the text and the usage and analogies of the Greek language, to hinder us from rendering the verse in English thus:

"As all that are in Adam die, so all that are in Christ (or in the Christ) shall be made alive."

To me it seems clear that the natural sense of the words, and the order and collocation in which they stand, give this rendering the preference over any other readings I have seen, and yet though I have before me as I write, besides the original Greek and Latin text of Leusden, with our common version, and Campbell's, the Diaglott, and the new revision, not one of these translations of the text give us this plain and simple rendering.

By carefully inspecting the words of the Greek text, it is plainly seen that the solution as to the best rendering is not dependent on the meaning of the words used, but simply on the best and proper method of locating them. In the version I suggest, every word represents its Greek original—it is only the placing of the words of the text which makes the difference in the sense. Yet that difference is very important.

The common version: "As in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive," conveys the meaning that the re-living of our race will be as universal as their death; whilst the reading proposed limits the resurrection that Paul is writing of to those who are in Christ, viz: "As all that are in Adam die, so all that are in Christ shall be made alive."

The king's translators evidently supposed and believed that Paul was teaching the resurrection of all who had ever died, and they made their translation to comport with their creed. But a more careful and correct study of the context shows plainly that Paul's doctrine applied only to the saints—to those who were in Christ and had no reference to a resurrection of all—to an universal resurrection, and hence affirms nothing of any other class than those in Christ. This is proved to demonstration by reading in connection the 23d verse, in which he defines his meaning of the word "all" and restricts it to "those that are Christ's"—having no reference to a general and universal resurrection. The new reading proposed is quite in harmony with the apostle's premises and argument, whilst the other is contradictory to both.

The old reading gives undue support to universalism, and is made to teach the resurrection of all mankind which is plainly contradictory to other Scriptures, such as Dan. xii. 2; Isa. xxxvi. 19, 14; xliii. 17; John v. 29.

Will Brother Gardner give us any better light on the passage which his superior knowledge of the original tongue may enable him to afford.

Respectfully submitted.

ALLAN B. MACRUDER.

Answer to Inquiry in Regard to Use of Article in 1 Cor. xv. 22.

There is certainly a distinction intended by the writer between the two classes of passages quoted, viz: those with and those without the article. In this passage referred to above, the two Adams are spoken of in their relation as "federal heads" of the race. I think there can be no question as to the teaching of Scripture on the subject of "all being made alive" in the Christ as a Federal head. The true question is, for what purpose are they made alive? and this must be determined from the general teaching of the Scriptures.

The to telos in verse 24, means the completion, and seems to my mind to teach an end of probation. The fact that "all are made alive in the Christ" cannot be assumed to teach that all are saved and made immortal in "the Christ." What becomes of "the wrath of the Lamb," and "the fiery destruction" of the irrevocably wicked? The Christ is to be a Judge as well as a King, and is to requite as well as to reward, and the requital is spoken of as a second death and the reward is spoken of as a second life. If there be a resurrection beyond the second death, I have failed to discover it in the revealed word.

The question is whether we belong to the household of faith, God's household. The Christ is faithful as a Son over this household. He is "the King's Son." What took place, in the parable, at the nuptials of the king's son? What takes place, in the parable, when the king's son, as a judge, separates the sheep from the goats? I think as you do that it is one thing to be "in Christ," and another to be "in the Christ" merely.

OBAD. GARDNER.

A Few Thoughts and Scripture Texts for Honest Adventists to Solve.

"All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable," so says Paul to Timothy. See 2 Tim. iii. 16. Peter says, "Be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets." 2 Peter iii. 2. Why? Peter, "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Pet. i. 21. What do you say Paul? "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, etc." Rom. xv. 4. What says the Savior? "Search the Scriptures." Why? "for they testify of me." John v. 39. If the above statements of the Savior, Paul and Peter are true, ought not we to take heed to them? Peter in Acts iii. 19–21, speaks of "Jesus Christ being received (retained) in the heavens until the times of restitution, which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Now what say the prophets on the subject? Isaiah says, "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, the leopard lie down with the kid, the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them." Isa. xi. 1–9. Also "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock, etc." Isa. lxv. 25.

Question, How do they get through the fire? How are the nations to go up to Jerusalem to worship? If they are destroyed at the advent? Please read Isa. ii 1–5; Micah iv. 1–3; Zech. viii. 20–22. James, in Acts xv. 13–17, says after the Gentiles have been visited, Christ is to return and build again the tabernacle of David that is fallen, etc. Please turn and read his reference to Amos ix. 11–15; also Psa. lxxii. The prophet Isa. lx. 10; lxi. 4, tells the means used by him in building, "The sons of strangers shall build thy walls, etc.," "the alien be thy vine-dressers and plowmen." Also Isa. lxv. 17–25. Then the watchmen will see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. See Isa. lii. 8; Psa. cii. 21, 22.

Question, What does the Lord want with watchmen in that day, if all are destroyed but the immortal saints? What does he want with kings and priests? Who are they to reign over? Who to administer to in the priestly office? The redeemed sing, "We shall reign on the earth." See Rev. vi. 10, and "they are to be kings and priests." John says, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Rev. xx. 6; also, "They shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years;" also, "The overcomers are to have power over the nations." Rev. ii. 26. Thus far the nations have had power over the saints to put to death, etc., but when the rightful heir comes, Rev. iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, etc." Again Paul says, 1 Cor. v. ii., "The saints shall judge the world." Dan. vii. 14 says, "All people, nations and languages shall serve him," "that nation that will not serve shall perish." See Isa. ix. 12. Please read the whole chapter, also Ezek. xxxvi. and Psa. cii. 6, where the nations are to come and see his glory, and shall say this land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden etc.

Question. Does Immortality want healing? The leaves of the Tree of Life are for the healing of the nations, so say the Rev. xxii. 1. The River of Life that flows out from under the throne is to have a healing power, etc.; well might the angel say, "These sayings are faithful and true." Oh that the King would reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment, amen, is the prayer of your unworthy brother. The above humbly submitted.

JOHN T. OGDLEY.

To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

MY REFUGE.

[These lines were written by Ellen L. Gooch, a Brahmin of the very highest caste, the adopted daughter of Rev. W. T. Stone, of Bradford, England.—Editor's Heralding.]

In the secret of his presence how my soul delights to hide.
Oh how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low,
Yet when Satan comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.

When my soul is faint and thirsty 'neath the shadow of his wing
There is cool and pleasant shelter, and a fresh and crystal spring;
And my Savior rests beside me, as we hold communion sweet;
If I tried, I could not utter what he says when thus we meet.

Only this I know: I tell him all my doubts and griefs and fears;
Oh how patiently he listens, and my drooping soul he cheers.
Do you think he never reproves me? What a faithful friend he would be,
If he never told me of the faults which he must surely see.

Do you think that I could love him half so well, I ought,
If he did not tell me plainly of each sinful word and thought?
No! he is so very faithful, and that makes me trust him more;
For I know that he does love me, though he wounds me very sore.

Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath his shadow: this shall then be your reward:
And whene'er you leave the secret of the happy meeting-place,
You must bear the image of your Master in your face.

You will surely love the blessed secret of your joy,
If you let dark clouds destroy you, and your inward peace destroy,
You may always be abiding, if you will rest at Jesus' side;
In the secret of his presence you may every moment hide.

THE JEWISH REFUGEES FROM RUSSIA, IN JAFFA AND JERUSALEM.

Address at a Monthly Missionary Meeting in Jerusalem.

DELEGATES FROM RUSSIA AT THE CHRISTIAN MISSION HOUSE IN JERUSALEM.

Some six months ago I was called upon by various Russian Jews, who represented themselves as delegates of certain societies formed in several parts of South Russia for the "colonisation of Palestine by Jews." These delegates who came by twos and threes, numbered, to my knowledge, about twenty, and though they were not all of the same calibre, some being of superior education and character, they all conveyed to me the same impression,—viz. that what I would call the nationality craze which has played so great a role in our days, contributing to the unification of Italy and Germany, as well as to the dismemberment of the Turkish Empire,—had taken hold of a certain portion of the Russian Jews.

As a missionary to the Jews is not used to much civility from the people to whom he wishes to give the Gospel, I naturally tried to make out what was the reason of these people coming to see me and communicating to me their plans; and what I ascertained was simply this: that these delegates, standing upon purely national ground, feel drawn towards every one who has a heart for their national aspirations, whatever his religious profession may be. They rightly suppose that we, as Christian Jews, who believe in the restoration of Israel, would be glad to give them our sympathy; whilst, on the other hand, they were quite sure that their co-religionists here would be opposed to them, because they are not strict Talmudical Jews.

JEWS FROM THE WESTERN COUNTRIES.

There are here, in Jerusalem, a handful of Jews, who having formerly lived in Western countries, are rather glad to find any co-religionists who do not think that strict adherence to Talmudical laws, as understood in Jerusalem, is of the essence of Judaism, and to them these delegates found their way, as well as to us. Now, these Jews with Western proclivities are our bitterest enemies here, though they are outwardly on friendly terms with us, and from the fact that the delegates consulted them as well as us, I concluded that their approach to us was owing, not so much to their love to us, as to their hatred of the strict Talmudical Jews.

But whatever their motives in entering into a certain relationship towards us, two things were made clear thereby—viz. (1), that the mission to the Jews was considered by the Russian Jews to be an agency favorable to the interests of the Jews; and (2), that if people with the views enunciated by these delegates came here in large numbers, a new sphere of labor would be opened to us, from which we might expect the happiest results.

THE MISSIONARY'S DIFFICULTY.

The great enemy in our path here, is the deep-rooted idea that Judaism is not merely a religious profession, but a national institution, which you cannot throw off without becoming a traitor to your nationality. But here were men, who openly declared that though the Jewish nationality was dear to them they looked upon modern Judaism as a religious system which might be adopted or rejected by any one without his ceasing to be a Jew; in fact, one of them openly told me, "I do not see why a Jew should not be allowed to acknowledge Jesus of Nazareth as his Messiah without ceasing to be a Jew in the proper national sense of the word."

If any one draws from this the conclusion that these men were likely to investigate the claims of the Gospel, he is mistaken; their tolerant views were dictated more by their desire to be treated with toleration by the orthodox Jews than by their wish to be fair to us Hebrew Christians. Yet the tribute of confidence they paid to us is not to be undervalued, and has not remained without its good effect upon our work.

THE FOUNDING OF JEWISH COLONIES.

While these delegates were in consulting their country to ascertain where Jewish colonies might be founded, they kept as much as possible at a distance from Jerusalem, as they felt the incongruity of their position in coming here as the avowed leaders of a Jewish national movement, and yet being out of sympathy with the representatives of the Jewish nation living in the capital of the country; and till the spring we hear very little of them, except by an occasional paragraph in the Jewish papers. The Jewish press in general, with very few, though respectable exceptions, looked coldly on this movement towards Palestine; some papers ignoring it altogether, and others carrying on a fierce war against it.
